PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-SIXTH CONGRESS
THIRD SESSION.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 18, 1921.

(Legislative day of Monday, February 14, 1921.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gooding	McLean	Spencer
Calder	Harris	McNary	Sutherland
Capper	Harrison	Moses	Swanson
Chamberlain	Heflin	New	Thomas
Colt	Henderson	Norris	Townsend
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Trammell
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Phelan	Underwood
Dial	Kellogg	Phipps	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Kendrick	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Edge	Kenyon	Reed	Warren
Elkins	Knox	Sheppard	Williams
Fernald	La Follette	Simmons	Willis
France	Lenroot	Smith, Ga.	Wolcott
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Smith, Md.
Gay	McCumber	Smith, S. C.
Gerry	McKellar	Smoot

Mr. BALL. I wish to announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] are absent on official business, engaged as members of a subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

REFERENCE OF EXECUTIVE NOMINATIONS.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, as in open executive session, to have referred to the Committee on Military Affairs a number of nominations for promotions in the Army from the grade of first lieutenant to that of colonel, inclusive, which have been sent to the Senate in the last few days and which are now pending before the Senate and are in the office of the Secretary of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. I understand that does not go beyond the rank of colonel.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I said between the grades of first lieutenant and colonel.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not hear the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request is that, as in open executive session, all nominations for promotions in the Army from the grade of first lieutenant up to and including the grade of colonel be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thought that had already been done.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Another batch of nominations has come in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations for the office of Commissioner and Assistant Commissioner of Patents be referred, as in open executive session, to the Committee on Patents.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I object.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I make a similar request to that of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with reference to certain nominations in the Steamboat-Inspection Service and several in the Coast and Geodetic Survey and in the Coast Guard. These are nominations made in the line of promotion and seniority. I ask, as in open executive session, that these nominations be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MOSES. May I inquire the grade of the officers referred to?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Those of the grade of first lieutenant, commander, and lieutenant commander. They are in line of promotion in the ordinary way, and not for any definite term, or anything of that kind.

Mr. SMOOT. Does it include the director of the service?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; no director, or anything of that kind; they are simply routine promotions.

Mr. SMOOT. I prefer to look over the list, and therefore I object at this time.

THE PATENT OFFICE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, yesterday I asked unanimous consent to fix a time for voting on the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11984) to increase the force and salaries in the Patent Office, and for other purposes. Objection was then made because of the absence from the Senate of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]. I have seen the Senator from Connecticut, and he has no objection to the request I now make for unanimous consent that at 4 o'clock on next Monday the Senate shall vote on the conference report on House bill 11984.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have just asked that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] be sent for. He is desirous of being here. I ask the Senator from Nebraska to withhold his request until the Senator from Connecticut comes in.

Mr. NORRIS. I have talked with the Senator from Connecticut, and he himself has told me that he has no objection to the order, and I think he told me that in the presence of the Senator from Utah, who said he would be willing to take whatever action the Senator from Connecticut, who is against the conference report, was willing to take.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Connecticut said he had no objection to taking up the report.

Mr. NORRIS. I told the Senator from Connecticut explicitly what I had done, that I tried to get up the report yesterday, and that the Senator from Connecticut was not here, and I did not want to take it up in his absence. I told him what I would ask, and he told me explicitly that he had no objection to fixing a time for voting on the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. There may be other objections to the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course.

Mr. SMOOT. If the amendments were the only questions that may arise, that would be one thing, but other questions affecting the bill may arise. Therefore, I could not agree to a specific hour for a vote. I will say to the Senator that I will vote with him to take up the conference report on Monday.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. May I ask what conference report is referred to?

Mr. NORRIS. It is the conference report on House bill 11984.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I mean from what committee?

Mr. NORRIS. From the Committee on Patents. Permit me to say now on this question that the bill has been under consideration by the Patent Committees of the House and the Senate for about a year. It has finally reached the stage where it is here in the shape of a conference report. I realize that there is objection to it. Some who are opposing it are doing so bitterly. I have no criticism to make of that. All I want is that the conference report shall be voted on by the Senate, and if it is voted down and the Senate does not want it, that is the end of it, of course, with me. But I have had it intimated to me, from a source that I consider absolutely reliable, that there is going to be an attempt in the Senate to prevent a vote on the proposition.

I have been physically unable to be here for some time. I probably will not be able to be here much of the time during the remainder of this session. I can not very well be here all the time trying to get the conference report up. I did not want to take it up, even if I could do so, to displace an appropriation bill. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] kindly consented that he would agree to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business, the Post Office appropriation bill, if I could assure him that there would be no extended debate. Unfortunately I can not give that assurance, particularly when I have already been informed that there is going to be an attempt to prevent a vote on the conference report, and we are, I think, honestly and honorably entitled to a vote on the proposition.

There ought to be a vote on it. That is all I am asking. If next Monday is too soon, let us fix a later date. I am not particular when the vote is taken. I do not care if it is put off until a week from Monday, but it will be a great personal accommodation to me if I knew when we were going to have a vote on it, so that I could be here at that time even though I can not be continuously in attendance on the Senate. That is the reason why I have made this request.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I am not in the habit of objecting to requests for unanimous-consent agreements, because I wish to have the business of the Senate go forward; but at the present moment, when some of the great appropriation bills are not yet in conference and some of them have not yet passed the Senate, I do not think that I can agree to a request for unanimous consent to fix any early date, or, indeed, any date, to vote on questions which are concededly to be debated at length until we shall have gotten one or two of the very large and important appropriation bills out of the way.

I am not objecting to the Senator's conference report being adopted, if it shall not lead to debate. The only point I wish to impress is the necessity of getting into conference some of the important appropriation bills. For instance, the deficiency bill provides for paying people whose wages will be unpaid in many instances unless appropriation for that purpose is made, and the money proposed to be appropriated is to be expended between now and the 1st of July. It is very important that such bills should be passed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I realize the truth of all that the Senator from Wyoming has stated, and I have not had any desire to interfere with the passage of appropriation bills. There is not a Senator here who is more anxious to dispose of those bills than I am. Although I was in favor of the tariff bill which was pending here, when the motion was made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] to displace it and take up an appropriation bill I voted for his motion, because I thought under all the circumstances we were wasting time in the consideration of a bill which I did not believe could possibly become a law.

I do not care to discuss that matter now; but when Senators say that we shall be permitted to bring this conference report up if it will not lead to any debate, no matter how honest their intentions may be, if we are going to pursue that course it only gives aid to those who desire never to have a vote on the conference report, because I can not give the assurance that there will not be any debate. I am willing to vote now without any debate; I am willing that the matter should be debated as much as Senators wish to debate it; but I do not want, after we have gotten this far with it, to be faced with the proposition of having any limit fixed, so that it will be very easy to filibuster and prevent any action whatever.

Now, I submit to Senators that that would not be fair. I have an idea, in view of the strong opposition to this proposed legislation, that it may be defeated. I am not asking that the conference report be agreed to; I am not suggesting anything of that kind. If it should be defeated on a vote, that would be all right; I should not complain about it. I do contend, however, that under the circumstances there ought to be some agreement that we shall have a vote on the conference report before this session closes on the 4th of March. That is all I care for.

I do not care what time is set. If Senators will fix it for the 3d of March or any other time it will not displace any other matter, except during the time that it requires to call the roll and vote on it. Senators may discuss it when they wish to—they can do that now—and I may be forced into the position, if there can not be any time fixed for a vote, that I shall have to take the matter up myself and at least devote some time to debating it. I do not even care to do that.

As I have said, I am willing to submit the question without argument; but I can not let the matter rest, it seems to me, with fairness to myself and everybody else who has been behind the proposed legislation up to this time, and allow it to occupy such a position that it can be easily killed by a filibuster; indeed, if we wait until all the appropriation bills shall have been disposed of, the time remaining will be so short that it will hardly be proper to designate obstructive tactics as a filibuster.

I appeal to Senators that there be action on this important measure. Let any one of them fix the time for a vote. I do not care who fixes it or what time is fixed. Of course, outside of other considerations, it will be a personal favor to me, for reasons which I have stated, although I am not urging that.

If the request to fix next Monday as the time for a vote is objected to, I ask unanimous consent that the date be fixed one week from to-day, next Friday, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and that the Senate shall vote then on the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am going to object to unanimous consent to vote upon the conference report, but I will say to the Senator any time after to-morrow that he desires to move to take up the conference report I will be perfectly willing to vote to take it up. I am not, however, going to give unanimous consent at this time to vote upon it at a certain time.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, Mr. President, that means that my fears were well founded, and the probabilities are, with all the appropriation bills that are coming up, the proposed legislation will be killed indirectly when, perhaps, Senators might be able to kill it directly. I should like to have a yea-and-nay vote upon it, and have the question decided.

NOMINATION OF FRED K. NIELSEN.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, as in open executive session, the nomination of Mr. Fred K. Nielsen as Solicitor for the State Department be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I am authorized by the Committee on the Judiciary, after considering it, and by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations to make this request. I do not think there will be any objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

REFUND OF INCOME TAXES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to Senate resolution 425, January 18, 1921, a report regarding the number of claims for refund, abatement, or credit against assessment of income, surtax, excess or war profits taxes for the years 1917, 1918, and 1919, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by W. H. Overhue, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 16100) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILLIS presented memorials of Windhorst Court of the Catholic Order of Foresters, of Cincinnati; St. Clara's Auxiliary No. 98, Knights of St. John, of Cincinnati; St. Cecelia Ladies' Auxiliary No. 58, Knights of St. John, of Hamilton; and St. Joseph Court No. 1221, Catholic Order of Foresters, of Portsmouth, all in the State of Ohio, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Cleveland, Ohio, protesting against the loan to Great Britain of any money raised through the sale of Liberty bonds, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Ohio, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CAPPER presented resolutions of Pangburn Local No. 3234, of the F. E. and C. U. of A., of Pangburn, Ark., and Eureka Grange No. 311, of La Plata County, Colo., favoring legislation to prohibit gambling in grain products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution of the Merchant Tailors' Association, of Kansas City, Mo., favoring the truth-in-fabric bill, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Andale, Kans., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. COLT presented a resolution of L'Union St. Jean-Baptiste D'Amerique, of Woonsocket, R. I., protesting against the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. FALL. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two telegrams from the Legislature of Porto Rico.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SAN JUAN, February 17, 1921—6.40 a. m.

Senator FALL,
Chairman, Washington, D. C.:

House of representatives in session assembled requests you to express to the Senate the sentiments of adherence and respect of the representatives of the people of Porto Rico for the Representatives of the national sovereignty looking for that justice worthy of both in the granting of our immediate aspirations in the extension and a development of our present system of government under democratic principles.

CAYETANO COLL CUCHI, Speaker.

SAN JUAN, February 18, 1921—6.45 a. m.

Senator FALL,
Washington, D. C.:

Senate of Porto Rico in session assembled unanimously requests you to express to the Senate the sentiments of adherence and respect of the senators of Porto Rico to the United States Senators looking for that justice worthy of both in the granting of our immediate aspirations in the extension and development of our present system of government under democratic principles.

BARCELO, President.

Mr. HITCHCOCK presented a memorial of the Legislature of Nebraska, which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures, as follows:

Resolution favoring the nationalizing of the coal industry in the United States.

Whereas the annual coal production in the United States amounts to over 600,000,000 tons; and

Whereas coal production in the United States is carried on at many mines widely varying in their depth of seam, conditions of mining and cost of production; and

Whereas it has been found that fixing a price in the market, either by the Government or by market conditions, does injustice in many cases, since if the price is fixed high enough for the mines having the highest cost of production, the profit to the mines having a lower cost of production is too great, and if the price is fixed by the cost of production at the mines where production is cheapest, the market price is too low for the other mines, resulting either in shutting down the mine or reducing the price of labor thereat; and

Whereas the war situation made it clear that justice to the coal miner and to the coal consumer could be obtained only by nationalizing the mines, thereby enabling the Government to direct the production of coal at the places where it could be produced at the greatest advantage to society as a whole and marketed under uniform conditions both as to price and to coal miners' wages; and

Whereas in Europe, in Australia, in South Africa, in Canada, as well as in the United States, the ablest economists as well as the best business minds are now favoring the nationalizing of the coal industry in each of these countries: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives, That we favor the enactment of Federal laws which will provide in a just and equitable way for nationalizing the coal industry in the United States; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded by the chief clerk to each of our Senators and Congressmen at Washington, with a request that they favor the introduction and passage of such an act by Congress.

Introduced by Representatives George C. Snow, of Chadron, and Harry A. Foster, of Omaha.

Mr. McKELLAR presented a resolution of the Legislature of Tennessee, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

House joint resolution by O. C. Norton.

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Sixty-second General Assembly of the State of Tennessee (the Senate concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States be requested to support a measure now pending in the Congress known as the France-Langley bill, which, if enacted, would bring about erection of hospitals for sick and wounded soldiers of the World War; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to each Senator and Congressman from Tennessee.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of Tennessee, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, as follows:

Whereas the world-wide extension of popular government has placed upon the masses of the people responsibilities never borne by their forefathers, and has made more necessary than before universal education as a means of social self-defense; and

Whereas the development of communication and transportation has brought all sections of the country into such intimate relations that ignorance and its attending vice in any part of the country is a menace to the welfare of every other section so that the responsibility for public instruction can no longer be regarded as merely of local, county, or State concern; and

Whereas the children of the States are to become the citizens of the United States, as well as of their respective States, and as such are to have national obligations and responsibilities; and

Whereas the State of Tennessee has recognized by statute the obligation of its wealthier sections to aid in the education of the children of less-favored districts, on the principle that revenue for school purposes should be collected where the income is expended where the children are; and

Whereas a bill is now pending in the Congress of the United States providing for the acceptance of national responsibility for and aid to public education through the appropriation of $100,000,000 to the several States: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Sixty-second General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, That we hereby memorialize Congress immediately to enact into law the Smith-Towner bill, known as education bill, S. 1017; be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of these resolutions be sent to the Clerks of the two Houses of the Congress of the United States, and that the Senators and Representatives from Tennessee be informed of this action.

Mr. McKELLAR presented a resolution of the Legislature of Tennessee, which was referred to the Committee on Standards, Weights, and Measures, as follows:

Resolution on metric system.

Whereas there is in the United States a deplorable lack of uniformity in weights and measures, and the units used are unscientific, cumbersome, and unrelated, constituting an actual hindrance to education, industry, world trade, and the activities of daily life; and

Whereas the metric system of weights and measures is a decimal system, simple, logical, and easy to use, so that its adoption will result in an incalculable saving in time and energy; and

Whereas the metric system has been adopted by the vast majority of enlightened nations, and its adoption by the United States is calculated to promote friendly relations and commerce with all the world; and

Whereas the State of Tennessee, by reason of its great commercial and industrial activities, is vitally interested both as a State and in behalf of its citizens in the speedy adoption of world-wide uniform standards of weights and measures: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That we respectfully urge that the units of the metric system be adopted by the Congress of the United States as the legal standards of weights and measures after a transition period of 10 years, as proposed in bills now before Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That copies hereof be forwarded to the President of the United States of America and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of Tennessee in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR presented three resolutions of the Legislature of Tennessee, which were referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

STATE OF TENNESSEE,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Nashville, February 16, 1921.

House joint resolution by J. Q. McDonald.

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Sixty-second General Assembly of the State of Tennessee (the Senate concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States be requested to support a measure now pending in the Congress known as the Fordney bill, which, if enacted, would bring about adjusted compensation for all honorable discharged men and women who served in the late war; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to each Senator and Congressman from Tennessee.

House joint resolution by Mr. Smith of Blount.

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Tennessee (the Senate concurring), That we memorialize the Congress of the United States, through our Senators and Congressmen, to pass the bill now pending before Congress known as the Wason bill, which decentralizes the War Risk Insurance Department of the United States; be it further

Resolved, That the clerk of this house be instructed to transmit a copy of this resolution to each of the Senators and Congressmen of the State of Tennessee.

House joint resolution.

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Tennessee (the Senate concurring), That we request the Congress of the United States through our Senators and Congressmen to pass the bill now pending before Congress, known as the Rogers bill, which combines the Health Department, the War Risk Insurance Department, and the Vocational Training Department; be it further

Resolved, That the clerk of this house be instructed to transmit a copy of this resolution to each of the Senators and Congressmen of the State of Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS presented a resolution of the Atlanta City Federation of Women's Clubs, of Atlanta, Ga., favoring legislation extending the Federal aid road-building program, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution of the Atlanta City Federation of Women's Clubs, of Atlanta, Ga., favoring an amendment to House bill 12078 providing for the promotion of vocational education, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution of the Atlanta City Federation of Women's Clubs, of Atlanta, Ga., favoring legislation strengthening the Volstead Act by placing all prohibition enforcement agents under civil-service rules, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution of the Atlanta City Federation of Women's Clubs, of Atlanta, Ga., favoring legislation providing for the protection of maternity and infancy, which was ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 5017) granting an increase of pension to James Mellor, jr. (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 5019) to amend sections 2, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 32 of the Federal farm loan act, approved July 17, 1916, as amended, and to amend sections 2, 3, 4, 9, 11, 12, 13, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24 of the United States warehouse act, approved August 11, 1916, as amended; to the Committee on Banking and Currency; and

A bill (S. 5020) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. JONES of New Mexico:

A bill (S. 5021) for the relief of Fred V. Plomteaux; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TRAMMELL:

A bill (S. 5022) providing for and establishing scholarships in each of the States as a memorial to the American soldiers, sailors, and marines who gave their lives for their country and as an expression of appreciation to the brave and loyal men who served in the military and naval forces of the United States in the late war; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. BALL:

A bill (S. 5023) to provide for the closing of Cedar Road between Quincy Street and Shepherd Street NW., in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 5024) granting an increase of pension to Izora B. McGill; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAMS:

A bill (S. 5025) declaring Lake George, Yazoo County, Miss., to be a nonnavigable stream; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 261) repealing section 10 of the river and harbor act approved March 2, 1919; to the Committee on Commerce.

TRAINING PAY AND ALLOWANCES.

Mr. KENYON introduced a bill (S. 5018) to amend the vocational rehabilitation act to exempt from taxation amounts heretofore or hereafter received thereunder as training pay and allowances, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the bill introduced by me to amend the vocational training act should be referred, I believe, to the Committee on Finance. The situation which prompts the introduction of the bill is rather an odd one. The training pay given to soldiers is subject to the income tax, while under the war risk insurance act the compensation paid by that bureau is expressly exempted from the income tax. It is rather an emergency matter, and I think if the Finance Committee can take it up and dispose of it at this session it should probably go there and be considered as an amendment to the vocational training act. I should like, however, to ask the Senator from North Dakota if there is any prospect of a measure of that kind being considered by the Finance Committee at the present session?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think so. If it is a matter that needs to be considered, I think the committee will consider it.

Mr. KENYON. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. KNOX submitted an amendment providing that the accounting officers of the Treasury shall readjudicate in accordance with certain court decisions all claims of Army officers for pay within such court decisions, without regard to former disallowances by Treasury officials, and report the same to Congress as audited claims, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted an amendment providing that the Secretary of War be authorized to ascertain the requirements of the Department of Agriculture for its own use and that of the several States in road work and maintenance of roads and other executive departments as pertaining to motor vehicles, and after supplying the needs of the several departments as authorized and directed under existing legislation to sell as soon as possible any remaining motor trucks and automobiles that are surplus and not needed by the War Department, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted an amendment providing that Lake George, in Yazoo County, Miss., be declared a nonnavigable stream, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also submitted an amendment providing that any stream or body of water lying wholly within one State which is not a navigable stream or body of water under the laws of the State in which it lies is declared a nonnavigable waterway of the United States within the meaning of the law until work of improvement has been undertaken by the United States, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation to carry into effect the provisions of the act approved March 2, 1897, entitled "An act to prevent the importation of impure and unwholesome tea," as amended, etc., from $30,000 to $38,000, intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

AMENDMENT OF IMMIGRATION BILL.

Mr. HARRISON submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 14461, the immigration bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ANNUAL MEETING OF STATE AGRICULTURAL COMMISSIONERS (S. DOC. NO. 409).

Mr. MOSES. From the Committee on Printing I report a resolution providing for the printing of a certain manuscript, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 455), as follows:

Resolved, That the manuscript entitled "Report of fourth annual meeting of the National Association of State Commissioners of Agriculture" be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what is the report referred to in the resolution?

Mr. MOSES. It is the report of the annual convention of the State Commissioners of Agriculture held at the Department of Agriculture and participated in by the commissioners of agriculture from all the States in the Union.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if the document has already been printed by the Agricultural Department?

Mr. MOSES. No; it has never been printed at all.

Mr. SMOOT. If it has been printed as a departmental document, I shall object to the request.

Mr. MOSES. I repeat that it has never been printed at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

REPORT OF THE DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION (S. DOC. NO. 408).

Mr. MOSES. From the Committee on Printing I report a resolution, S. Res. 456. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the Daughters of the American Revolution for the year ended March 1, 1920, be printed as a Senate document.

GREAT FALLS POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in connection with the reports from the Committee on Printing and while the matter is before the Senate, I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether the Committee on Printing has taken up the report of Maj. Tyler and the report of the Water Power Commission?

Mr. MOSES. I will say to the Senator that the estimate of the cost for printing the latter document has not yet come from the Public Printer. The estimate for the original Tyler report has been received, but the estimate for the supplemental report later ordered by the Senate has not come.

Mr. NORRIS. What is the estimate, I will ask the Senator, for the printing of the original Tyler report?

Mr. MOSES. I do not at the moment recall, but my general impression is that the estimate is something like $800.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the committee act on it?

Mr. MOSES. The committee is to clear its calendar on the 24th day of the present month.

THE COTTON AND WHEAT SITUATION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed, on yesterday, Senate resolution 443.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator state the purport of the resolution? I do not recognize it by number.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is Senate resolution 443, authorizing the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to make certain investigations. I desire the motion I have made to be noted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Washington will be entered.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 16100) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15441) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, in a few moments the Senate will vote upon a motion to suspend the rules to make in order as an amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill the bill which passed the House of Representatives by a very large vote. That bill carries an appropriation of $100,000,000 to carry on the work of road building in the various States of the Union.

I did not think, Mr. President, when I heard of that action on the part of the House that there would be any trouble at this end of the Capitol. Members of the House talked to me about that measure, and I expressed the opinion that it would pass the Senate by an overwhelming vote. I did not believe that it would be the policy of the other side of this Chamber to attempt to practice economy at the expense and to the injury of road construction in the United States. I did not believe that any Senator in this Chamber would take the position that this work should be halted for a moment, and I was surprised and astounded to hear the arguments made yesterday in behalf of such a program as that.

Mr. President, Great Britain has buried in Westminster Abbey a soldier representing the rank and file of the British Army. This great and kindly act was done in honor of the unknown dead. Great Britain buried in this resting place of her kings one of the plain people, a private in the ranks of her army, one who came up from the common walks of life to fight and die for his country. She has shown her appreciation of the valor and heroism displayed by this boy and his comrades among the unknown dead. France has performed a like service in honor of her heroic dead who sleep in unknown graves. In both instances honor and gratitude are shown to the rank and file of the people. I submit to the Senators on the other side of this Chamber that while they are holding up legislation looking to the benefit of our soldiers who won the war, while they are blocking legislation looking to proper compensation for our boys, they might at least permit this road building to go on, because in this way they can express their appreciation of and gratitude to the great rank and file of our people who gave their sons to fight and die for our country.

As I said on yesterday, there is perhaps no other Government program that will serve so many people, that will reach into so many localities, that will really bless and benefit so many American citizens, as will this program of road building. Every State in the Union is interested. It is true some of the States had nearly completed their road construction under the bonding system; but I submit that the Senators from those States ought not to stand in the way of cooperative road construction in other States. Some States are richer than others, and they have gone on more rapidly with this work. They ought now to encourage road building in the other sections of our great country.

I regret to see that some Senators are willing to stop this road construction entirely. I regret to see that those in charge of legislation in this body, responsible to the people for legislation, are ready now to sidetrack this great work of road construction by the United States Government. There is no better or greater work that can be done by the Government. We must have transportation facilities by railroad, transportation facilities by waterway, and transportation facilities by highway, by public roads; and this Government will not have discharged its full duty to the people of the country until it has a splendid system of public highways reaching all through the States.

There are many ways in which Senators who want to cut down expenses can do it and lay off this project of road building.

Mr. President, $100,000,000 is not so much. We have 105,000,000 people. So it costs less than $1 per capita to carry on this great work of building up the public highways of the country.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do.

Mr. MOSES. The difficulty with the Senator's argument is that it is not paid per capita. The money is taken from the rich and thrifty States of the North to be spent in the Senator's State down South.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator has admitted just about what I had thought he felt. The States that have already built up their highways and that have by reason of a high discriminating tariff system been pillaging and plundering the people of the South, for that is how, to a large extent, they got their money——

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, my State paid $30,000,000 for southern cotton last year in one mill alone.

Mr. HEFLIN. Thirty million dollars; and what did they get for the finished product? I will tell the Senator that on one occasion a few years ago Great Britain paid $400,000,000 to America for her cotton supply and sold the remainder of the finished product, after supplying all of her possessions, for $610,000,000, $210,000,000 more than she paid us for the raw material; and the cotton mills of the Senator's State have for many years fattened upon low-priced cotton that they have purchased in the Southern States. But I want to serve notice on the Senator now that you will pay more for cotton this fall than you have paid in a long, long time because the low price to which you have driven cotton is going to cause us to produce the smallest crop that you have ever seen come to the markets of this country in a long time.

Mr. MOSES. I am glad to be put upon notice by the Senator; and I want to congratulate him, while this colloquy is going on, upon the facility with which he can manage to connect the veterans of the World War with an appropriation.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from New Hampshire raised the sectional issue. He charged that I wanted to tax his people to build up the roads down in my section of the country. I want to say to the Senator that I would be willing to tax the whole people to build up any part of this great country. I have no feeling of sectional prejudice. There is none of it in my head or heart. I think the time has come when it should disappear forever in the United States. There certainly was none of it on the firing line in France, when our boys fought together side by side and many thousands died together on the fields of France. But the Senator says that I and others who stand here and champion the cause of the masses of the country want to tax his people to build up the highways down in my State. Mr. President, Alabama is part and parcel of this great Government. She contributes to its support generously and to the best of her ability. Of course, she has not had the opportunity—and I doubt whether she would have employed it if she had—to pillage and plunder so many people as some of the Senator's constituents have.

Mr. MOSES. In view of Muscle Shoals, Mr. President, that comes with good grace from the Senator.

Mr. HEFLIN. That was a meritorious measure and a project in the interest of all the people. I do not mean to cast any reflection upon the people of the Senator's State, but I am sure that the profiteers in his State who have made colossal fortunes during the war would like to sit back and continue to clip their coupons and pass undisturbed by the taxgatherers of the Republic.

Mr. MOSES. But we can not pass undisturbed by the taxgatherers so long as schemes of this kind go on. On the contrary, my State is one with almost a stationary population, with slight increase in its inventory for taxation purposes year by year; yet we have taxed ourselves, bonded ourselves, and built our own roads, and there is no reason why the State of Alabama should not do the same thing.

Mr. HEFLIN. The State of Alabama is doing the same thing. The cities are contributing, the counties are contributing, many of them have issued bonds for this purpose, and they are now working on this cooperative plan in building roads in my State. The States have contributed over $600,000,000, while the Government has contributed less than a third of that amount.

But, Mr. President, it is not any strange thing to hear the Senator and other members of his party raise their voices in protest against legislation that helps the mass of the people. I do not recall a single measure of benefit to the great mass of our people that had its origin in the brain of a Republican Senator; but if you get up a bill here for the special interests you will not have any trouble about getting it through. They will smile blandly and just slip and slide the project through, and no one over there ever makes an argument against it; nobody says it is unconstitutional; nobody ever says it is paternalism; and they get it through. But let somebody get up here with a bill that benefits the mass of the people or the people back in the rural districts of the country, or that will be of service to the school boy and girl who travel the public roads and they rise up and say, "Mr. President, we just must begin to practice economy right now." So they are ready to practice economy then, to the detriment and injury of the great mass of the American people.

Mr. President, from the juggling that I have seen going on around here this morning and late yesterday afternoon I do not know what is going to be the judgment of the Senators on the other side on this proposition. I should not be surprised if they intend to put to sleep this road-building program that the people of the country approve so unanimously.

Forty-three States await your judgment to-day. Forty-three States are watching the appropriation bills that go through Congress, and when they see you attempt to chloroform and put to sleep the road-building part of the legislative program they are justly indignant. You may postpone it, you may set it aside for a time, but there is nothing that is so vital to the people—that touches, I repeat, so many of them—as this very project, and you can not stop it. I repeat, the people are going to be indignant. They ought to be indignant. They ought to resent and, I believe will, repudiate your action if you sidetrack this great constructive measure.

A hundred million dollars? Why, you spend that in various ways where it will benefit less than a quarter of a million of people.

Mr. President, I am going to vote for this measure. I am going to vote to suspend the rules to put this amendment upon the bill, because it is the only way that we can carry on this road-building program. This work ought to go on. This Government is working out its ideals of constructive development in bridges that span the rivers, in opening up streams to navigation, in belting the country with steel rails for transportation purposes; and I repeat that the system will not be complete until we build public highways in the counties, in the States, and through the Nation. Let the Senate go upon record as favoring the working out of our ideals in such practical and beneficial fashion, and then a great and grateful people will rise up and call you blessed.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I regret very much that an attempt has been made to inject sectionalism into the consideration of this vital matter. I had hoped we might get away from sectional lines in our legislation. I do not see why the New England States, which happily began road construction work a little ahead of the other States of the Union, should now, because they have already built a good part of their roads, attempt to throttle the Congress in its efforts to assist road construction in other parts of the country.

Mr. President, despite the aid rendered by the Government, the Southern and Western States will, themselves, have to build the greater part of their roads. What New England has already done in this respect the other States will have to do hereafter for it is not expected the Government will match more than a small part of the total expenditure of the States for this purpose. The sum of $100,000,000 a year, distributed among the 48 States of this Union, is a mere bagatelle to their total annual expenditure for roads. It is not much over $2,000,000 a year to each State. That would not go far. It would not build many miles of good roads in the South; it would not build many miles of good roads in the West. The South and the West ultimately will have to do most of their road construction with their own resources. This Federal appropriation would be only supplementary, and supplementary to a small degree. Its chief value would not be in the amount of money the Federal Government would contribute, but in the psychological effect of the larger unit coming to the assistance of the lesser and the weaker unit and helping in the work. The value of the impetus thus given would be in the future, as it has been in the past, very great.

My friend from the State of New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] has referred to the fact that his State has paid such a large amount of taxes to the Government while the Southern States are poor and do not pay in the same proportion. I want to say to the Senator that while the Southern States have been poor, and are yet relatively poor, the Southern States are rapidly growing in wealth, they are rapidly becoming large taxpayers. In the last fiscal year North Carolina paid in taxes into the Federal Treasury over $160,000,000.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. MOSES. I rejoice in the prosperity and progress of the Southern States, Mr. President. No Member of the Senate could have further from his thought than I the notion of raising a sectional issue with reference to this matter. But, Mr. President, I saw these road bills in their progress through the last Congress; I saw the attempt made to secure credit for the States which had already built their road systems to the extent to which they had expended their money. I tried to secure an amendment whereby the amount of Federal money spent by the military forces in building roads through the States should be taken out from the quota assigned to those States, but all to no avail.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I can not yield for a speech; I have only 10 minutes. I want to say to the Senator from New Hampshire, and I want to say to my other colleagues from New England, that North Carolina does not expect the Federal Government to build its roads. If this bill passes, the Federal Government will contribute to road construction in North Carolina not exceeding $4,000,000 in the coming year. Is not that true, I ask the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, will not the Senator be able to give me two or three minutes before the time for a vote arrives?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I will. I say, that if this amendment to the bill is adopted the Government will contribute to North Carolina road construction during the current year approximately only about $4,000,000.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. SIMMONS. I can not yield.

There are only 10 minutes left, and the Senator from Michigan has asked me to give him part of it. As I said, $4,000,000 is a mere bagatelle to the amount of money we are spending in North Carolina for road construction.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. SIMMONS. I can not yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I simply wanted to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will yield for a question.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I should like to ask what the Senator's State paid in income and internal revenue taxes to the Government?

Mr. SIMMONS. Something between thirty and forty million dollars. Income and profit taxes, and in all taxes, as I stated before, over $160,000,000, fiscal year 1920. Does that answer the Senator's question?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It does.

Mr. SIMMONS. Two counties, Mr. President, adjoining the county in which I live, only the past year voted about $4,000,000 to build roads within their boundaries, and probably there are near a score of counties in North Carolina in the past 18 months that have voted from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000 each for the construction of roads; and on yesterday, or the day before yesterday, the lower house of the legislature of my State passed a bill which, when it becomes a law, will bond North Carolina for $50,000,000 with which to build good roads. We shall very probably spend in North Carolina every year several times as much money as we would get from the Federal Government under the pending amendment. That money will be spent in building the character of roads New England has already built, county roads and local roads mostly of permanent construction, so far as any road is permanent.

The money we hope for from the Government will be used chiefly in connection with the construction of a coordinated State system—a connected system of inter and intra State roads. We want the psychological effect of the Government aid and cooperation in this great work. We know the Government is not going to assist in all our road-construction work, and we do not ask it to do it. We know that it is impossible with the appropriations that are being made or that will be made. We are not indulging upon any such hope.

I am speaking hurriedly and perhaps disconnectedly, because I want to yield a part of my time to the Senator from Michigan. The Senator from Michigan yesterday, in his discussion, animadverted against the system of building with Federal money short stretches of disconnected roads here and there over the States—local roads having no coordination or connection with any system of roads. I agree with the Senator. I doubt very much that such a course is a wise expenditure of Federal money. I do not believe it will receive that public approval which is needed to encourage a larger participation by the Government in this work.

But, Mr. President, I think the system we are about to adopt in North Carolina is such as to deserve Federal aid. Our purpose in North Carolina is to use the Federal contribution for the purpose of building main highways, with which the local roads built by the State and the counties are to be coordinated and connected into one grand, harmonious working road system in that State. It is said that under the amendment of the Senator from Virginia this money will have to be spent in the way it has heretofore been spent—by State selection of the roads upon which it is to be spent, however disconnected and lacking in coordination and relation the one to the other. I want to say to the Senator that I agree in the main with his theory; but if we shall suspend the rule to-day and permit a vote upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], the Senator from Michigan can offer an amendment so as to make it conform with his theory, if the Senate agrees with him; and, as I feel now, I shall be inclined to cooperate with the Senator in supporting such amendment, because I think that would be probably the wiser way in which to work out this, and would remove much of the opposition to further Government expenditures in this behalf and to larger contributions on the part of the Government in the future.

I trust that Senators from New England, from the North, and from every section of the country will vote to suspend the rule and let us consider this matter upon its merits, and although the Senate may not adopt the exact language and the method prescribed in the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, let us thrash this thing out here and now and adopt a wise, logical system of road construction providing for the aid of the Federal Government to be given to the State in systematic and coordinated building of good roads.

While I have other matters I wish to discuss, I recognize that the Senator in charge of this matter is entitled to some time, and I shall not consume the remaining five minutes before the hour fixed in the agreement for a vote on the motion to suspend the rules of the Senate so as to make the amendment of the Senator from Virginia in order.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I thank the Senator from North Carolina. There is not a great deal of difference, that I can see, between the Senator from North Carolina and myself as to what ought to be done with the Federal aid money. I am just as certain, however, as I am that I live that any proposition submitted at this time on the floor of the Senate to change the present Federal aid law, such as the Senator suggests, would be voted down by those Senators who insist that the present method should be maintained.

Furthermore, Mr. President, there has been no opportunity for the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, which has this matter in charge, to even consider it. I again want to repudiate the statement made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] and by others to the effect that the defeat of this amendment is going to check road building in the United States. There is no more question about the fact than there is that I am addressing you that the first duty of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads in the new Congress will be to take up the subject of Federal contributions to the project of road building.

The fact of the matter is, and it has not been denied, that a very large amount of money already invested by the Federal Government in road construction has been wasted. There is no question about that at all.

Mr. HEFLIN rose.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I can not yield; I have only two or three minutes.

Mr. HEFLIN. I question the statement that a large amount of it has been wasted.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I mean that anybody who understands the subject, anybody who has investigated the question of road building and road construction in the United States——

Mr. HEFLIN. If I understood the Senator correctly, I do not agree to his statement to the effect that a large amount of this money has been wasted.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the very men who ask for the continuation of the present appropriation under existing conditions, when they properly understand the subject, agree, just as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] agrees, that this money should be expended in a manner different from that in which it is being expended in many of the States of the Union.

This is not a sectional question with me at all. I simply want the Federal money expended for a Federal purpose, which will assist in the construction of roads and in the establishment of proper systems of roads. All I am asking is that, as this bill, which comes to us from the Committee on Roads of the House of Representatives, has never been considered by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads in the Senate, which has jurisdiction of the matter, we be given an opportunity to consider it, without embarrassment to legitimate road building in the United States; that it be put off for just a few days, until the committee which has been considering some phases of it can have time to complete its work on this great matter.

So, Mr. President, I am hoping at least that the Members of the Senate who want to see the expenditure of Federal money properly safeguarded will give us this opportunity.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I can not yield; I have but half a minute. Mr. President, I hope that none of the Senators on the other side have been persuaded to stay away from the Senate this morning for the purpose of reducing the honest vote of the Senate on this great subject. I wish we could have all of the Senators vote on this question, and thus determine if, after proper understanding, two-thirds of the Senate believe that at this time and under these conditions we should vote $100,000,000 when it can not be properly expended; if they want to do that, and take this out of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, who desire to consider it, and who will consider it without delay, then I shall make no further objection.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, reference has been made to the failure of some States to make appropriations so as to cooperate with the Government in the building of good roads. This is not true of my State, as most of our counties are voting large bond issues for this purpose. The Government appropriation for good roads has been wise, and I sincerely hope this appropriation may be continued. I shall give it my hearty support.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, the Secretary will, in accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement, call the roll upon the pending question, which is the motion of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] to suspend the rule.

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of no quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unanimous-consent agreement is that the vote shall be taken at 12 o'clock. The Secretary will call the roll on the motion of the Senator from Virginia.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I am unable to obtain a transfer. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. I am unable to get a transfer, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. SWANSON (when Mr. GLASS's name was called). My colleague [Mr. GLASS] is paired with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. If present and not paired, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. HENDERSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK], which I transfer to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. As I am unable to obtain a transfer of my pair, it will be necessary for me to withhold my vote.

Mr. POMERENE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. I am advised that if he were present he would vote as I propose to vote, and I therefore feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FERNALD. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. EDGE. I find that I can transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE], which I do, and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GLASS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. I am advised that I am released from that pair and at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Has the senior Senator from Maryland voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with that Senator, and for that reason I am compelled to withhold my vote.

Mr. KENDRICK. I made the statement a moment ago that I was unable to secure a transfer of my pair. I have since arranged for a transfer of my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY]. I am therefore at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. HARRISON. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] are detained on official business.

The roll call resulted—yeas 42, nays 33, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas are 42 and the nays 33. Two-thirds not having voted in favor of the motion of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], the Senate refuses to suspend the rule.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to offer as an amendment to the bill a part of the amendment which I offered on yesterday. The purpose of the amendment is to allow the service of substitute carriers, who served in the Army of the United States, in any branch of the military service, to be counted in the Postal Service for the purposes of longevity pay, rank, and so forth.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. Is this the same as the second part of the amendment which was offered by the Senator on yesterday?

Mr. LODGE. It is the same as the second part of the amendment which I offered yesterday. I offer it again because I think it is a great injustice not to allow those men who went into the military service to receive this credit. It was generally understood that they should receive the credit, and I think they ought to have it. I hope that the chairman of the committee will not make a point of order against the amendment in that form.

Mr. POMERENE. I agree entirely with what the Senator from Massachusetts has said.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be read.

That that portion of the act reclassifying salaries of postmasters and postal employees, approved June 5, 1920, which provides "that hereafter substitute clerks in first and second class post offices and substitute letter carriers in the City Delivery Service when appointed regular clerks or carriers shall have credit for actual time served on a basis of one year for each 306 days of 8 hours served as substitute, and appointed to the grade to which such clerk or carrier would have progressed had his original appointment as substitute been to grade 1" shall be amended by adding the following: Provided, That clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service and substitute clerks and substitute carriers who served in the military or naval services during the World War and have not reached the maximum grade of salary shall receive credit for all time served in the military or naval services on the basis of one day's credit of 8 hours in the Postal Service for each day served in the military or naval service and be promoted to the grade to which such clerk or carrier or substitute clerk or substitute carrier would have progressed had his original appointment as substitute been to grade 1.

The provisions herein shall be effective as of date of passage of the original act of June 5, 1920.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment. I believe it was the intention of Congress that this should be done. I remember that two or three years ago I proposed such an amendment and it was adopted, but it has been construed to apply only to the year covered by the appropriation bill, which was not intended by me. I recognize the facts as stated by the Senator from Massachusetts and I am in hearty sympathy with carrying out all the pledges that were made by the Government to the soldiers in the war. Therefore, I have no objection to the amendment and trust that we shall be able to keep it in the bill in conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I gave notice on yesterday of a motion to suspend the rule so that I could offer an amendment to the pending bill. I now make that motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be read so that the Senate may know what it is to vote on.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] gave notice on the legislative day of February 14, calendar day of February 17, that under Rule XL to suspend paragraph 3 of Rule XVI, in order that he might propose and have considered the following amendment to House bill 15441, the Post Office appropriation bill:

At the end of the bill add another section to read as follows:

"SEC. —. That section 6 of an act entitled 'An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes, approved July 11, 1916, as amended,' is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 6. That any State desiring to avail itself of the benefits of this act shall, by its State highway department, submit to the Secretary of Agriculture project statements setting forth proposed construction of any rural post road or roads therein. If the Secretary of Agriculture approves a project, the State highway department shall furnish to him such surveys, plans, specifications, and estimates therefor as he may require: Provided, however, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall approve only such projects as may be substantial in character and the expenditure of funds hereby authorized shall be applied only to such improvements. Items included for engineering, inspection, and unforeseen contingencies shall not exceed 10 per cent of the total estimated cost of the work. If the Secretary of Agriculture approve the plans, specifications, and estimates, he shall notify the State highway department and immediately certify the fact to the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon set aside the share of the United States payable under this act on account of such project, which shall not exceed 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof, except that in any State in which the percentage of total land area to which the title of the United States is unqualified, or exempt under the Constitution of laws of the United States from taxation by or under the authority of such State exceeds 10 per cent of the total area of the land in the State, the Secretary of Agriculture shall reduce the ratio of cooperation on the part of the State the percentage that the area of the said land to which the United States has unqualified title, together with the land area so exempt from taxation in the State, is to the total area of all lands in the State. No payment of any money apportioned under this act shall be made on any project until such statement of the project, and the plans, specifications, and estimates therefor shall have been submitted to and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture.

"'When the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that any project so approved by him has been constructed in compliance with said plans and specifications he shall cause to be paid to the proper authority of said State the amount set aside for said project: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, from time to time, make payments on said construction as the same progresses, but these payments, including previous payments, if any, shall not be more than the United States' pro rata part of the value of the labor and materials which have been actually put into said construction in conformity to said plans and specifications; nor shall any such payment be in excess of $10,000 per mile, exclusive of the cost of bridges of more than 20 feet clear span. The construction work and labor in each State shall be done in accordance with its laws, and under the direct supervision of the State highway department, subject to the inspection and approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, and in accordance with the rules and regulations made pursuant to this act.

"'The Secretary of Agriculture and the State highway department of each State may jointly determine at what times, and in what amounts, payments, as work progresses, shall be made under this act. Such payments shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury, on warrants drawn by the Secretary of Agriculture, to such official or officials, or depository, as may be designated by the State highway department and authorized under the laws of the State to receive public funds of the State or county.'"

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I will explain my proposed amendment. I have simply repeated section 6 of the good roads act and have added one paragraph thereto. It would be confusing to listen to the reading of the proposed amendment without this explanation, because it would be difficult to follow it. As the amendment is written it only changes section 6 of the existing good road act in one paragraph and practically in one sentence. It became necessary, of course, to repeat the whole of section 6 of the existing law, so that the amendment, if it shall be adopted, might be plain when read in connection with the present law. Now, I will show Senators just wherein section 6 will be changed by the amendment if it be adopted.

Mr. SIMMONS. All the remainder of the section, as I understand the Senator, will be the same as provided in the present law?

Mr. PITTMAN. All the remainder will be exactly the same as the present section 6. I merely copied the section so as to have it all appear. I will read a part of section 6 as it exists, leading up to my amendment. It reads as follows:

> The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon set aside the share of the United States payable under this act on account of such project, which shall not exceed 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof.

That is the language of section 6 as it exists in the present good-roads law. My amendment is intended to modify that sentence. That sentence of the present good roads act limits the amount of United States funds that may be used upon any project to 50 per cent of the estimated cost of the project. There are certain States in which that is not fair, and, therefore, I have added the following language to section 6, which I will read:

> Except that in any State in which the percentage of total land area to which the title of the United States is unqualified, or exempt under the Constitution or laws of the United States from taxation by or under the authority of such State exceeds 10 per cent of the total area of the land in the State, the Secretary of Agriculture shall reduce the ratio of cooperation on the part of the State the percentage that the area of the said land to which the United States has unqualified title, together with the land area so exempt from taxation in the State, is to the total area of all lands in the State.

That is the only change which it is proposed to make in the existing law.

The reason for it is this—and I will simply give an illustration which is common to the West: Under the good roads act the Legislature of the State of Nevada has laid out certain State highways. They consist of three great trans-State highways, which connect with the highways in Utah on the one side and California on the other side. The construction of those trans-State highways will be about all the State of Nevada can carry on. Those three highways constitute a link in the great transcontinental roads that are now being built throughout the West. For instance, one of them is the Lincoln Highway. The Lincoln Highway crosses the State of Nevada from one side to the other; it has never been kept up, and therefore the State of Nevada has adopted the Lincoln Highway as one of its State roads to be improved under the good-roads act. There is also the Overland Trail, which follows the Southern Pacific Railroad across the State from one side to the other, connecting in California and in Utah with similar roads. That road has been adopted by the State Legislature of the State of Nevada as one part of its State highway system. We have another road running diagonally through the State from its northeast corner to its southwest corner, connecting with the California road that leads to Los Angeles. These three roads are used by people traveling from the Atlantic to the Pacific in their automobiles; 90 per cent of the travel over these roads now is travel from outside States. Unless these links are kept in order, unless their condition is made equal to that of the other links in the great chains, the building of miles and miles of road in California and Utah and States east of Utah will be practically useless.

But, it may be asked, why the exception? This is the reason for it: Because the conditions in the State of Nevada constitute an exception as compared with the nonpublic-land States of the Union.

When the good-roads act was passed it was the intent, I believe, of Congress that the Government should put up half of the money and the States the other half of the money, but that was on the theory that all of the State property was subject to taxation in the State.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Can the Senator state what portion in area of the land in Nevada is held by the Federal Government and what its value is as compared with privately owned property?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will. Only 7 per cent of the total land area in the State of Nevada is subject to taxation by the State; over 86 per cent of the total land area in the State of Nevada is owned by the United States Government.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. Under those circumstances, under the Senator's amendment, what percentage of the money would the State of Nevada have to put up?

Mr. PITTMAN. The State of Nevada, it is estimated, would have to put up about 10 per cent.

Mr. KELLOGG. And the Federal Government 90 per cent?

Mr. PITTMAN. About 90 per cent. I have taken the State of Nevada as an example, because it is the extreme case; but the other Western States present similar conditions.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, before going to that subject, can the Senator answer the other part of my question, which was as to the relative value of the property owned by the Federal Government and that in private ownership? I speak, of course, only of real estate.

Mr. PITTMAN. There is no doubt that the land that is in private ownership is more valuable; but as the Government land is not subject to taxation there never has been, to my knowledge, any attempt to assess its value. For instance, there are lands in forest reserves in the State of Nevada. That land has value; these forests have value; but, as I say, it never has been assessed, because it is not subject to taxation. It may have been assessed by some Government authority of which I do not know.

What I have stated with regard to the land title in Nevada is true of practically every Western State in varying degrees. For instance, in the State of Wyoming—I will take that for example—about 60 per cent of the land of that State, according to the hearings that I have here, is in Government ownership.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. REED. Is it or is it not the fact that almost all of the part which is still in Government ownership is mountainous or sterile land? In other words, are not the Government holdings that are not taken out left in that condition because the land is practically of no value? I do not know what the facts are. I am trying to get at them.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am glad the Senator asked that question. That is the general conception outside of the arid States. It is a very natural supposition. The fact that this land has not gone into private ownership would tend to prove that it is worthless.

As a matter of fact, it is not due to that at all. It is due to a lack of knowledge on the part of Congress of the conditions and of the laws necessary to make that land valuable. The western Senators have talked on the floor of the Senate for years with regard to that matter. Every time we have attempted any new legislation that would meet those conditions we have been opposed by very sincere eastern people, not because they knew anything against the legislation but because they feared that we were trying to grab land; that is all. The homestead act is inoperative as to that land. The homestead act, in fact, does not settle any land that requires irrigation to make it fertile and productive.

Under the irrigation projects that are going on in the West we have in Nevada placed under cultivation in the neighborhood of 200,000 acres of land, which is identical with 18,000,000 acres of land that we have left.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The conditions existing in Nevada are paralleled by the conditions existing in Oregon. If the Senator will permit me to give the figures, I will show just what the situation is in our State.

Mr. PITTMAN. I shall be very glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In Oregon the area of the State is 61,188,480 acres, of which 36,802,621 acres, or approximately 60 per cent, are withheld or withdrawn from settlement and not subject to taxation. It is estimated that if these lands were subject to taxation they would bring to the State as revenue something like a million and a half of dollars. Now, I assume that the conditions in Nevada are somewhat the same as in Oregon with reference to the character of lands withdrawn.

Oregon with reference to the character of lands withdrawn; and if the Senator will permit me to state the situation just a little further, I will show just what these lands which are withdrawn consist of.

There are in national parks 159,360 acres; national monuments, 480 acres; Indian reservations, 1,275,114 acres; military reserves, 11,116 acres; forest reserves, 15,580,934 acres; power-site reserves, 261,910 acres; reservoir sites, 10,619 acres; coal reserves, 246,561 acres; Oregon-California land grant, 2,400,000 acres; public domain, 16,545,542 acres; State coal lands, which, of course, probably should not be taken into consideration, 541,000 acres; making a total of 36,802,621 acres of land which are absolutely withdrawn from taxation, and from which the State gets no revenue; neither do any of the counties of the State. So that there is very great merit in the contention of the Senator that this allowance ought to be made in any appropriations made under section 6 or under the original road act.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a further interruption?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. I am impressed with the fact that there is a good deal of force in the position taken by the Senator from Nevada, particularly as applied to these three great trunk roads, if I may call them such, which are to cross the State from east to west; but, as I understand, under this amendment—and I am not clear that I properly construe it—it would be possible under this legislation as adopted for any given county in any particular locality where most of the land was privately owned to have the same benefit, so far as the percentage was concerned, that the State would have if it were building these trunk lines. Now, it seems to me that where the conditions with regard to private ownership are substantially the same in Nevada as they are in our Eastern States, the percentage of Federal aid should be substantially the same in that State as it is in the Eastern States; but if it comes to localities in which the larger portion of the land is Federally owned—and I take it that is true along these three trunk lines that the Senator speaks of—then I can understand why the authorities should have much greater latitude. Do I properly construe the Senator's amendment?

Mr. PITTMAN. I understand the point that the Senator makes; but the situation is this: We will take, for instance, the Overland Trail. The Overland Trail goes through more of the settled country than the other two. It goes through five or six towns. Now, you may say that those five or six towns, having the property in private ownership, should not be excused from paying the full amount of the State's part. Well, they are not excused from paying the full amount of the State's part, because they are the only people that are taxed to pay the State's part.

For instance, 7 per cent of the property of the State is taxable; that is all. Now, whether the 7 per cent of land is on the road or not on the road, whether it is benefited by the road or not benefited by the road, it pays the total portion required of the State. So, when you get down to it it is unnecessary to try to equalize it as between counties or communities, because they pay it. They pay the full tax required of the State, no matter where they are, and under my amendment they will pay the full part. The only question is this: Instead of the State paying one-half, as it is doing now, they tax the people to pay one-tenth, because only one-tenth of the land of the State is subject to taxation. It is absolutely unfair to have the people of a State carry on these great national highways on behalf of a State when they are bearing ten times the burden that the people of any other State are bearing for exactly the same public service.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, of this 10 per cent of the State domain which is subject to taxation a very large portion is mineral, is it not?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is.

Mr. THOMAS. Is it not a fact that taxes upon mines constitute a transient source of revenue, and when the mine is depleted that source ceases, in consequence of which the portion of the domain which will yield a permanent revenue is actually less than 10 per cent?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; it is.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator to say that at the present time a thousand dollars' worth of real estate in Nevada bears ten times as much tax for public roads as a thousand dollars' worth of real estate would bear in a State that has no Government property?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is exactly the case. In other words, 10 men in Nevada have to bear the burden of 100 men, whereas 10 men in a State where all the land is privately owned bear the burden of 10 men.

I am not appealing for this purely and simply on behalf of my State. I am appealing on behalf of the good roads act. I know that the people of the States in which they have not the land to tax have reached the limit, and they are going to fall down on their part of the contribution to the good roads law unless Congress recognizes the equities of the case and treats them equitably.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I notice in an allotment sheet which was furnished me yesterday that there has been $3,527,276.18 allotted to Nevada under the acts of 1916 and 1919. May I ask the Senator what portion of that allotment has been consumed by the State of Nevada?

Mr. PITTMAN. I can only speak from memory, but I think about a fourth of that has been exhausted.

Mr. POMERENE. Is that due to the fact that the State authorities have not been able to duplicate the amount which has already been provided by the Federal Government?

Mr. PITTMAN. It was due very largely to the limitation on taxation in the State.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I know what the Senator has related is true, not only of the State of Nevada, but it is a common thing in most of that part of the country. The wonder to me is, considering what they have already had to expend on their own roads, the enormous taxation they have placed on themselves for the protection of property of the Government itself, how they ever raised the amount the Senator says they did raise to meet the Government gratuity, if you please to call it such; how the State of Nevada was ever able to do it, with the taxation those people are compelled to carry now.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, if it were not for the fact that the people of the Western States are so anxious for good roads there would have been no contribution on the part of those Western States, where the majority of the land is not taxable. I thank the Senator from Arizona for calling that to the attention of the Senate.

Stop and think, Senators. The State of Nevada is 300 miles wide, approximately, and there are 3 great trunk lines being built from one border to the other, the benefit of which goes in the proportion of 90 to 10 to people living outside of that State. Those roads are being built as permanent highways. In places they are costing in the neighborhood of $15,000 a mile, and the State of Nevada to-day is putting up nearly one-half of that, when the Government of the United States has a 90 per cent interest in the land. It would be a great misfortune if these States should be forced, by a constitutional or other limitation on taxation, to cease to participate with the Government in the building of these roads.

I heard it said yesterday by some one that this money was being extravagantly spent. I have the report of the highways commission of my State, and I have the report of the governor of my State. The only complaint that I read in those reports was that there were a great many annoying restrictions imposed by the Federal authorities, but in the end the reports stated that the careful supervision by the Federal authorities had resulted in the building of the best roads, and most economically, that had ever been built in the western country.

When you have two parties interested in the money that is being spent, you have a check which you have not when it is being expended under one party. I think the conception of the cooperation of the Federal Government with the States has worked splendidly. The roads are expensive roads, but they are carrying out the theory of Congress, and they are making those roads permanent.

There is just one other question to which I wish to refer. Remember that while the Federal Government assists the State government in the building of these roads, after the roads are built the obligation of the Federal Government ceases. And remember that then the obligation falls upon the State government to maintain those roads forever. The cost of the maintenance of these great State and interstate highways in course of time will be far greater than the initial cost. As a matter of fact, I think that the cost of maintenance for 10 years will be greater than the original cost.

Therefore the interests of this Government require that some equity be done in this particular case, and I therefore sincerely urge that this amendment be agreed to, and that it be agreed to while the legislatures of the Western States are in session, so that they may know that the Government will lift some of these unfair burdens from them and that they may be encouraged to go on with this work.

Congress has already recognized this necessity. The House of Representatives have passed a bill, called the Sells bill, which provides exactly the same remedy I provide by this amendment. That bill is now in the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, as I understand, the Senator has said that this would reduce the proportion of the expense to be met by the States to about 10 per cent of the total in his own State. May I ask the Senator whether he has worked this out so as to give the Senate reasonably accurate information as to the proportion of the total expense which will have to be paid by the State authorities in the other States where there is a substantial amount of Federal-owned land?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; I have not worked that out; but I will now read the proportion of privately owned land, or taxable land, in the public-land States. For instance, in Arizona the taxable land is 45.4 per cent.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. What is that?

Mr. PITTMAN. Forty-five and four-tenths per cent of taxable land in Arizona. In California it is 78 per cent. In Colorado it is 84 per cent. In Idaho it is 80 per cent.

Mr. POMERENE. Taxable land?

Mr. PITTMAN. The taxable land. In Montana it is 87 per cent. In Nevada they have it 21 per cent. That is an error. The taxable land does not amount to that.

Mr. POMERENE. The State of Nevada has how much?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is simply an error in computation. The figures here show the error in computation.

Mr. SMOOT. Did the Senator say those figures showed the percentage of taxable lands?

Mr. PITTMAN. This is the ratio of patented land and national forests to total area; that is, the percentage.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood the Senator to say those were the percentages of taxable lands.

Mr. POMERENE. That is what I understood the statement to be.

Mr. PITTMAN. This is not all taxable. Part of it is taxable; that is, the patented land. That part of it is taxable, but they have included in the estimate "and national forests." The national forests are not taxable.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. They form half of some of the States.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am giving the Senator from Ohio the figures. That is the reason of the 21 per cent. They have added in the computation the patented lands, and with them the national forests, and the national forests are nontaxable lands. So the percentages I have read must be reduced. I have no other table at hand, so read the foregoing to give the Senator an idea of the approximate percentages.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if, in his judgment, those percentages to which he has been referring represent the entire equities of those States?

It is apparent to all of us who live in such States that where you have a large body of unentered public land, that means that there have been thousands and millions of acres entered, and perhaps patented, but which have a very low valuation. You must build these roads through the country where the lands have but small value, and if you are going to have permanent roads through that country, the Government must come to the aid of the country in a very much greater degree than is proposed by any legislation submitted to the Senate.

Take the State of New Mexico, 350 miles wide and 400 miles long, with a population of about 360,000, and, while there is a large percentage of the lands in that State not subject to taxation, the lands which are subject to taxation are of small value, compared with the lands in the older States of the Union, and it seems to me that if you are going to get permanent highways through that country, you will have to go even further than the amendment suggested by the Senator from Nevada would go.

The thought has been expressed here that these roads are not permanent roads in the sense we have permanent roads in this section of the country. That is true, and necessarily true. I would ask the Senate to consider for a moment what it would cost to build a concrete road through the State of New Mexico, which is 350 miles wide. There are projected through that State, as through the State of Nevada, at least three great interstate highways. To talk about building those roads of concrete, or of permanent construction, such as we understand by that term in this section of the country, is entirely out of the question, unless the Federal Government should go very much further than it is proposed it shall go. I submit that Senators should consider that when you talk about the mere percentage of lands remaining in Government ownership, you have not even commenced to tell the story, have not even commenced to present the situation that actually exists there, because if you have this great area of country, which is comprised of lands valued at only two, three, four, or five dollars per acre, and undertake to consider that situation as equivalent to the situation which you have in this section of the country, where values go up to forty or fifty or one hundred dollars an acre, you can not put the two situations in the same parallel. There is no comparison between them, and instead of going to the length suggested in the amendment of the Senator from Nevada, I submit that the Government should make the appropriations in those States of this money, and simply impose upon the States the burden of keeping the roads in repair.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I want it borne in mind that this amendment does not place any greater burden on the Federal Government than it now bears. It does not change the allotments to the States at all. There is going to be no more money allotted to the Western States under this amendment. It does not change the allotments at all.

The allotment is based on certain principles. The State of Nevada will get out of this fund, we will say, $6,000,000. It is all going to be spent in that State under the good roads act. The question is whether they shall spend 90 per cent on one road or 50 per cent on one road; that is all. We say that in the State of Nevada, where only one-tenth of the property is taxable, that they ought to spend 90 per cent on one road and the State 10 per cent on the same road; that is all.

I do not desire to have anyone get the impression that the amendment which I have proposed in any way places any greater burden on the Federal Government, because it does not. It does not add a dollar to the appropriation. It simply gives the Secretary of Agriculture the power to use that money to complete a road when the completion of the road is necessary and the State is unable to pay 50 per cent of the cost of that particular road. It is to the interest of the Federal Government that the authority be given to the Secretary of Agriculture, so that the great trans-State highways, that are an essential link in the highways across the entire country, can be completed, and completed expeditiously, with the money that Congress has already appropriated for that purpose, and not have to wait until the State, under its constitution, can raise its share of the money.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a suggestion?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am strongly sympathetic with the equities of all that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] has suggested, but in the future I see very great difficulty in those States maintaining those highways for long periods of time, commencing at an early date in all probability. In the case of the State of Nevada paying 10 per cent and the Government 90 per cent, the only opportunity for those overtaxed people is in the securing of that reduction from 50 per cent to 10 per cent, to enable them to exercise for their own purposes the right of taxation for roads that are essential to the State, but for which the Government itself does not see any propriety in making an appropriation. In other words, we reserve to those people the power to tax themselves to build the essential roads that the Government will not enter into. If we forced them to pay 50 per cent, they would not be able to raise one dollar to carry out any scheme for a county road in the whole State. It seems to me that it is as little as Congress can do to allow the Government to pay its fair proportion of those expenses; otherwise, agreeing with the Senator, it simply kills forever any hope of further road building in the Western States.

Mr. PITTMAN. I might call attention to the fact that it happens that in the public-land States the roads which are being built under the supervision of the Government are more in accord with the intention of Congress than the roads built in any other part of the country. The Lincoln Highway that passes through 8 or 10 of the Western States, the highway that goes through the southern part of Colorado and into New Mexico and Arizona, the Arrowhead Trail that passes through Salt Lake City, Utah, and the highway that passes north through Montana are four great highways that cross nearly all of the public-land States, and in every State they cross they are being improved under the good roads act, while on the other hand it is charged, and it may or may not be true, that in the thickly populated States of the East there is no such general system worked out, and the roads are more of a convenience for use in driving or riding from a settlement to a railroad.

If any good is going to be accomplished under the road act, and I know that it is being accomplished, no greater good can be accomplished than the expeditious building of these great transcontinental roads. It seems to me foolish for the Federal Government to wait 10 years to have those roads built, by reason of the delay on the part of the States to put up 50 per cent of the money, when the money is appropriated by Congress and ready to put into the roads. It simply means that if the Federal Government put the whole appropriation now into the three roads without the assistance of the States, that it ceases to cooperate with the States just that much more quickly, and after that time, if there are any roads built in a State, they have to be built solely at the expense of the State.

It is not an appropriation we are asking at all. We are asking that the Secretary of Agriculture be given authority to put up the necessary money when a State can not afford to do it, and when the State can not do it by reason of not having sufficient taxable property in the State.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, yesterday the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] made the statement that the State of South Carolina had discontinued or was considering discontinuing State aid in the building of public roads. In view of that statement I wired to South Carolina, and I have received two telegrams in reply which I desire to have read by the Secretary in order that they may appear in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

CHARLESTON, S. C., February 18, 1921.

Senator N. B. DIAL,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Wiring you day letter protesting against Senator KENYON'S statement and action. South Carolina Legislature urged passage of Federal aid act, and State highway commission has in sight several times amount necessary to match Federal aid.

R. GOODWYN RHETT,
Chairman State Highway Commission.

COLUMBIA, S. C., February 18, 1921.

Senator N. B. DIAL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Statement that South Carolina has ceased to appropriate funds to meet Federal aid for roads erroneous. We will have much more money for permanent road building than is necessary to comply with Federal act. Do not understand how Senator KENYON got his information.

R. A. COOPER, Governor.

The day letter referred to was subsequently ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHARLESTON, S. C., 11.36 a. m.—18.

Senator NATHANIEL B. DIAL,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

I have just sent Senator KENYON the following telegram:

"Your motion to exclude South Carolina from participation in Federal aid funds 's obviously based upon misapprehension facts. Our legislature almost unanimously requested passage of this Federal aid act; that applications are already with this department covering with State funds all Federal aid funds thus far provided for South Carolina, and she is prepared to cover promptly all appropriations which could come to her under that act. Moreover, she is now calling for bids on costly bridges over the Peedee, Santee, Wateree, and middle Savannah Rivers, and is in need of these funds, amongst other things, for a bridge over the lower Savannah River, and all such bridge projects on this coast are important for national defense. The last two legislatures authorized bond issues and made appropriations for over $20,000,000 for road building in this State. We may be late in starting, but before this fund is expended we will be glad to challenge Iowa to a comparison of highways."

Can not imagine foundation for KENYON'S statement unless it was proposal of House to repeal 2-mill tax. This would have no bearing whatever upon the State's ability to match Federal funds. The counties already have been authorized to issue bonds far in excess of amount necessary to match Federal funds, and are earnestly calling upon us for it from every direction. The 2-mill tax would aggregate less than $1,000,000. There are bond issues already authorized for work on State highways aggregating over $15,000,000.

R. GOODWYN RHETT,
Chairman State Highway Commission for South Carolina.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the subject of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] has had my consideration for some time. Indeed, a bill which I drew more than a year and a half ago, and before any of the Senators from the public-land States had even called my attention to it, contained a provision which I hoped to incorporate in any measure which might be enacted upon the subject.

I am in hearty sympathy with the proper recognition of the public-land States along the lines suggested by the Senator from Nevada. I, in fact, would go further than even he proposes in reference to the roads built through the public domain. But here is the situation which the Senator hopes to obviate through his motion to suspend the rules: He proposes, when no additional appropriation has been granted but has been denied, to amend the present arrangement which has been entered into, even the contracts which have been entered into between the Federal Government through its highway department and the State departments, and even with contractors, to build the roads under the present law.

The proposition has been considered by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate, and a bill is now on the calendar which I think is more definite and clear than the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada. The reason that bill has not been pressed has been that the House of Representatives, as we know, has divided the powers of the former Post Office and Post Roads Committee in reference to appropriations. The power to appropriate has been taken away from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and conferred on the Committee on Appropriations. Now, naturally the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads insist that the legislative power shall still rest with it. The amendment could not be adopted under the rules of the House because the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads will insist on carrying it to that committee.

I wish to say to the Senator from Nevada, in furtherance of the statement as to my attitude on the question and my interest in it as demonstrated by amendments or bills before the Senate, that when the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate take up the question at the very beginning of the next session this proposition will be included, because I have found but very little objection to it. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] did not quite understand it, and was rather opposed to it; but I think when anyone understands the proposition he will see that special arrangements should be made for the benefit of the public-land States in regard to the distribution of the money which goes to that State. I am not clear but that there should be a different method of appropriation even to the public-land States. I am not clear that the proposed amendment, or even the one that has been proposed by the Senate committee, would mete out exact justice to the public-land States. It is a question which should be given careful consideration at a very early date. We can not frame this law on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will yield in just a moment. We can not frame this provision on the floor of the Senate with all the obstacles which may be presented, but we propose to remedy that defect; and if the proposition carrying an appropriation of $100,000,000 had been carried, I had an amendment prepared to propose to it covering the very subject which the Senator from Nevada has proposed.

I now yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I suppose the Senator refers to Senate bill 4899?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Phipps bill.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes; the Phipps bill. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether there has been serious objection on the part of anyone in the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to incorporating that bill as an amendment to the pending appropriation bill?

Mr. TOWNSEND. There is very serious objection. When we start to amend the present law, it ought to be considered in all its relations. It ought to be considered by the right committee. Here is an appropriation bill that is proposed by the Committee on Appropriations in the House of Representatives. The amendment and the proposition should be considered by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of the House. Then we can consider it in our committee and submit it to conference with the hope that it may be accepted. We can not do it in the manner proposed here.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I assume that legislation, such as that suggested in the so-called Phipps bill, will meet with the approval of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate and that they will favorably report it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. We have already reported it out.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. When it goes to the House, if it should go there as a part of the pending appropriation bill now before the Senate, I do not think there is any reason why we should assume that the Appropriations Committee of the House would insist on cutting it out.

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; but I suppose that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of the House would do so. They have already given notice that they would do it, and that it must be considered by them.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If they should assume that responsibility, it seems to me we still shall have performed our duty if we do the thing which the Senate thinks should be done.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not care to imperil the proposed legislation. I should dislike to have the amendment rejected, because I know the principle is right. I think we shall make no progress by trying to put the proposition on as an amendment to the pending appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. May I inquire of the Senator how we could possibly lose any ground by putting it on the bill?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Supposing it is stricken out in the other House or they refuse to let the appropriation bill be considered as they may do under their rules. They can instruct their conferees in reference to this matter, and they must do so.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then we shall be in no worse position than we now are.

Mr. TOWNSEND. We shall be in a worse position in this respect: I would be in the position as the chairman of the committee of consenting to legislation of this kind which should be considered in conjunction with another specific bill or as an amendment to the roads bill.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It seems to me that we are confronted with just this situation: Here is a matter about which the Senate appears to be in entire agreement. The Post Office Committee, the Appropriations Committee, and everybody whose voice has been raised in connection with the subject seem to be in entire agreement.

Mr. TOWNSEND. There have been a number of questions as to which that is true, but they would not be in order on an appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I understand it is not in order, but the Senate has a right to make it in order by a suspension of the rule.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Of course, if two-thirds of the Senate wish to do it, I shall abide by their decision.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The so-called Phipps bill embodies precisely the idea which is proposed in the amendment of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and it contains an additional suggestion, a new section which was inserted by the committee, which I think is a very appropriate one. If we can, under a suspension of the rule, get before the Senate the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada, then we may take it up and substitute the bill which has been reported by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads for the amendment of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is true, but, as I have stated, I do not think that is in order, or that the question of extending the use of the unexpended balance already appropriated for good roads should be considered in connection with the pending bill. If we do not pass appropriate legislation early in the special session, the appropriation can be extended by joint resolution of the two Houses without any question at all.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I desire to state to the distinguished chairman of the committee that the State of New Mexico to-day has just about reached its limit, and in order to raise any more funds with which to meet even the funds which are proposed to be expended on the part of the Government it will be necessary in that State to have a State-wide election. That can not be had until the general election of next year. We have practically got to amend the constitution of the State in order to meet this requirement, owing to the limitation upon the rate of taxation. I am sure that it would be in the interest of the very legislation which we all approve if the so-called Phipps bill could be considered now and help out that situation and let the work go on to a greater extent than it has been going on. Inasmuch as the proposed amendment is satisfactory to everybody, I must confess that I am unable to see the force of the argument that because the other House might not be willing to give the matter consideration on account of parliamentary reasons we ourselves should decline to take action.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am not admitting that everybody is satisfied with this proposition, for there have been many questions asked and many doubts expressed in reference to it. I think it is right and I think we can carry it; when the proposition is submitted on its merits, I have not any doubt what will be done with it; but I am opposed at this time to framing legislation on an appropriation bill on the floor of the Senate. Therefore, I hope we may have a vote on the proposition to suspend the rule, in order that we may determine whether or not two-thirds of the Senate wish to attach the legislation to the pending bill. If no other Senator wishes to speak, I will ask for a quorum.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I merely wish to say a few words, addressing myself in particular to the chairman of the committee. I do not desire to delay the passage of the bill, but I am unable to perceive any reason for delaying an exigent matter, such as this, on the pretense or, rather, the ground, for I would not use the word "pretense" in connection with anything suggested by the Senator from Michigan, that the legislation may fail in the other House, or on the ground of our opposition to legislation on appropriation bills. That is hardly an appropriate basis for contesting the amendment, in view of the exigent condition of that section of the country for which the plea for action is now made.

It is impossible for a number of the Western States to raise their fifty-fifty proportion of money for the building of good roads. They are burdened almost to the extent of bankruptcy to-day. My State is as large as Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, and a part of Pennsylvania. Under those circumstances it is preposterous to talk about the people of my State, with a population of 350,000, building roads for 300 miles in different directions and putting up the money on a fifty-fifty basis with the Government, with the Government laying out the roads, with an absolute inhibition against the State making a selection as to where they themselves wish to spend the money.

Senators, I wish to say that delay in the enactment of the legislation proposed is going to make a wreck of public-road building in the Western States. We can relieve the situation right now by the chairman of the committee consenting to let the amendment go on the bill and do the best he can in conference. There would be no objection on the part of any of the friends of the measure—and none of us is more ardently in favor of it than is the chairman—if the chairman should let the amendment go on and it should be stricken out. We would realize that our conferees could not secure its retention, but at least we would know that we had the backing of the Senate behind any further attempted legislation in the same direction.

As I said in the beginning, it seems to me that it is hardly an adequate answer to the proposition to cite the objection which we all have to legislation on appropriation bills, for no longer than the other day the Senate set aside its rule by a two-thirds vote in order that there might be legislation on an appropriation bill. I voted for the suspension of the rule; I do not know how the chairman voted, but it is essential for the Senate at times, especially under the peculiar conditions of which the Senator from Michigan speaks, which now obtain in the House of Representatives, for the Senate to act as it best may to bring before the other House under its changed rules the sense of the Senate on important questions such as this.

I can not do more than appeal to the Senate to allow the amendment to go into the bill, for I know as well as I know I am standing here the absolute ruin that will ensue to certain States in the West in connection with the road-building program unless such action is taken.

The magnificent impetus that has been given to the building of roads in the various States through Federal aid is a source of congratulation to all the people. More roads of the proper kind have been built in the last 10 years in the United States than in any previous 50 years in our history. All that has been done by means of the little encouragement that has been accorded to the States. They, as a matter of fact, are putting up five or six times more than the Government, but in this instance we are dealing with States which can not put up any more. One county of my State has taxed itself $4,000,000 for the purpose of building roads. The population of New Mexico is scattered over a section, as I have indicated, as large as the New England States. Suppose the people of New England started to build a road from Maine to Rhode Island; it would run through a thickly populated section and would involve a great distance, but even such a road would be less in extent than a road from the border line of Arizona on the east to the border line of California on the west. Yet through the section of New England many rich people live, whereas in New Mexico the population is scattered, and, outside of isolated communities, there is very little wealth.

Furthermore, fully 90 per cent of that great State is comprised in public lands on which settlement can not be made under the laws now pertaining to those lands or else it is held in Indian reservations, military reservations, forest reservations, and national parks. The lands so held in Government reservations include 75 per cent of the best lands in the State. So the people there stand absolutely helpless. The Government ought to build the roads itself and put on us only the burden of maintaining them, and even that would be a burden greater by two to one than any of the Eastern States will bear because of their contributions toward the construction and preservation of the roads.

Mr. President, I am sorry to disagree with the chairman of the committee. I rarely disagree with anything that my friend, the Senator from Michigan, suggests, but I should like to appeal to him to allow this matter to be presented to the House of Representatives in connection with this bill. If there shall be any objection in the House because of the fact that it has already reported favorably a bill for a similar purpose and with the same intent, if the House says, "This is not the way we like to legislate," no one on this side will criticize the conferees on the part of the Senate for not keeping the item in the bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GAY in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gay	La Follette	Smith, S. C.
Ball	Gerry	Lenroot	Smoot
Beckham	Glass	Lodge	Spencer
Borah	Gooding	McCumber	Stanley
Brandegee	Gronna	McKellar	Sutherland
Calder	Hale	McNary	Thomas
Capper	Harris	Moses	Townsend
Chamberlain	Harrison	Myers	Trammell
Colt	Heflin	Nelson	Underwood
Curtis	Henderson	New	Wadsworth
Dial	Hitchcock	Phelan	Walsh, Mass.
Dillingham	Jones, N. Mex.	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Edge	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Warren
Elkins	Kellogg	Poindexter	Williams
Fall	Kendrick	Pomerene	Willis
Fernald	Kenyon	Ransdell	Wolcott
Fletcher	Keyes	Sheppard
France	Kirby	Simmons
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Smith, Ariz.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr.

PITTMAN] to suspend the rule in order to make in order the amendment that he has offered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I am unable for the moment to get a transfer of my pair, and withhold my vote.

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HENDERSON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before relative to my pair, I vote "yea."

Mr. POMERENE (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], who is absent. I, therefore, withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). Has the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). That Senator has not voted.

Mr. THOMAS. I have a standing pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote, and I therefore feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS. Has the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut, which I transfer to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Has the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have a general pair with that Senator, and, not knowing how he would vote, in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I observe that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has not answered to his name. Having a pair with him, I am compelled to withdraw my vote.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], who is out of the Chamber and has announced the pair. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. EDGE. I have a pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. Not being able to secure a transfer, I will withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FERNALD. I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I inquire whether the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (after having voted in the affirmative). I ask if the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. WARREN. Then I will withdraw my vote, because I have a pair with that Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington (after having voted in the negative). Has the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. JONES of Washington. He is necessarily absent from the Chamber on business of the Senate, and I have agreed to take care of him during these absences. Therefore I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call resulted—yeas 33, nays 31, as follows:

YEAS—33.

Ashurst	Gooding	McKellar	Stanley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] to suspend paragraph 3 of Rule XVI, the yeas are 33, the nays are 31. Two-thirds of the Senators present not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, a little while ago, when the Senate was considering the motion to suspend the rule to make in order the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], in the course of the debate the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, made the statement that large sums of this Federal aid for road construction had been wasted, and that there was no question about it. I was surprised to hear the chairman of that committee make that statement, and I did not want it to go unchallenged. I had never heard the charge made before, so I questioned the statement. Being one who did not agree with the statement, I did not want it to appear in the RECORD that all Senators present agreed to the proposition that a large amount of that money has been wasted. So I called up the Bureau of Roads in the Agricultural Department; I talked with the chief of that bureau, Mr. McDonald, and he said that no complaint of money wasted, as suggested by the Senator from Michigan, had ever come to him. It was my impression that this money had been honestly handled that caused me to challenge the statement of the Senator from Michigan. I should not wonder that some money, in carrying out a great program of this character, might be unwisely spent and there might be some waste; but the statement that a large amount of this good-roads fund had been wasted was news to me, and I could not agree to that statement of the Senator.

In all these road projects, Mr. President, the State must cooperate with the Federal Government. The road must be designated by both the State and Federal Governments. The road authorities in the State must pass upon it; the road authorities of the Federal Government must pass upon it; and then they cooperate in working out the proposition of building the road; and in all the work that has been done in this country I have never heard the charge of graft connected with it, not the graft of a single dollar; and I want to say, Mr. President, for those who have had charge of the construction of the highways of this country, that they are entitled to be complimented; they are entitled to have words of praise expressed about them, because in all this great work there has been no charge of graft whatever. Mark you, they have handled millions and hundreds of millions of dollars, and I say their splendid conduct is entitled to words of commendation and praise at the hands of the Senate. Knowing something about this great road work, having been an advocate of good-roads construction ever since I have been in Congress, I was surprised when the Senator from Michigan made the statement he did this morning, and I wanted to enter my protest against that statement. As I said before, I have talked with the chief of the Bureau of Roads upon the subject, and I am sure that the Senator from Michigan is mistaken in what he had to say about it.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I was asked by a number of rural carriers in my State to offer an amendment to this bill providing for an equipment cost. I have not offered the amendment, and the reason is that a majority of the committee was of the opinion that no postal legislation should be placed upon this bill at all, except in one or two minor particulars, to which it is unnecessary for me to refer now.

The Rural Delivery Service in the United States is about 23 years old. It was begun largely through the efforts of the Hon. Thomas E. Watson, of Georgia, then a Member of the House of Representatives and now a Senator elect, when the experiment was first made. Its evolution and success have been remarkable. It is now a vital and inseparable part of the greatest postal system in the world. It serves approximately 30,000,000 people, or nearly one-third of our entire population. It gives to the great majority of our rural population daily mail. It gives them an intimate contact with the outside world. It gives them their mail at their front gates. It gives them the daily newspapers. With the introduction of the parcel-post as a part of the system, it allows the residents of rural communities to buy directly from the cities, when they so desire and when it is to their interest to do so. It also gives them the opportunity of selling many of the products of the farm directly to city buyers, thus being an enormous advantage to both producer and consumer.

It facilitates an exchange of commodities at nominal cost. Its convenience to the rural public knows no bounds. Its educational value in the way of supplying educational reading matter of all kinds can not be overestimated. Its importance and value to the rural resident in the way of adding to his comfort, to his success, to his happiness, to his learning, and to his material benefit can not be doubted.

The Rural Delivery Service is the forerunner of good roads. As soon as a mail route is established over a road, the very next step is to improve the road. It was only under the constitutional authority to establish post roads that the Federal Government was ever induced to lend its aid to road building, an aid that has probably done more to secure the building of good roads in this country than any other one fact, not even excepting the fact of automobiles. When we remember that the marvelous way in which roads build up a country and the enormous saving in the cost of transportation by reason of having good roads, we can only then fully understand the importance of this aspect of the rural mail service.

Again, Mr. President, our Nation is confronted with the vital question as to how more of our boys and girls can be kept on the farm. For the past generation they have been flocking to the cities. The census of 1920 shows that a majority of our entire population now resides in the cities, for the first time in our history. In my own State of Tennessee, 36 of 95 counties in the State have lost in population, while only 11 increased over 5 per cent. Everyone realizes that this is not a good condition. We must improve it. We must make country life more endurable. We must make it more attractive. We must improve and build up the rural-delivery service, the parcel post, continue to secure better roads, better banking facilities for the farmers, so that they can improve their farms, build better homes and improve their lands, give their children better schools and schoolhouses, continue to teach them the most improved methods of farming, and the time is here when more attention should be given to rural recreation and amusement.

Having these things in view, Mr. President, we should take no backward step on the subject of Rural Free Delivery Service. We should pay the rural carriers in the same way that we pay for city and interstate service. For the Railway Mail Service we have up-to-date mail cars and equipment. In addition, railway mail clerks receive an allowance of $2 per day for meals while away from home on duty. Employees of the City Delivery Service are provided with everything necessary for the performance of their duty and this is right. They are furnished with car fare for transportation to and from their posts of duty. Mounted city carriers and collectors have vehicles furnished which the Government provides at an expense that has been estimated to be from $1,000 to $1,800. The pay of these men in the City Delivery Service is just about the same as the rural carriers receive, but the rural carriers are discriminated against in that they receive no equipment. They have to furnish their own horses and vehicles or automobiles, and must keep them at their own expense. The salary of a rural carrier on a standard route of 24 miles is $1,800 per year. Out of this salary the rural carrier is obliged to provide and maintain the equipment necessary to perform the services required. The result is that probably more than one-third of the carrier's salary is paid out for equipment and the cost of maintaining the same. The consequence is that the rural carrier much prefers to get a place in the same service in the city, and often does, and hence one of the reasons for the trekking from the country to the city.

Mr. President, the rural carrier is not asking for more salary. He is satisfied with the salary that the recent commission on readjustment of salaries gave him, but he does ask that he be granted a reasonable sum to assist in defraying the expenses of maintaining the equipment used in the performance of his duty, to be paid as a separate allowance apart from the said salary, as substantially is given to the city carrier, and in this request, it seems to me, that he is clearly within the bounds of reason. Of course, Mr. President, I know that on an appropriation bill that this provision can not be placed, as it is legislation, and our committee has decided that legislation of this kind shall not be placed on this appropriation bill. If it were permissible, under our rule, I should offer an amendment giving to the rural carrier this allowance. For the reasons I have given, I think it but fair and just, and at the first opportunity I shall avail myself of the privilege to offer, by way of bill or amendment, such a provision to be enacted into law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. MOSES, Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. BECKHAM, and Mr. HENDERSON conferees on the part of the Senate.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 14461, which is known as the immigration bill, so as to make it the unfinished business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14461) to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert a substitute.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business, the immigration bill, may be temporarily laid aside so that I may call up the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15872) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the formal reading be dispensed with, and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be considered first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that course will be followed.

MEMORIAL TO THE DEAD OF THE FIRST DIVISION.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, there is on the calendar a joint resolution of six or eight lines providing for the erection of a memorial statue to the dead of the First Division of the American Expeditionary Forces in the late war, and I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to yield to me for a moment to have it considered.

Mr. LODGE. I will yield gladly, if it does not give rise to debate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If it gives rise to any debate at all, I will withdraw it. It is the unanimous report of the Committee on the Library.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 226) authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to the dead of the First Division, American Expeditionary Forces, in the World War, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant the Memorial Association of the First Division, United States Army, permission to erect, on public grounds of the United States in the city of Washington, D. C., south of the State, War, and Navy Building, and east of the Corcoran Art Gallery, a monument to the dead of the First Division, American Expeditionary Forces, in the World War: Provided, That the site chosen and the design of the monument and pedestal shall be approved by the National Commission of Fine Arts.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I will say, in explanation of the joint resolution, that it will cost the Government nothing. The Commission of Fine Arts have made a report upon the project. The site is subject to the approval of the Commission of Fine Arts, and of course the selection of the monument is subject to their approval. I hope there will be no objection to the joint resolution, and I ask that the letter from the Commission of Fine Arts and the argument which was submitted to the Committee on the Library in favor of the passage of the joint resolution may be printed in the RECORD in connection with it.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE COMMISSION OF FINE ARTS,
1729 New York Avenue, Washington, January 13, 1921.

MY DEAR SENATOR BRANDEGEE: Replying to your letter of January 8, requesting from the Commission of Fine Arts a report to the Library Committee of the Senate on Joint Resolution 226 entitled "A joint resolution authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washingon, D. C., of a memorial to the dead of the First Division, American Expeditionary Forces, in the World War," I have the honor to inform you that the Commission of Fine Arts has examined the possible sites in the District of Columbia for such a memorial, and has taken into consideration the fund available for the payment thereof. The commission favors a site south of the State, War, and Navy Building and north of B Street, the exact point to be located when the design of the monument shall be established. If Congress shall determine upon this site the design of the monument will have to be considered wih reference to the treatment plan for this area and the semipublic buildings which line Seventeenth Street opposite the location. By giving careful study to these elements of the problem, together with the design of the monument itself, a fitting and harmonious result can be achieved.

Sincerely, yours,

CHARLES MOORE, Chairman.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
United States Senate.

Argument presented with a joint resolution for the erection of a monument to the dead of the First Division, American Expeditionary Forces, in the World War.

When the United States entered the World War, the small Regular Army was employed largely along the Mexican border. It became necessary to organize and dispatch, as promptly as possible, an expeditionary force to France. Gen. Pershing personally selected from the troops that were under his command in Texas, the regiments and corresponding units that eventually composed the First Division, American Expeditionary Forces. Embarkation began at Hoboken on June 13, 1917, and by the middle of September all of the division was assembled in the training areas in Lorraine and Alsace, near the battle lines and within sound of the enemy's guns.

In October and November, 1917, the different elements spent periods of 10 days each in the Somervillier sector, where they completed their training by sharing with the French troops the defense of the sector. Here they were subjected to violent raids and bombardments and they suffered their first casualties. The bodies of the first men to fall were buried at Bathlemont, where the people of Lorraine have erected, in loving memory a monument bearing the Cross of Lorraine and an inscription that will for all time tell the passerby of these first sacrifices of the American Army in the cause of humanity.

After a further period of training for open warfare, during the rigorous winter of 1917–18, the First Division entered the battle line in Lorraine, north of Toul, in the middle of January, 1918, where it took over a defensive sector. Here it sustained its position and became the object of particularly vicious raids and gas and shell bombardments by the enemy. Its losses, and the dangers and hardships, developed the troops into veterans.

When, therefore, the great German offensive began on March 21, 1918, and the commander in chief placed his forces at the disposal of the Allied High Command, the First Division was dispatched to Picardy to help stem the enemy's progress on that front. The division entered the Cantigny sector, relieving two French divisions, and became engaged in almost continual battle. Among its achievements was the assault and capture of the town of Cantigny and the enemy's position over a front of 2,000 yards and a depth of 1,200 yards. This first American offensive came at a psychological moment and produced a marked effect on friend and foe by showing that the American soldier was at least the equal of the veteran troops of Europe.

On July 9 the division was relieved by two French divisions, and on July 12 it began a series of forced night marches to the northwest of Paris. On July 18 the division attacked as the left division of the Twentieth French Corps, which formed the spear-head of the allied offensive southwest of Soissons. For five days and nights it fought desperately, overcoming the enemy's selected troops at this point. It advanced more than nine kilometers and contributed in a determining degree to the withdrawal of the enemy from the south bank of the Marne and to compelling him to begin that retreat which ended only with the armistice. Here the division remained longer in battle without reinforcements than any other in the Tenth French Army. It suffered losses amounting to 50 per cent of its combat troops.

From the battlefields of Soissons the division proceeded again to Lorraine, where it took over a defensive sector. On September 12 it attacked in the St. Mihiel offensive as the left division of the southern line, thus occupying a critical post in the operation. It took all objectives on schedule time, and continued the advance until it met the Twenty-sixth Division from the north, early on the morning of September 13.

On September 30, after arduous night marches across the rear of the First American Army, it entered a critical point of the line in the great battle of the Meuse-Argonne. Here it fought desperately for 11 days, overcoming the enemy's determined resistance and suffering losses which again amounted to more than half of the troops engaged. It conquered a series of strong positions, and the effect of its successes contributed greatly to the enemy's withdrawal. For its brilliant performance the commander in chief gave it the only individual citation issued from the headquarters of the American Expeditionary Forces.

In spite of its hardships and losses, the First Division took its place as reserve of the Fifth Army Corps for the decisive assault of November 1. On November 5 it entered the line and advanced to the Meuse River at Mouzon. That night it pressed its advantage in the direction of Sedan, and the morning of November 7 found its regiments on the hills across the river from that fortress. From here it was withdrawn for another operation that was being prepared by the Second American Army.

The division entered Germany with the army of occupation and occupied a sector of the Coblenz Bridgehead. Just as it was the first to go, so it was the last to return, and it reached New York on September 6, 1919.

During the division's campaigns and battles its losses amounted to 249 officers and 5,040 enlisted men killed in action or died of wounds, and 641 officers and 19,090 enlisted men wounded in action.

Before leaving Germany the division secured funds from private sources and erected five monuments on the principal battlefields bearing in bronze the names of all who fell on each field. Immediately upon returning to the United States the First Division Memorial Association began to raise funds for the erection of a worthy monument in the city of Washington which should bear in honor the names of those who gave their lives in its ranks, and which should preserve forever their spirit of courage and sacrifice as an inspiration to our people. At present the fund amounts to $120,000, and it is intended to increase the sum to $150,000. It is proposed to secure a suitable design, which will not only fulfill the purpose desired but which will be an ornament to the National Capital.

After considering many sites, the one selected has been chosen for the following reasons:

(a) Its location adjacent to the State, War, and Navy Building appears to be peculiarly appropriate.

(b) The White House grounds on one side and the Corcoran Art Gallery on the other guarantee the dignity of that section of the city.

(c) The park and the surrounding open spaces incident to it insure against the construction of large buildings which might dwarf the monument.

(d) Its location near a portion of Seventeenth Street, which has been dedicated to the beautiful edifices already constructed, insures the future preservation of the beauty of that portion of the city.

(e) The immediate site itself independent of its general advantages is admirably adapted to the approach to the monument.

The First Division has earned the gratitude of the American people and of the American Government, and it is fitting that it should receive the consideration that is requested in the attached joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15872) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill for action on the committee amendments.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations was, on page 2, line 4, before the name "Spain," to strike out "and," and after the name "Spain," to insert "and Turkey," and in line 5, after the word "each," to strike out "$210,000" and insert "$227,500," so as to read:

SALARIES OF AMBASSADORS AND MINISTERS:

Ambassadors extraordinary and plenipotentiary to Argentina, Belgium, Brazil, Chile, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Peru, Spain, and Turkey, at $17,500 each, $227,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 16, to strike out:

For ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to Turkey, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 23, to increase the total appropriation for salaries of ambassadors, ministers, etc., from "$576,000" to "$588,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 11, to strike out "$354,000" and insert "$404,000," so as to read:

For salaries of secretaries in the Diplomatic Service, as provided in the act of February 5, 1915, entitled "An act for the improvement of the foreign service," as amended by the act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, approved July 1, 1916, and the act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, approved June 4, 1920, $404,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 18, to increase the total for salaries of secretaries, etc., in the Diplomatic Service, from "$378,600" to "$428,600."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 6, to increase the appropriation for employment of necessary clerks at the embassies and legations from "$300,000" to "$480,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 8, to insert:

SALARIES, INTERPRETERS TO EMBASSIES AND LEGATIONS:

Interpreter to legation and consulate general to Persia, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 11, to insert:

Interpreter to legation and consulate general to Bangkok, Siam, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 13, to insert:

For 10 student interpreters at the embassy to China, who shall be citizens of the United States and whose duty it shall be to study the Chinese language with a view to suppling interpreters to the embassy and consulates in China, at $1,500 each, $15,000: Provided, That the method of selecting said student interpreters shall be nonpartisan:

And provided further, That upon receiving such appointment each student interpreter shall sign an agreement to continue in the service as an interpreter at the embassy or consulates in China so long as his services may be required within a period of five years.

Mr. LODGE. On page 4, in lines 14, 17, and 22, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "embassy" in each place and insert in lieu thereof the word "legation." It is a misprint.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 5, to insert:

For the payment of the cost of tuition of student interpreters in China, at the rate of $350 per annum each, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 2, to insert:

For six student interpreters at the embassy to Japan, who shall be citizens of the United States and whose duty it shall be to study the Japanese language with a view to supplying interpreters to the embassy and consulates in Japan, at $1,500 each, $9,000: Provided, That the method of selecting said student interpreters shall be nonpartisan: And provided further, That upon receiving such appointment each student interpreter shall sign an agreement to continue in the service as an interpreter at the embassy or consulates in Japan so long as his services may be required within a period of five years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 13, to insert:

For the payment of the cost of tuition of student interpreters at the embassy to Japan, at the rate of $200 per annum each, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 16, to insert:

For four student interpreters at the legation to Turkey, who shall be citizens of the United States, and whose duty it shall be to study the language of Turkey and any other language that may be necessary to qualify them for service as interpreters to the legation and consulates in Turkey, at $1,500 each, $6,000: Provided, That the method of selecting said student interpreters shall be nonpartisan: And provided further, That upon receiving such appointment each student interpreter shall sign an agreement to continue in the service as an interpreter to the legation and consulates in Turkey so long as his services may be required within a period of five years.

Mr. LODGE. There are two or three typographical errors which I desire to correct by amendment. On page 5, in line 17, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "legation" and inserting the word "embassy," and I move the same amendment to the amendment in line 21, and on line 1, page 6.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Th next amendments were, on page 6, after line 3, to insert:

For the payment of the cost of tuition of student interpreters at the legation to Turkey, at the rate of $200 per annum each, $800.

And on page 6, after line 6, to insert:

No person drawing the salary of interpreter or student interpreter as above provided shall be allowed any part of the salary appropriated for any secretary of legation or other officer.

Mr. LODGE. On page 6, in line 5, where the word "legation" occurs, I move to strike it out and insert in lieu thereof the word "embassy."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 10, to insert, at the end of the items for interpreters to embassies and legations:

Total, $39,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 11, to insert:

QUARTERS FOR STUDENT INTERPRETERS AT EMBASSIES.

For rent of quarters for the student interpreters attached to the embassy to Japan, $1,200;

For rent of quarters for the student interpreters attached to the legation to Turkey, $600;

Total, $1,800.

Mr. LODGE. In line 16, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "legation" and inserting the word "embassy."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 18, to insert:

PAYMENT TO MRS. ANNA GALE WHITE.

To Mrs. Anna Gale White, widow of Jay White, late consul to Naples, Italy, $4,500, one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while at his post of duty from illness incurred in the Consular Service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 10, to insert:

PAYMENT TO MRS. MARY A. HIGGINS.

To Mrs. Mary A. Higgins, widow of Edward Higgins, late consul to Bahia, Brazil, $4,000, one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while at his post of duty from illness incurred in the Consular Service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 9, after the word "rent," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$5,000," so as to read:

INTERNATIONAL BOUNDARY COMMISSION, UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

To enable the President to perform the obligations of the United States under the treaties of 1884, 1889, 1905, and 1906, between the United States and Mexico, including not to exceed $600 for rent, $5,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask the chairman of the committee a question in reference to that item? I have no interest in it such as I had last year when a gentleman from my State occupied the office, but it seems to me as long as the law is in force we ought to appropriate enough to enable them to do some work.

Mr. LODGE. As long as the treaty is in force we have to make an appropriation sufficient to keep the commission alive. Last year we agreed to $5,000 as a sufficient amount. The House, which is the economical body in our system of Government, at the present time raised it to $10,000, and I thought I would bring it back to the amount of the appropriation of last year and find out in conference what is the necessity for the increased amount. I know of no reason why the sum given last year should be raised.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I said to the Senator, I think as long as we have the commission and as long as we have the law creating the commission we should appropriate enough to enable them to do some work.

Mr. LODGE. I agree; but the trouble is there have been no Mexican representatives, and nothing has been done as a matter of fact. The only way to deal with the Mexican boundary is to draw an arbitrary line.

Mr. McKELLAR. The chances are that we shall have Mexican representatives on the commission in the near future.

Mr. LODGE. As long as we undertake to use the river as a boundary it is very uncertain. The river is continually shifting, and endless surveys are necessary, and there is nothing staid. They have to have new negotiations for an arbitrary line. For the work that is being done I do not think there is any need of any more money than was appropriated last year. All I have done is to bring it back to the amount which was appropriated last year, after some debate, with a view, at least, of taking it to conference and asking why it should be doubled this year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 16, to insert:

BUREAU OF INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION FOR PROMOTION OF INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.

For the contribution of the United States toward the maintenance of the Bureau of the Interparliamentary Union for the promotion of International Arbitration at Brussels, Belgium, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 18, to insert:

UNITED STATES SECTION OF THE INTER-AMERICAN HIGH COMMISSION.

To defray the actual and necessary expenses on the part of the United States section of the Inter-American High Commission, $25,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee what that commission is?

Mr. LODGE. We passed a bill providing for it last year, which has made this appropriation necessary.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not know whether it is what we had been calling the Pan-American Commission heretofore or not.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no. We passed a bill, in which the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] was very much interested. The purpose of the commission is——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I merely wanted to know about the establishment of the commission. Is it a permanent affair?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes; it has been established by law. The law was passed, I think, last year. I think the bill was introduced by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if the Committee on Appropriations did not cut out this item?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know that formerly when they considered the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill they cut out a lot of items. I do not remember whether this was in the bill at that time or not. My impression is that it was not. I do not remember having seen before a commission with this name.

Mr. LODGE. It was appropriated for last year and was one of those things that went out in the House on a point of order, as they cut out the item for student interpreters.

Mr. JONES of Washingon. Is there any authority of law for it?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes; we passed a law providing for it and creating the commission.

Mr. KENYON. Is this the commission that went to South America?

Mr. LODGE. I can tell the Senator in a moment what is the purpose of it.

Dr. Rowe makes the following statement about the work of the commission:

The most important work the commission is able to do—and because of its special organization is peculiarly adapted to do—is to remove some of the obstacles and further closer financial and other cooperation throughout the Latin American countries, partly through securing uniform legislation. One of the great difficulties which the United States has always confronted has been a lack of organization in each of the Latin American countries working on this question of uniformity of legislation. We have now an organization which is elastic in the sense that in each country is a group of nine men, presided over by the minister of finance, all of whom are working on the same program.

Now, take the question of uniformity of laws relating to bills of lading, warehouse receipts, bills of exchange, and checks, which is a very important matter for our inter-American commerce to secure. We have taken the uniform bill of lading law which was worked out in the United States and had it translated and submitted it to those national sections in order to get their views as to whether that law, or that law with some amendments, could be made effective in their countries. They are at work upon it now. We can thereby secure greater uniformity of legislation without the handicaps which come when the United States, through official channels, suggests changes in domestic legislation of other countries. The same is true in connection with uniformity of laws relating to conditional sales, uniformity of laws relating to organization of corporations, and especially the operation of foreign corporations in those countries.

One of the things Senators may remember that was brought about by the commission was the ratification of several treaties getting rid of special taxes imposed on commercial travelers.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not know we had gotten rid of any taxes lately.

Mr. LODGE. We got rid of taxes in some other countries.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Leaving this country for the last. Can the Senator tell me how many members there are of this commission from each of the countries?

Mr. LODGE. I will tell the Senator; I have it here. The present membership of the United States section of the commission is as follows:

Hon. David F. Houston, Secretary of the Treasury, chairman.
Hon. John Bassett Moore, New York City, vice chairman.
John H. Fahey, Esq., Boston, Mass.
Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, Jacksonville, Fla.—

I am glad to see the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] in the Chamber at this moment—

Hon. Andrew J. Peters, Boston, Mass.—

He is the mayor of Boston—

Samuel Untermyer, Esq., New York City.
Hon. Paul M. Warburg, New York City.
John H. Wigmore, Esq., Chicago, Ill.
Herbert Fleishhacker, Esq., San Francisco, Calif.
Hon. L. S. Rowe, secretary general.
C. E. McGuire, assistant secretary general.
Guillermo A. Sherwell, juristic expert.

Mr. JONES of Washington. All these people are members of the commission?

Mr. LODGE. They are members of the commission.

Mr. JONES of Washington. From this country?

Mr. LODGE. From this country.

Mr. JONES of Washington. For what is this $25,000 to be expended—for salaries or for employees?

Mr. LODGE. In the House hearings there is a statement of—

Expenditures of United States section of the International High Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920.
Appropriation: United States section, International High Commission.
Salaries, wages——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not refer to the International High Commission, but to the Inter-American High Commission.

Mr. LODGE. The name has been changed, but it is the same commission. I am reading from the report submitted by the commission. The name of the commission was changed by law.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It was changed to what?

Mr. LODGE. To the Inter-American High Commission. I am reading from a tabulated statement of expenditures made by the United States section of the International High Commission, but the name has since been changed, as I have indicated.

If the Senator from Washington wants all the details, I will say that the original name of the commission was established by the act approved February 7, 1916, but it was changed by virtue of the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920 to the Inter-American High Commission. These are the expenses:

Salaries, wages, and other compensation for personal services currently rendered, $22,207.61.
Services other than personal——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Are there any annual salaries paid to the members of the commission?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think there are any fixed salaries at all.

Mr. FLETCHER. There are no salaries whatever paid to members of the commission.

Mr. LODGE. I think that $25,000 were appropriated last year. The appropriation for the commission began in 1916, and from February 15, 1916, to October, 1918, the expenditures were $40,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Is there nothing to determine the apportionment of the $25,000?

Mr. LODGE. An appropriation was made in public act 128 of the Sixty-fourth Congress, available October 1, 1918, to June 20, 1919, of $25,000. The next year the appropriation was the same. It has been in this bill for three or four years.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator from Washington that since then similar appropriations have been made for the commission year after year. It was finally discontinued by the Committee on Appropriations; and legislation since has, perhaps, changed the name of the commission and perhaps changed some of its duties. I think that is perhaps what the Senator from Washington has in mind.

Mr. LODGE. The legislation has been in this appropriation bill for two or three years. I think the commission was created by law, for I reported the bill out of my committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not familiar with the terms of the act. I am simply asking these questions for information.

Mr. LODGE. I can send for a copy of the act. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], who is more familiar with it than I am, can explain the act, I have no doubt, as he is a member of the commission.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida who apportions this appropriation of $25,000; who determines how it shall be paid; what salaries are to be paid, and to whom?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Secretary of the Treasury is ex officio chairman of the commission. This appropriation is intended simply to pay the clerical help in connection with the work of the American section of the commission.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Do the members of the commission who attend get any compensation for their services?

Mr. FLETCHER. The members of the commission receive no compensation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They get their traveling expenses, I suppose?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; they do not get those. I never have understood that they get anything at all.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What do they do?

Mr. FLETCHER. They meet here when they are called in session and the work of the International High Commission, which has now been changed to the Inter-American High Commission, is as set forth in Document No. 261 by Hon. John Bassett Moore. Their work is set forth in the document quite in detail.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the commission maintain offices here in Washington?

Mr. FLETCHER. They have offices here in the Treasury Building, but they do not rent any offices.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator refers to the American section?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; to the American section.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the Inter-American High Commission have annual meetings?

Mr. FLETCHER. They have annual conferences or meetings.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Where do they meet?

Mr. FLETCHER. They met the last time here in Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am referring now to the whole commission.

Mr. FLETCHER. I refer to the entire commission. I will say to the Senator from Washington that there are nine delegates from each of the 21 so-called Latin-American Republics. They met here last, but in 1916 they met in Buenos Aires.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Who paid the expenses of the American commissioners to Buenos Aires?

Mr. FLETCHER. I take it that on the occasion of such conventions the respective Governments pay the expenses of their delegates.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Could expenses of the commission of that kind be paid out of this $25,000?

Mr. FLETCHER. Not at all.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What is there to prevent it?

Mr. LODGE. The law would prevent that, I think.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is nothing in this appropriation to prevent it.

Mr. LODGE. That is provided for in the law creating the commission, which was reported from my committee. I will send for a copy of the law if the Senator wants it.

Mr. FLETCHER. An itemized statement is furnished of the expenditures under the appropriation; and there is no part of it that can be used for any expenses of the kind which the Senator from Washington suggests—for traveling or salaries or compensation of members of the commission or anything of that sort.

Mr. JONES of Washington. How often does the American section of the commission meet?

Mr. FLETCHER. They meet probably once a month and perhaps oftener. They are subject to call. Whenever any question comes up which needs to be considered a session is called and they act upon it. Then afterwards the action taken is transmitted to the various other sections representing the other Republics.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the law creating the commission fix the number of members on the part of the United States?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it does; that is my recollection. There are nine from each of the Republics, as I have stated.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Who appoints the commission?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Secretary of the Treasury, as I have stated, is ex officio chairman of the American section, and the other members are appointed by the President. The work of the commission, I may say, is set out, and without going into detail——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not wish the Senator to go into that. There were merely certain questions which I had in mind about which I desired information.

Mr. FLETCHER. This commission is engaged in very important work, I will say to the Senator, and they have accomplished some good results. Among other things they have established a patent office bureau in Cuba, for instance, so that, through the work which has been done by the commission and the convention which has followed it, a patent or a trade-mark can be recorded in Cuba, and also recorded throughout all of these associated Republics.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I remember about the patent matter; but my recollection is that that was arranged several years ago before this commission was created. I understand that the commission has only been created during the last two or three years.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; the last convention created the patent bureau at Habana, Cuba, which was established very recently, last year, I think.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, the Senator is mistaken about that, because that matter came before the Commerce Committee either before the war or while the war was going on.

Mr. FLETCHER. I can not name the exact date, but I know it is a new undertaking, and grew out of the work of the commission. The commission was established in 1913, as I recall.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to say that it was created in 1916.

Mr. FLETCHER. The year 1913 was the beginning of it, I think.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand there is one member on the commission from San Francisco. Does he visit here every month?

Mr. FLETCHER. He does not usually attend the sessions here.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Would he have his expenses paid if he should come here?

Mr. FLETCHER. No, he would not; there is no provision for that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. How can we expect to get any very good service from a commission of this kind with men scattered all over the United States if we can not get them here?

Mr. FLETCHER. The commission is composed of men many of whom can come to Washington to attend its sessions. For instance, there is Dr. Moore, of Columbia University; Mr. Peters, of Boston; and Mr. Untermeyer, of New York, who are readily accessible to Washington. The Secretary of the Treasury, as I have said, is ex officio member, and then there is Dr. Rowe, who is now director of the Pan American Union, and who resides in Washington; in fact, nearly all of them are convenient to Washington.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations was, on page 18, line 21, after the numerals "1909," to strike out "$38,000" and insert "$50,000," so as to read:

WATERWAYS TREATY, UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN: INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION, UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN.

For salaries and expenses, including salaries of commissioners and salaries of clerks and other employees appointed by the commissioners on the part of the United States, with the approval solely of the Secretary of State, expense of printing, cost of law books, books of reference, and periodicals, and necessary traveling expenses, and for one-half of all reasonable and necessary joint expenses of the International Joint Commission incurred under the terms of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain concerning the use of boundary waters between the United States and Canada, and for other purposes, signed January 11, 1909, $50,000, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I was not present at the meeting of the committee at which this amount was raised. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee why the appropriation has been increased?

Mr. LODGE. It was increased in order to preserve the present rate of salaries.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As I recall, last year we reduced the appropriation.

Mr. LODGE. We did not reduce the salaries.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is this $50,000 required to pay salaries?

Mr. LODGE. I think it is.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Was not the appropriation for last year $38,000?

Mr. LODGE. The appropriation last year was $46,000, and there are some additional expenses which it is necessary to incur which would not be sufficiently covered by the appropriation of last year, as we were informed by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], who, as the Senator is aware, has been made a member of the commission.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I realize that; but my recollection is that last year we entered into a sort of an understanding that we would endeavor to reduce these unnecessary expenses, and we agreed in the committee at that time to a reduction in the appropriations rather than to an abolition of the commissions.

Mr. LODGE. We did; we reduced the appropriation in the case of the Mexican Boundary Commission to $5,000, although this year the House has raised it to $10,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The bill as reported by the Senate committee reduces that appropriation to $5,000, but raises the appropriation for the International Joint Commission from $38,000 to $50,000.

Mr. LODGE. The Senate committee increased the amount as carried in the House bill, that is true, but the appropriation is only $4,000 in excess of the appropriation of last year.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is an increase of $12,000, though, over the House figures.

Mr. LODGE. The same question arose in the House last year in regard to increasing or decreasing the salaries of the commissioners.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I presume the Senator has looked into the matter.

Mr. LODGE. If the necessary expenses are to be paid and no increase is granted, there will be involved a decrease in the salaries paid.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I presume the Senator is more familiar with the activities of the commission than am I, but I am wondering whether they are such as to justify so large an expenditure.

Mr. LODGE. They have done some very important work although they have only occasional cases. They had some very important cases during the past year.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, the commissioners on the part of this country have to sit with those of Canada, so that there is involved not only the pay of the commissioners, but traveling expenses as well. The Canadian Government on its side pays its own expenses and the United States Government pays the expenses incurred by its commissioners.

Mr. LODGE. I can give the Senator some facts about it. According to the testimony before the House committee, there have been 17 cases referred to the commission by the joint action of the two Governments, of which three are still pending. There was a case involving the St. Mary and Milk Rivers and their tributaries in Montana, a case initiated by the commission under article 6 of the treaty. It was made the duty of the commission to measure and apportion those waters.

The case of the St. Lawrence Power Co. was referred to the commission by the two Governments, and also the case of the New York & Ontario Power Co. Furthermore, there was one decision, on which I can not now put my hand, but as the result of the settlement of that case by the commission there has been an annual payment of $67,000 to the United States. I have here a chronological abstract of the meetings during the calendar year 1920, if the Senator from Nebraska would care to hear them.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I was more desirous of knowing whether the Senator had investigated so as to feel satisfied that the proposed increase in the appropriation was justified. I thought that what was sufficient for last year would probably be sufficient for the ensuing year.

Mr. LODGE. I thought it was proper that the present salaries should be maintained. If we reduce the appropriation to the House figure, it will be necessary to reduce the salaries of the commission.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I presume the members of the commission are not greatly overworked from what the Senator said, having, as I understand, about one case a year.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, that is all the Senator knows about it. I hardly expected that sort of criticism from such a source.

If there is no objection and if the Senate will bear with me, I desire to say a few words regarding this matter. I do not care to take the time of the Senate, but I have formulated a statement of the duties that will probably fall on the commission for the ensuing year, as well as a recital of the labors it has already performed in the years gone by, and the attitude held by both the Canadian Government and our own Government toward the commission.

Mr. LODGE. I think, if the Senator will allow me, that is all printed in the hearings of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. No; the hearings did not develop the points which I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Perhaps the House hearings did not cover all of them.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I deem it my duty to call attention of the Senate, and especially the attention of the conference committee on the diplomatic appropriation bill, to the House provision and the Senate amendment, as proposed by the Foreign Relations Committee, in the matter of the International Joint Commission. The House made an appropriation of only $38,000 for the whole expenses of the commission for the year.

Fiscal year 1922.

Estimated for International Joint Commission		$60,000
Amount carried in bill as passed by House		38,000
Estimated expenditures, July 1–June 30, 1921–22:
1. Salaries:
Three commissioners, at $7,500	$22,500
One secretary	4,000
One clerk	2,050
	28,550
2. Miscellaneous clerical help	1,250
	29,800
3. Printing report on St. Lawrence River navigation and power investigation, $10,000, of which the United States will pay one-half	5,000
Making a total of		34,800
4. Leaving a balance available for all other purposes, including transportation, subsistence, reporting hearings, stationery, miscellaneous printing, telegraph and telephone charges, office supplies and equipment, and other miscellaneous items, of		3,200
No provision is made for rent of office space in the District of Columbia.
If rent at the present rate were allowed, at		3,000
The balance available for purposes itemized in paragraph 4 would amount to only		200

This in the light of the fact that by a decision of the commission several years ago in the Northern Power Co. case, at Sault Ste. Marie, the United States is getting $66,000 annually and will continue to get it for 30 years to come and then own the property.

The Canadian Government deems the commission of such use and importance that it yearly appropriates $75,000 and leaves such sum entirely in the hands of its members of the commission to be expended by them in their discretion. Ample room is provided at the headquarters of Canadian commission, while our commissioners have virtually no room at all either for the working use of any of the commissioners and no proper place for the hearings which must be frequently had in this city. The commission will meet in this city in April next to transact business of importance. We have no place in any degree adequate for this meeting. Only three small rooms, and each filled with records, desks, boxes containing papers, books, memoranda, and the like, a table, chairs, and so forth. For such quarters we are paying the outrageous sum of $3,000 a year, which is more than was charged for six rooms before the war. Hence the Senate committee has provided for rent of proper rooms in the District of Columbia, in case adequate quarters can not be secured in a Government-owned building.

The important duties of the commission are not fully appreciated by Congress, but fully known to the Canadian Government. A vacancy occurred in the commission by the death of Gov. Glenn in May last, since which time no action by the commission has been taken as a full membership must be present at the time of any decision by it.

There are very important international questions before the commission for decision, and others will soon be presented as now seems certain. For instance, the Red River of the North has its source at Breckenridge, Minn., and is the boundary between that State and North Dakota, and empties into Lake Winnipeg, Canada. From source to boundary line it is 400 miles.

"An act (Public, No. 277, 66th Cong.) approved June 5, 1920, authorizes the construction of flood-control and improvement works in Boise de Sioux River, the Red River of the North, and Lake Traverse, between the States of Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota.

"This construction is contemplated to be done by the Tri-State Flood Control Association.

"This association, by resolution of December 16, 1920, requested the Department of State to submit the question of flood control to the International Joint Commission. Gov. Lynn Frazier, of North Dakota, in transmitting the resolution to the Secretary of State, states that he is convinced that the matter is of great enough importance to be considered by the International Joint Commission.

"The United States section of the commission has been requested to advise the Secretary of State with reference to the character and importance of this contemplated improvement, with a view to its reference to the commission."

The St. Mary and Milk River controversies are still pending, as is also the New York & Ontario Power Co. case. The St. Lawrence River Power Co. application has had only an interim approval. The St. Lawrence River case has the following history and is still pending:

"17. St. Lawrence River navigation and power investigation.

"Section 9 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1919, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes' (Public, No. 323, 65th Cong., 2d sess.), reads as follows:

"'SEC. 9. That the International Joint Commission created by the treaty between the United States and Great Britain relating to boundary waters between the United States and Canada, signed at Washington January 11, 1909, under the provisions of article 9 of said treaty, is requested to investigate what further improvement of the St. Lawrence River between Montreal and Lake Ontario is necessary to make the same navigable for ocean-going vessels, together with the estimated cost thereof, and report to the Government of the Dominion of Canada and to the Congress of the United States, with its recommendations for cooperation by the United States with the Dominion of Canada in the improvement of said river.'

"The Governments of the United States and the Dominion of Canada each appointed a representative to confer and prepare the questions involved in the form of a reference by the two Governments to the International Joint Commission. The reference was received by the commission on January 22, 1920. The questions referred for investigation are as follows:

"1. What further improvement in the St. Lawrence River, between Montreal and Lake Ontario, is necessary to make the same navigable for deep-draught vessels of either the lake or ocean going type; what draught of water is recommended; and what is the estimated cost?

"In answering this question, the commission is requested to consider—

"(a) Navigation interests alone, whether by the construction of locks and dams in the river, by side canals with the necessary locks, or by a combination of the two.

"(b) The combination of navigation and power interests to obtain the greatest beneficial use of the waters of the river.

"2. Which of the schemes submitted by the Government or other engineers is preferable, and why?

"3. Under what general method of procedure and in what general order shall the various physical and administrative features of the improvement be carried out?

"4. Upon what basis shall the capital cost of the completed improvement be apportioned to each country?

"5. Upon what basis shall the costs of operation and maintenance be apportioned to each country?

"6. What method of control is recommended for the operation of the improved waterway to secure its most beneficial use?

"7. Will regulating Lake Ontario increase the low-water flow in the St. Lawrence ship channel below Montreal? And if so, to what extent and at what additional cost?

"8. To what extent will the improvement develop the resources, commerce, and industry of each country?

"9. What traffic, both incoming and outgoing, in kind and quantity, is likely to be carried upon the proposed route, both at its inception and in the future? Consideration to be given not only to present conditions but to probable changes therein resulting from the development of industrial activities, due to availability of large quantities of hydraulic power.

"The reference requires that one engineer be appointed by each Government, from its engineering personnel, to prepare outline plans, with estimates of cost of the proposed work, and report to the commission within one year from the date of their appointment. The United States engineer was appointed on January 30, 1920, and the Canadian engineer on April 14, 1920.

"The commission is requested in the reference to submit its report to the two Governments within three months after the receipt of the engineers' report.

"The reference also requests the commission to hold such public hearings as may be considered necessary or advisable in order to obtain all information bearing directly or indirectly on the physical, commercial, and economic feasibility of the project as a whole.

"The commission began its investigation of questions 8 and 9 in March, holding public hearings in the following cities on the dates indicated:

"Some 8,000 typewritten pages of testimony have thus far been taken on these questions, together with a large volume of statistical matter, which is being considered by the commission. Further hearings on these two questions, as well as on the other questions referred, will be held in order to develop the requisite information upon which to base the report of the commission."

The foregoing is given as an example of the necessary labor involved in ascertaining the essential facts in cases submitted and the time and labor consumed in proper consideration of them.

Summarizing what has been done by the commission we find cases reported to the respective Governments, 3; cases approved by commission, 9; cases dismissed, 1; cases withdrawn after hearing, 1; cases now pending, 3.

It is enough to say, in justification of the commission, that during the few years of its existence it has, without leaving any resentment behind, settled and finally disposed of more controverted questions between the two Governments and the citizens thereof than has otherwise been settled since the formation of our Government, and all that without costing the Treasury one dollar.

In an address delivered in Boston before the Victorian Club about one year ago, Mr. Burpee, a distinguished Canadian citizen, taking as the subject of his address "A successful experiment in international relations," took occasion to go fully into the value of the labor performed and the good results to both nations flowing from the International Joint Commission, and in closing his address, after giving a history of the delays of the old diplomacy and the bitternesses engendered by these delays, said:

"Meanwhile, bitterness of feeling has been allowed to grow between two groups of people, separated only by an invisible boundary, and with every reason in the world for a neighborly attitude toward one another.

"One need not labor the point that this tribunal, open as freely to the humblest citizen of either country as to the representatives of the Federal Governments, marks a big step forward in the relations of these two neighboring Commonwealths; and it does seem to me that the true measure of the commission's usefulness to the people of the United States and Canada lies not even so much in its positive as in its negative qualities, not so much in the cases it has actually settled as in the infinitely larger number of cases that never come before it for consideration, simply because the commission is there, as a sort of international safety valve, and therefore the sting is taken out of the situation."

Mr. President, I am soon to become a member of the International Joint Commission. I have no desire to draw, for my own use, money from the Treasury without a feeling that I had justly earned it by faithful, efficient service. I have looked into the duties and responsibilities of the commission deep enough to know that any member of it who performs those duties well will not only earn his pay but also the gratitude of the two nations concerned.

"One may not perhaps realize at first the very unusual character of this tribunal. There is nothing else quite like it, nor has there been in the past. We have here three Americans and three Canadians, sitting not as national sections, more or less antagonistic, but as one judicial body, and pledged to give their best possible judgment, with the utmost impartiality, to the settlement of questions that arise sometimes on one side of the boundary and sometimes on the other. It is significant of the sympathetic attitude of Canadians and Americans toward each other and toward their common problems, that in every case dealt with by the commission since its organization the decision has been unanimous.

"The work of promoting closer and more direct relations between the two great peoples on this continent who have the same language, come from the same race, have the same common fountain of law, the same traditions, and similar institutions of government, as well as the same ambitions for the continued success of their respective Governments, is in fact the work of blazing the trail for the judicial settlement of all disputes where they occur between any two great nations.

"The chief cause for congratulation, however, is that this treaty has provided a means for frank, direct, and constant relations between the two neighboring peoples who inhabit the greater part of the North American Continent, and who must live in amicable relations to realize the ultimate ideal of our Anglo-Saxon civilization. This commission constitutes the medium for this direct communication, and to it, by the express terms of the treaty, may be referred for consideration and settlement all questions of difference that may arise between the peoples living along our common frontier, without reservations or qualifications of any kind.

"Mr. Taft and the late Col. Roosevelt, among others on the United States side of the line, the Duke of Connaught, the Duke of Devonshire, the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and Sir Robert Borden on the Canadian side, have on various occasions drawn the attention of the public to the importance and significance of the treaty of 1909 and of the work intrusted to the International Joint Commission. During one of the recent discussions at the peace congress in connection with the organization of the International Waterways Commission, it is understood that Sir Robert Borden made particular reference to the jurisdiction of this commission as an illustration of what might be accomplished in connection with such European rivers of an international character as the Rhine and the Danube."

The American Journal of International Law has time and again referred in highest praise of the treaty of 1909, negotiated in Washington between Mr. Bryce, representing England, and Mr. Root, Secretary of State, and has often congratulated both nations on the creation of the International Joint Commission and the successful results of its labor. The existence of the commission with power to act is worth far more than it costs if only one case a year came before it. Everybody seems satisfied except our Congress, where it has been proposed to cut off the appropriation to the point of preventing any investigation by the commission.

This is very humiliating to the United States members of the commission, who would be unable to bear their part of any joint expense, and discourteous to Canada.

The Canadian commission receives $75,000 a year to be expended in its discretion. The House has voted the sum of $38,000 a year for expenses of our commission.

As I have shown at the beginning of these remarks, that sum, after paying salaries and clerk hire and our part of printing evidence already taken, and the rent, now of necessity being paid, leaves the commission the whole full sum of $200 to pay for transportation and subsistence when absent on official business, reporting hearings, stationery, miscellaneous printing, telegraph and telephone charges, office supplies and equipment, and the dozens of other small miscellaneous expenses incident to any business.

The commission should have $60,000. It can not function on less than $50,000, which is $25,000 less than Canada, less able than we, willingly pays to her members.

Let us at least respect our treaty obligations.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, can the Senator put in the RECORD a statement of what the commission actually did during the current year?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes, sir; I will submit the whole list.

Mr. LODGE. That is all printed in the House hearings.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes; I think it is.

Mr. LODGE. Every meeting of the commission is set out there.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to have it put in the RECORD, if possible, because this question has come up every year, and the impression has been current that the commission was not doing anything, and that these offices were mere sinecures, and that the expense was largely an unnecessary one. If the commission is rendering valuable service, it ought to be shown, and the RECORD ought to show it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I should think the mere statement of fact that we have made a treaty and it has gone on this long to the infinite satisfaction of both Governments and has resulted in the settlement of many of these cases to which reference is made in the hearings would be sufficient. I ask that that list be printed in the RECORD in connection with what I have said.

Mr. LODGE. There is a complete list of all the meetings of the commission on page 39 of the House hearings, showing exactly what the commission did.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I ask to have that printed.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator asks to have it printed with his remarks?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I ask that it be printed in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHRONOLOGICAL ABSTRACT OF MEETINGS DURING THE CALENDAR YEAR 1920.

Boston, Mass., January 13, 1920: At request of interested parties, conference was held at Boston with Chairman Gardner regarding procedure in the matter of the remonstrance by residents of the city of Newport, Vt., and of other localities in the vicinity of Lake Memphremagog with respect to flowage damage caused by raising the crest of a dam at the outlet of the said lake.

New York, N. Y., February 11, 1920: Commission met at New York, all members being present except Mr. Clark, who was delayed by impaired train service.

Matters considered: Draft treaty regarding pollution of boundary waters.

New York, N. Y., February 12, 1920: Commission met at New York; all members present.

Matters considered: Draft treaty regarding pollution of boundary waters; St. Lawrence River navigation and power investigation.

New York, N. Y., February 13, 1920: Commission met at New York; all members present.

Matters considered: Draft treaty, pollution of boundary waters; measurement and apportionment of the waters of St. Mary and Milk Rivers in the State of Montana and Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan; St. Lawrence River navigation and power investigation.

New York, N. Y., February 14, 1920: Commission met at New York; all members present.

Matters considered: Draft treaty, pollution of boundary waters.

Buffalo, N. Y., March 1, 1920: Commission met at Buffalo; all members present.

Matters considered: St. Lawrence River navigation and power investigation.

Buffalo, N. Y., March 2, 1920: Commission met at Buffalo; all members present.

Matters considered: St. Lawrence River navigation and power investigation.

Washington, D. C., April 6, 1920: Commission met at Washington, D. C.; all members present.

Matters considered: St. Mary and Milk Rivers case; St. Lawrence River navigation and power investigation; draft treaty, pollution of boundary waters.

Washington, D. C., April 7, 1920: Commission met at Washington; all members present.

Matters considered: Draft treaty, pollution of boundary waters; St. Mary and Milk Rivers case; St. Lawrence River navigation and power investigation.

Ottawa, Ontario, May 3, 1920: Commission met at Ottawa; all members present except Mr. Glenn.

Matters considered: Draft treaty, pollution of boundary waters; St. Mary and Milk Rivers case. Reargument began in St. Mary and Milk Rivers case.

Ottawa, Ontario, May 4, 1920: Commission met at Ottawa; all members present except Mr. Glenn.

Matters considered: Resignation of secretary of United States section; continuation of reargument in St. Mary and Milk Rivers case.

Ottawa, Ontario, May 5, 1920: Commission met at Ottawa; all members present except Mr. Glenn.

Matters considered: St. Lawrence River navigation and power investigation. Conclusion in reargument in St. Mary and Milk Rivers case.

Ottawa, Ontario, May 6, 1920: Commission met at Ottawa; all members present except Mr. Glenn.

Matters considered: St. Lawrence River navigation and power investigation.

North Bay, Ontario, May 7, 1920: Commission met at North Bay to begin hearings in St. Lawrence River navigation and power investigation; all members present.

Beginning on this date and continuing for 41 days without adjournment, the commission conducted hearings in the St. Lawrence River navigation and power investigation, covering territory westward from North Bay, Ontario, to Calgary and eastward from Boise and Cheyenne, closing the series of hearings at Buffalo June 15.

The death of Mr. Glenn at Winnipeg, Manitoba, on May 16, created a vacancy in the United States section.

Portland, Me., September 10, 1920: At the request of interested parties Chairman Gardner held conferences at Portland regarding hearings in St. Lawrence River navigation and power investigation.

Ottawa, Ontario, October 5, 1920: Commission met at Ottawa; present, Messrs. Powell, Clark, Gardner, and Sir William Hearst.

Matters considered: St. Lawrence River navigation and power investigation; St. Mary and Milk Rivers case.

Ottawa, Ontario, October 6, 1920: Commission met at Ottawa; members present as on October 5.

Matters considered: St. Mary and Milk Rivers case; draft treaty in pollution of boundary waters matter, transmitted to the two Governments; St. Lawrence River navigation and power investigation.

Montreal, Quebec, October 8, 1920: Commission met at Montreal; present, Messrs. Gardner, Clark, Powell, and Sir William Hearst.

Chairman Magrath, of the Canadian section, joined the commission at Kingston, Ontario.

Beginning at Montreal, October 8, and continuing for 27 days without adjournment, the commission conducted hearings in the St. Lawrence River navigation and power investigation, covering territory from Montreal and New York on the east to Minneapolis, Minn., on the west, thence eastward, including Chicago and Indianapolis, closing the series at Cleveland on November 3.

New York, N. Y., December 6, 1920: Commissioners Clark and Sir William Hearst met at New York to hear certain witnesses in the St. Lawrence River navigation and power investigation.

Portland, Me., December 15, 1920: At request of interested parties Chairman Gardner held conferences at Portland regarding hearings on St. Lawrence River navigation and power investigation.

Washington, D. C., December 28, 1920: Conference between Chairman Gardner, Commissioner Clark, and representative of United States Reclamation Service regarding St. Mary and Milk Rivers case.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I formerly entertained the same idea of this commission that many of the Senators do, because I had never had any occasion to inquire into it. If I shall take a position on that body, there are 8,000 pages of testimony in a pending case that I shall have to read and digest as far as I am able to do so. In addition to that, the intricate cases of the St. Marys River and the Milk River are still pending. They are of great importance to both countries and their settlement is extremely essential to good feeling between the two peoples.

As I said, at one time I entertained the same view that the Senator has referred to; but since I have come to look into it and have taken occasion to inquire into it, I find not only that the commission is a very important one but that there is a great deal of work connected with it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations was, on page 19, line 2, after the words "official business," to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That a part of this appropriation may be expended for rent of offices for the commission in the District of Columbia, in the event that the Public Buildings Commission is unable to supply suitable office space.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 21, to insert:

INTERNATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL.

To pay the annual share of the United States, as an adhering member of the International Research Council and of the Associated Unions, organized at Brussels, July 18–28, 1919, as follows: International Research Council, $129; International Astronomical Union, $772; International Union of Pure and Applied Chemistry, $290; International Union of Geodesy and Geophysics, $1,338; International Union of Mathematics, $129; in all, $2,658, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not the International Research Council is organized under any treaty?

Mr. LODGE. All these associated unions were organized at Brussels. They are all scientific bodies. We have been a member of all of them. During the war there was an interference with the meetings of these different associations. This is a mere consolidation of the small contributions which we are bound by treaty agreement to make. We have consolidated them under this one head.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This council seems to have been organized in July, 1919.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; since the war they were brought together under this one head.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I take it, however, that we are not bound by a treaty agreement. Under what authority of law are any agreements of this kind made when they are not pursuant to a treaty?

Mr. LODGE. I understood that these were all treaty obligations. We have been carrying many of them, I know, as separate things. I will read the testimony. Dr. Kellogg was asked:

I wish, Dr. Kellogg, that for the sake of the completeness of the record, you would indicate in a general way the status of the National Research Council and of these national unions, which I understand are organizations of the United States.

Mr. KELLOGG. National sections?

Mr. ROGERS. National sections; yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. Well, the National Research Council itself was established during the war. It was established for the purpose of mobilizing the scientific resources in laboratories for the aid of the Government in connection with war-time problems which were based, really, on science and scientific investigations. So, as an offshoot of the National Academy of Sciences, which has a congressional charter, this body called the "National Research Council" was instituted. And it was very active in getting the cooperation of scientific men and university laboratories all over the country for the purposes of applying all the resources of American science to the solution of these special war-time problems that involved science.

At the conclusion of the war the council had been so successful in its work that the President issued an Executive order in May, 1918, asking the council to perpetuate itself as a peace-time organization, to be in a position to give the Government advice and assistance whenever called on by the Government in connection with any of the problems that might come up that involved scientific investigations.

And so, pursuant to this Executive order, the council was reorganized on a peace-time basis, but is no longer supported by the Government. Its support comes from private sources; it receives gifts for its administrative expenses. It has received a gift, or has been promised a gift, for the erection of a building as headquarters of the National Academy of Sciences and the National Research Council, and gifts for the development of specific scientific projects, and especially those of national importance, whose solution would help the national welfare.

Then he goes on to explain the gifts which have been made, and he says:

Our yearly budget is about $200,000 plus $100,000 a year for five years for national fellowships.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That gives the information that I desired.

Mr. LODGE. These are the contributions made by the United States or agreed to by the United States under the order of the President, as I understand.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; that is the way I understand it. I do not think, however, that the President can bind us indefinitely to membership in any organization.

Mr. LODGE. Some of them are different, as I remember. I was speaking from memory. Mr. Rogers says:

We have here and there associations of one kind or another for which we have been appropriating for years and are still asked to appropriate, such as the International Bureau of Weights and Measures.

That is a treaty agreement, I know.

The International Bureau for the Publication of Customs Tariffs.

That is another.

The International Bureau at Brussels for the Suppression of the African Slave Trade.

That is another.

The International Prison Commission——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; but those are not included in this item at all.

Mr. LODGE. No; they are not.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They are separate items.

Mr. LODGE. He says the Bureau of Weights and Measures is very much alive. Of course we have a separate appropriation for that in this bill.

Mr. WARREN. You get the estimates for it from the State Department?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; they are State Department estimates. They are all estimated for. We pay these sums as a member of these different scientific organizations, and Dr. Walcott, the secretary of the Smithsonian, appeared before the committee in behalf of it, as did also the president of the Carnegie Institute. It is simply our adhering membership; that is all.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I take it this is not pursuant to any treaty at all?

Mr. LODGE. I do not see that it is.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know it was the policy of the Senate two or three years ago to strike out items which were not required by reason of treaty conventions. I am not going to ask to strike this out. I really do not like to see the Senate putting such items into the bill unless there is some treaty obligation to do so. Whenever the Executive or the Secretary of State or the diplomatic organization of the Government thinks some organization ought to be formed and they go ahead and form it, then they send an estimate for an appropriation to Congress. I do not think that ought to be encouraged.

Mr. LODGE. We pay for the publication, as I understand it. It is thought to be very valuable, and that we should be a member. Of course the cost of it is a hundred thousand dollars a year, which is paid for by private subscription. But it is thought desirable that we should have our share in all these scientific councils. It was reported by the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, and was in the bill as reported to the Committee of the Whole House, but went out on a point of order, as so many other items did, some of them items similar to those which have been in this bill for 40 years.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish we had a rule by which it could go out of here on a point of order, but we have no rule under which, if a matter is reported by a standing committee or has been estimated for, a point of order will lie. So a point of order can not be made against this item. I do not think we ought to permit these things until Congress authorizes them. Whenever a department of the Government thinks an agreement of any kind ought to be entered into, it seems to me it ought to be submitted to Congress and ratified before we go into it. But that does not seem to be the policy of the Government.

Mr. LODGE. I agree with the Senator that it is a bad method of doing business; but this agreement has been made. I should like to take it into conference and see what the House has to say about it, as it originated there.

On a division the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 9, after the word "legation" to strike out "building" and insert "buildings," and in line 10, after the word "grounds" to strike out "At San Salvador," so as to make the heading read:

Embassy and legation buildings and grounds.

Mr. LODGE. I have an amendment to offer to the amendment, which is a mere change of language. On lines 9 and 10, page 21, I move to amend the title so as to read:

Embassy, legation and consular buildings and grounds.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 20, to strike out:

The Secretary of State is hereby authorized to accept the gift of the residence of J. P. Morgan in London, England, which has been offered to the Government of the United States as a residence for the American ambassador.

And in lieu to insert:

The President is hereby authorized to accept, on behalf of the United States, for use as a residence by the diplomatic representatives of the United States, the land and buildings thereon known as Nos. 13–14 Prince's Gate in the city of London, England, and such other lands and buildings as form a part of said property, presented by J. Pierpont Morgan: Provided, That the transfer of said property to the United States shall be unconditional and shall not impose restrictions upon subsequent sale, transfer, or use: And provided further, That the property is held on freehold tenure and not on customary London ground lease and that said property has no mortgage or other encumbrance or liability upon it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to ask a question about that amendment. Of course, my first impression with reference to a matter of that kind was against the Government accepting a gift of this sort. I have long been in favor of the Government acquiring proper and adequate embassy buildings; in the different important cities of the world, at any rate. But we have not done so. It does not look just right that we should be put in the position of apparently having to depend upon private donations for Government embassy buildings in those countries. Probably that is not the right position to take. But what I wanted to ask the Senator was as to the value of this property.

Mr. LODGE. These houses were the property of Mr. Junius Morgan, the grandfather of the present Mr. Morgan, and were afterwards occupied, and I think one of them added, by the late John Pierpont Morgan. He kept his collections there in London and lived there himself. The price he paid for the houses was something over £30,000, $150,000, as the exchange was then.

Mr. JONES of Washington. So that from the information the Senator has the value of this property is not very much, if any, in excess of what may be paid at other capitals for embassy buildings.

Mr. LODGE. No; that is the allowance made.

Mr. JONES of Washington. So that the cost of maintaining and running these buildings, after we do accept them, will probably not be more than in the other cities?

Mr. LODGE. I would like to state to the Senator on that point that I am familiar with these two houses. I have not seen them for a long time, but I do know where they are. They are very well situated, and they are suitable houses. They will have to be thrown together—that is, opened up one into the other; but the two together would make a very suitable and proper embassy, amply large enough, but not ostentatious or extravagant. They correspond very well to such a house as Mr. Choate had on Carlton House Terrace, a house any of us would think appropriate for an American embassy, but it did not have the splendor which characterized some other houses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 13, to insert:

For the acquisition of embassy, legation, or consular buildings and grounds at any or all of the following places: Paris, Rome, Brussels, Berlin, Athens, Belgrade, Bucharest, Prague, Monrovia, Vienna, Budapest, Canton, Hankow, and Amoy, $300,000: Provided, That the limit of cost shall not exceed the sum of $150,000 at any one place: And provided further, That such acquisition shall be subject to the approval of the commission hereinafter constituted.

Mr. LODGE. I move to amend that by inserting, after the word "Berlin," the word "Christiania."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 22, line 16, after the word "Berlin" and the comma, insert the word "Christiania" and a comma.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would like to ask the Senator with reference to this paragraph. I know in the House text they provide for land and buildings in Paris, $150,000. So, why should that be included in this paragraph?

Mr. LODGE. It is unnecessary to include Paris here.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Would it not be wise to leave it out?

Mr. LODGE. I think so, because the other has been agreed to. I ask that Paris be left out, because that is provided for. I had not thought of that. It obviously ought to come out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment to the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 22, line 16, in the committee amendment, strike out the word "Paris" and the comma.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill about the amendment we have just agreed to. I see that $300,000 is to be appropriated for the building or purchasing of embassies and legations and other consular buildings at 14 different places, with a minimum cost of $150,000. I suppose there is some plan in reference to the matter, but surely we could not get——

Mr. LODGE. This is based on the general law which was passed some years ago—I will have the date of it in a moment—providing for the expenditure of $500,000 annually for the acquisition of buildings, with a limitation of $150,000. This was suggested by the House to the committee, with a limitation of $300,000, $200,000 less than the general law limit, in the hope that under present conditions we could get some very desirable embassy and legation buildings. There are a good many for sale just at the present time at very moderate prices.

Mr. McKELLAR. In some of the European capitals this would be an appropriate time to buy.

Mr. LODGE. It is an appropriate time to buy. The rest of the amendment, the Senator will see, is designed to enable us to provide ourselves with some embassy and legation buildings and have the cost charged up to debts that are due to us, which we might not recover in any other way.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator if it is thought that it is possible to purchase embassies and legations or consular buildings in all these places for $300,000?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no.

Mr. HARRISON. I was thinking that if we could do that they would be great bargains.

Mr. LODGE. This was only to give them a chance to buy where they found a good opportunity to buy.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand the plan is to enable us to credit them with what they owe us, in purchasing embassy and legation buildings in a country that owes us.

Mr. LODGE. That is covered by the rest of it.

Mr. HARRISON. But if the whole paragraph should be written into the law, you have a limit that in no event shall the buildings cost over $300,000?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; they can not go over that amount in any one case.

Mr. HARRISON. It might be possible for the commission that is designated here to purchase consular buildings or embassies at all these places, but it would cost a great deal more than $300,000.

Mr. LODGE. It is limited to the coming fiscal year, absolutely.

Mr. HARRISON. There is no limit of cost except $150,000 to each one?

Mr. LODGE. That is all.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts stated a moment ago that we might by this plan get a portion of the foreign debts paid to us that we could not get in any other way. I hope the Senator does not mean to say any of those debts ought to be remitted?

Mr. LODGE. I did not mean to impugn the credit of any country at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not impugn the credit, but I hope the Senator does not think that any of those debts ought to be relinquished.

Mr. LODGE. How does the Senator mean?

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope, in making the statement that perhaps we might not be able to get some of our foreign debts paid in any other way, the Senator did not mean to express the view that those debts ought to be remitted.

Mr. LODGE. I only said that in a humorous way when I spoke about getting it in no other way. I think it is pretty generally known that I am not in favor of canceling debts.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to hear the Senator express himself in that way.

The next amendment was on page 22, after line 21, to insert:

There is hereby constituted a commission composed of the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of the Treasury, of which the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate shall be the chairman, whose duty it shall be to consider and formulate plans or proposals for the purchase of embassy, legation, and consular buildings and grounds under the authority contained in this act.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask one question as to the provision that has just been read? I notice in forming the commission that the chairman is to be the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is also provided that the Secretary of State shall be a member of the commission. Why is it that the chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations is placed over the Secretary of State as chairman of this particular commission?

Mr. LODGE. In reply to the Senator, I have to say that this particular amendment was prepared by the House Committee on Foreign Affairs for submission to the House. It is not the work of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask, if it had been the work of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, would they have placed the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations over the Secretary of State as chairman of the commission?

Mr. LODGE. I rather think the reason for the position being given to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations by the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House is because those committees make the appropriations.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to suggest that this is an amendment presented by the Foreign Relations Committee, and it evidently has indorsed the arrangement.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes; we do not object to the House draft.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator from Mississippi that I think this is perfectly correct. If I had drafted the provision myself, I would have put it just the way it is now.

Mr. HARRISON. I am not finding fault with it.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senate of the United States makes Secretaries of State, but Secretaries of State do not make the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. I merely think it places the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations higher, almost, than the Secretary of State.

Mr. SMOOT. It is a higher position.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 7, to insert:

With the approval of said commission and within a limit of cost at any one place of $150,000, the Secretary of State shall have power to purchase from any foreign Government suitable embassy, legation, and consular buildings and grounds in any city specified in the foregoing paragraph and to effect payment therefor by causing the purchase price thereof to be credited upon the obligations or debts of such Government then held by or owing to the United States, or by causing a part of such purchase price so to be credited, paying the remainder in money from applicable sums hereinbefore appropriated for the acquisition of embassy, legation, and consular buildings and grounds; and when the Secretary of State shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury that a purchase has been made, the Government from which made, and that a part or all of the purchase price is to be paid by crediting the same upon obligations or debts of said Government then held by or owing to the United States, the date as of which said payment is to be made and the amount in United States dollars so to be credited, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to credit the amount so certified upon unpaid principal or interest of obligations or debts of said foreign Government held by the United States: And provided further, That the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to accept on behalf of the United States unconditional gifts of land, buildings, furniture, and furnishings, or any of them, for the use of diplomatic and consular offices and residences.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 20, to increase the appropriation for salaries of consuls general, consuls, and vice consuls from "$1,774,500" to "$1,974,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 25, to increase the total for salaries of the Consular Service from "$1,809,500" to "$2,009,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 9, to insert:

POST ALLOWANCES TO DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR OFFICERS.

To enable the President, in his discretion, and in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe, to make special allowances by way of additional compensation to diplomatic and consular officers and consular assistants and officers of the United States Court for China in order to adjust their official income to the ascertained cost of living at the posts to which they may be assigned, $500,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have always opposed this provision. I have not been in favor of giving the President the unlimited power that is given here, that can be exercised only through subordinates, in an attempt to adjust living costs by indiscriminate and promiscuous increase of salaries. I think that Congress ought to provide for whatever increase they think ought to be made. They ought to do it, of course, upon recommendations and data and information submitted to them by the State Department and by those who are thoroughly familiar with the situation.

There is no doubt that there are peculiar and exceptional circumstances at various posts. Probably it might be difficult to frame a general provision that would work absolute justice in all cases. We have attempted to adjust the salaries of Government employees in this country to meet the changed living conditions. We have made provision that may work well in one case, but it does not furnish ample consideration in other cases. We have not attempted in this country to give to the Secretary of the Interior, for instance, the unlimited power to adjust the compensation of his employees to meet differences in the cost of living. We have not placed in his hands a lump sum with which to do that. I think it is wrong in principle to do it in this case.

I simply wished to express my view with reference to this amendment. I am opposed to it just as much now, when a new administration is coming in, as I have been in the past. I hope that during the next year we may have a general reclassification of the salaries of the employees of the Government, including not only employees in this country in domestic affairs but including the Diplomatic and Consular Service and those who are in the employ of the Government in foreign countries, and that we will not in any other bill make an endeavor to carry a provision of this kind.

Mr. MOSES. I will say to the Senator that that happens to be exactly the question considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations in regard to that portion of the bill. We were much opposed to a lump-sum amendment in dealing with diplomatic and consular officers, but we had to consider the situation as it confronted us. We were confronted with the condition that exists in European capitals and throughout the Old World in general, where conditions of living which made this sort of appropriation necessary during the war still continue. We hope to diminish the scale to such an extent that this sort of items can be absolutely dispensed with by the time the next appropriation bill comes before the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I do not desire to delay the passage of the bill, but the question which the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] brought up is one that I agree with fully. If there is one thing in the Government that is needed, it is a just and fair reclassification of the salaries of its employees and then a brake put on the question of the Congress at every session attempting to readjust salaried positions. At the same time it would avoid the question of trying to deal with these propositions in wholesale at either end of the line. I do not think the Government can come to an economical administration of its affairs or a just treatment of its employees unless an effort is really made by the Congress to fairly adjust salaries in accordance with the work performed and the necessities of the employees.

I have no criticism of the committee. I know all the grave responsibilities that rest on the Committee on Appropriations and the difficulties of the past, but I do hope that next summer, when other committees will probably be engaged in work that will be keeping the Congress here and the time of the Appropriations Committee will not be occupied with appropriation bills, that the Senator, a member of that committee, will appoint himself a committee of one, as he has expressed himself so heartily in favor of the proposition, and work out the problem and bring it to the Congress in concrete form, so that we can fairly and intelligently pass on it, settle it, and get it out of the way for the future.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think I can say to the Senator from Alabama that it is the disposition and, I might say, the determination of the different members of the Committee on Appropriations to take action of some kind very early in the next Congress to meet the situation. If it is found that we can not get the cooperation of the Appropriations Committee in the other branch of Congress to deal with the matter in its entirety, I hope that the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate will take up bills that come within its jurisdiction covering the matter and try to meet the situation.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], who addressed himself a moment ago to the Senator from Washington, whether the amount of $500,000 found in the item now under consideration is an increase over that allowed a year ago?

Mr. LODGE. Last year it was $600,000.

Mr. KING. May I inquire whether, in view of the exchange situation in Europe, the necessity exists for so large an appropriation as $500,000?

Mr. LODGE. The House proposed $250,000. That went out on a point of order, as most of the bill did, but the Senate committee thought that this was not an unreasonable amount.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think it would be better to put in $250,000, because that is the amount which the committee in the House recommended?

Mr. MOSES. May I add, for further information, that in the readjustment which is bound to come immediately after the 4th of March, as we expect, there will be a considerable addition to the number of diplomatic and consular establishments which we shall have to maintain, and that accounted in very large measure for the increase which the Senate committee made over the sum allowed originally by the House committee and which the House itself struck out on a point of order.

All the establishments in central Europe, for instance, are now in a state of abeyance. There are also those new countries with which we have more or less nebulous relations at present, and with which we shall have to establish permanent relations, with consular corps scattered throughout the industrial communities, which was one thing brought before the committee that influenced me personally to appreciate the necessity for an increased appropriation under this head.

Mr. KING. May I inquire if in other parts of the bill adequate provision has not been made for consular agents and diplomatic representatives in all countries with which we had prior to the war diplomatic relations?

Mr. MOSES. The salaries are provided for in another place in the bill, but the salaries only. This, of course, as the Senator well knows, is in the nature of an extra allowance to enable those officers to supplement their salaries in order to meet the enhanced conditions of living under which they find themselves.

I agree with the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] that this is simply a piece of stop-gap legislation, done by rule of thumb, which no one can possibly estimate; that it is unwise and in some respects imprudent; but it certainly is the part of wisdom and the part of justice for the Government and the Department of State to care adequately for those representatives who find themselves in these foreign fields confronted by the conditions of living that there exist.

Mr. KING. May I inquire if the State Department had any difficulty in allocating the $600,000 appropriated by the former bill?

Mr. MOSES. Does the Senator mean whether the $600,000 was expended last year?

Mr. LODGE. I understand that it was expended.

Mr. KING. It was all allocated and all expended?

Mr. MOSES. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to repeat what the Senator from New Hampshire said in one respect. I am not at all in sympathy with this method of appropriating in legislation. This is one of the things that came over from the war. Europe is still in a distressed condition, and it is impossible to foresee many of the expenses. I hope that in another year these allowances to be made by the President will vanish from the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 21, to increase the appropriation for allowance for clerk hire at consulates from "$1,200,000" to "$1,800,000."

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether or not the evidence before the House committee justified a larger appropriation than $1,200,000; and if not, what induced the Senate committee to make such a large increase?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is of great importance to the United States at the present time to do everything possible to extend its commerce. We hope there will be a great growth of business and trade in every direction, and it seemed to the committee, and the committee were unanimous upon it, that one place where we did not wish to make severe reductions was in the Consular Service; that we needed to keep that service in the highest state of efficiency. After considering the evidence which was before the other House and the action upon it there, the committee, as I have said, unanimously came to the conclusion that we ought to allow the amount estimated, and I think the sum proposed to be appropriated is the estimate.

I will now read some of the evidence on which we based our action. I do not desire to consume time, but the evidence makes the case clear. I now read the statement of Mr. Carr, who has been at the head of the Consular Service for many years. He stated:

I realize, Mr. Chairman, that this is a very large estimate, but it is based upon this principle: That as the service now stands it is running to its full capacity. We are utilizing our full $1,200,000 clerk hire fund. We are still getting complaints from the offices now operating that have not enough clerk hire, and we are getting complaints from the Department of Commerce that we are not furnishing enough information.

We are receiving complaints from shipmasters and ship operators that the Consular Service is not furnishing sufficient service to them. These complaints are for the most part traceable to insufficient personnel to carry on the routine of the offices and give our consuls and vice consuls an opportunity to make trade investigations and do other things not now possible. We shall have soon to face a resumption of normal activities of the service in all parts of the world. Presumably we are going to have a state of peace shortly. In that event we shall have to establish at least 30 consulates in Germany; we shall have to establish consulates in Austria, in Hungary, in the Balkans, and in Turkey, in none of which are consulates functioning at the present moment. We shall have to supplement some of the seaport offices which are now functioning with additional clerks to keep the service up to a point where it can avoid complaints and criticism. That, in a rough outline, is the situation.

Mr. Carr was asked how many clerks they have now, and he said:

We have at present 986 clerks.

* * * * * * *

We want to bring that number up to approximately 1,340 clerks, at various compensations ranging in the main from $3,000 down to below $500. Of that total number which we now have, 400 are American citizens, drawing salaries of from $400 to $3,000—there is one as high as $4,500, one at $3,600, one at $3,200, and one at $3,120, these four cases where salaries above $3,000 are paid are special and temporary.

Mr. ROGERS. About half, then, are American citizens?

Mr. CARR. Yes, sir. A little less than half are American citizens.

Mr. ROGERS. And are receiving $1,000 and upward?

Mr. CARR. Yes, sir. Our plan is to utilize the increase, in the main, for American citizens.

Mr. ROGERS. The other half, which is not American, in every case receives less than $1,000?

Mr. CARR. In every instance the foreigners receive less than $1,000, with the exception of 10 persons who were in the service prior to the act of 1906. They are 10 very useful and experienced officials and are receiving more than $1,000.

It is to be remembered that the Consular Service this year yielded to the Government a revenue of over $2,000,000; it a great deal more than pays for itself. Next year, with the increased fees on passports and visés, it is estimated by the department that their net revenue will be over $9,000,000, so that the entire expense of the appropriation for the State Department will be more than paid by the fees which will be collected.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts whether Mr. Carr indicated in his testimony that he would like the amount which the Senate committee allowed?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; that is the estimate.

Mr. KING. If I may be pardoned, I wish to say that any recommendation made by Mr. Carr would be very persuasive with me, because Mr. Carr, I think, is one of the most efficient men in the State Department.

Mr. LODGE. He is one of the best officials in Washington, in my judgment.

Mr. KING. I think so, and he has devoted himself with the utmost zeal to the development of our foreign trade.

If I may trespass for one moment further, I desire to say that anything we may do to upbuild our Consular Service I am in favor of doing. I only think, if I may be pardoned for so stating, that the work of that service is being duplicated by the Department of Commerce. I prefer to build up the Consular Service rather than the Department of Commerce with respect to these matters.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Utah is absolutely right, and I am glad he feels in that way. This commercial attaché service, which has been gradually built up in the Department of Commerce, presents one of the instances of duplication by which the appropriations and the expenditures of the Government are so much increased.

Mr. KING. Absolutely.

Mr. LODGE. That work ought to be done by the Consular Service, and it can be so done. There is no need of having commercial attachés in more or less diplomatic capacities all over the world and having them report to another department. It simply causes confusion and more expenditures. The work can all be done under one department and ought to be so done.

Mr. KING. If the Senator from Massachusetts will formulate some measure which will consolidate that work, I shall give it my hearty approval. All I wish to say now is that when I want information respecting our foreign trade I go to the Department of State and not to the Department of Commerce, because in the latter department one can get but very little information.

Mr. LODGE. I hope and trust that that duplication will be done away with when we come to consider the reclassification bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment reported by the committee is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations was, on page 28, line 13, after the numerals "$600,000," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the provisions of the act approved May 22, 1918, shall, in so far as they relate to requiring passports and visés from aliens seeking to come to the United States, continue in force and effect until otherwise provided by law.

Mr. LODGE. Before the committee amendment is acted upon, I desire to offer an amendment to the text immediately preceding, which was not embodied in the bill as reported. On page 28, after the word "and," in line 11, I move to strike out the words which follow down to and including the word "effective," in line 12, and to insert "in this act, to be immediately available."

The READING CLERK. On page 28, line 11, it is proposed to strike out "public act No. 79 of the Sixty-sixth Congress, when the latter act shall have become effective," and insert "in this act, to be immediately available."

Mr. LODGE. Then will follow the amendment reported by the committee, which appears in italic.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts what is the purpose of his amendment? I do not grasp it. The Senator moved to strike out certain words beginning in line 11, on page 28, and to insert some words in lieu thereof.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment offered by me was to strike out certain words in lines 11 and 12, as printed in the bill, so as to read:

For expenses of regulating entry into the United States, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved May 22, 1918, and of this act, to be immediately available, $600,000.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not familiar with public act No. 79, and I do not know what the limitations contained in that act are; but if we strike out the provision to which the Senator refers and merely make the appropriation in this act there will be no limitation.

Mr. LODGE. Public act No. 79 of the Sixty-sixth Congress simply extended the provisions of the act approved May 22, 1918. The bill we are now considering does the same thing.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What I am trying to find out is what was the act that is extended? What is the purpose of this legislation?

Mr. LODGE. The purpose is to enable us to collect the passport and visé fees which were provided for in the act of May 22, 1918, and, in order to do that, we have to extend the provisions of that, which authorized the imposition of such fees.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The provision, then, as amended, will provide for the collection of the same fees that were fixed by the last piece of legislation on the subject?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; in the measure that we adopted last year. It is designed to prevent our losing such fees because of the expiration of the act.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to ask the Senator a question along the same line. As I understand, the House has passed a separate bill extending act No. 79, or the previous act of May 22, 1918, as amended?

Mr. LODGE. As I understand, a bill extending public act No. 79 was reported, but I do not think it has been passed.

Mr. HARRISON. My recollection is that it has passed the House and is now before the Immigration Committee of the Senate. It extends the act which, unless action is taken, will, as I understand, expire on the 4th of March, 1921. It should be extended.

Mr. LODGE. It ought to be extended; yes.

Mr. HARRISON. This provision extends that act, does it?

Mr. LODGE. It only extends the act which applies to passport and visé fees.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator does not think it advisable and wise to add, as another proviso, the bill which has passed the House and is now before the Senate dealing with this question and extending the act?

Mr. LODGE. I think the provision in this bill extends the original act. It does what act No. 79 did. That is my understanding.

Mr. HARRISON. It is all right if it does that, because I think it should be extended.

Mr. LODGE. I say I think it does. The bill now provides:

For expenses of regulating entry into the United States, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved May 22, 1918, and of this act—

That is, the one we are now considering.

Mr. HARRISON. I have not had time to study the House bill which I have in mind.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will look up the proviso which we have added to the House text he will find that it reads:

That the provisions of the act approved May 22, 1918, shall, in so far as they relate to requiring passports and visés from aliens seeking to come to the United States, continue in force and effect until otherwise provided by law.

Mr. HARRISON. That should be adopted and the act should be extended——

Mr. LODGE. I think so.

Mr. HARRISON. Because it is one way of restricting immigration into this country at this particular time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now recurs on the amendment which the Secretary has read inserting a proviso on page 28, beginning in line 13. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I move, on page 28, to strike out lines 18 to 21, inclusive, as the provision embodied in those lines has been made unnecessary by the adoption by the Senate of the clause in regard to the purchase of embassies and legations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 28, after line 17, it is proposed to strike out:

For such expenses, not otherwise provided for herein, as may be necessary to enable the President to conduct and maintain any embassy, legation, or consular office authorized by law, $41,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations was, on page 28, after line 21, to insert:

PAYMENT TO THE GOVERNMENT OF FRANCE.

For payment to the Government of France, as a matter of grace and without reference to the question of liability therefor, the sum of $4,928 for full indemnity for losses suffered by Madame Crignier by reason of a search for the body of Admiral John Paul Jones, undertaken in 1899 by Gen. Horace Porter, at that time American ambassador to France, and completed by the finding of the body in 1905, as set forth in the message of the President of the United States to the Senate and the House of Representatives dated June 4, 1918.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the chairman of the committee if the amendment embodying the so-called Crignier claim for damages in connection with the search for the body of John Paul Jones was reported favorably by the committee?

Mr. LODGE. The committee reported the amendment favorably.

Mr. KNOX. I did not think the committee had reported it favorably.

Mr. LODGE. I am sorry that is the Senator's impression. I understood the committee to vote for it.

Mr. KNOX. I am opposed to it. I opposed the claim in the committee; and I have an impression, although, of course, I shall not insist upon being positive about it—that is, I am positive about the impression, but I will not make any statement about the fact if the chairman of the committee says that the committee voted in favor of the claim——

Mr. LODGE. There was no roll call, I will say to the Senator, but I understood the committee to adopt it.

Mr. KNOX. On the assumption that the committee did adopt it, and that it is properly in the bill—and I do assume that—I, of course, have the right to oppose the claim on the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator desire to make a point of order?

Mr. KNOX. I will not resort to that. The United States had nothing to do with the excavations which were made in the effort to locate the bones of John Paul Jones. That was an enterprise undertaken by a very public-spirited gentleman by the name of Gen. Horace Porter. Gen. Horace Porter himself undertook to bear the expense of the search for the bones of that distinguished hero, perhaps aided by other high-minded and patriotic gentlemen who desired to have them brought to this country.

The facts in regard to this claim, as I understand them—and they did come to me in my capacity as Secretary of State some years ago—were that Mr. Horace Porter had entered into an agreement with the lady owning this house beneath whose foundations it was supposed they would have to excavate that he would pay her so many thousand francs—the number of francs I have now forgotten—for any damage that might result to her property by reason of this excavation, and the money was paid to her. As is usual in such cases, after the excavation had been made, and after the damages that were to result from this excavation had been paid for, the owner of the property discovered that a greater amount of damage than she had in contemplation at the time she received payment for prospective damages had been inflicted upon her property. Accordingly, instead of presenting a claim to Mr. Horace Porter, who had conducted the work upon his own responsibility, she proceeded, through diplomatic channels, to present a claim against the United States for three or four times as much as the estimated amount of the damage which had been paid to her.

Mr. President, there is no reason on earth why the people of the United States should assume this burden, unless it be for that reason which seems to underlie so many appropriations of public money, that it is another chance to give away the taxpayer's money for something with which the taxpayer had nothing to do.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not think there was any pretense that there is a legal claim in this matter. It was presented by the French Government in behalf of this lady on the ground that the damage, as the Senator from Pennsylvania says, had been much greater than was anticipated. Coming in that way, I understood that a majority of the committee thought it would be well to put it on the bill; but I quite understand the grounds of the objection made by the Senator from Pennsylvania, and I want to assure him that I did not intend to put in anything to which he had not agreed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations was, on page 29, after line 7, to insert:

FOR THE RELIEF OF THE CONTRIBUTORS TO THE ELLEN M. STONE RANSOM FUND.

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to return to such contributors, or, in the event of the death of any such contributors, to the legal representatives thereof, as may file their claims within one year from the passage of this act, the money subscribed by such contributors to pay the ransom for the release of Miss Ellen M. Stone, an American missionary to Turkey, who was abducted by brigands on September 3, 1901, said total sum not to exceed $66,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, this appropriation has been authorized by a vote of the Senate some four or five different times, and I have before me the favorable report of the House Committee on Claims, Report No. 1398, Sixty-third Congress, third session, written by Congressman POU. It contains the letter to the President by the then Secretary of State, Mr. Root. I ask that pages 1 and 2 and part of page 3 be incorporated in the RECORD for the information of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1864) for the relief of the contributors to the Ellen M. Stone ransom fund, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass.

The object of this bill is to make an appropriation and authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to return the certain amounts contributed by the friends, churches, and other organizations throughout the United States to create a fund sufficient to secure the release of Miss Ella M. Stone, an American missionary to Turkey. She was captured by brigands on the 3d day of September, 1901, while in company with a small company of Turkish travelers on their way from Raslog to Djumabala, in the Empire of Turkey, and held for a ransom 172 days in the mountains of Bulgaria. Messrs. Kidder, Peabody & Co., bankers, of Boston, Mass., and custodians of the ransom fund, have furnished the committee with a list of the contributors, which is hereto appended and made a part of this report. Bills similar in import to this one have passed the Senate three times. Under date of March 26, 1908, President Roosevelt addressed a letter to the Senate and House of Representatives, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of State, both of which are made a part of this report. Appended hereto is a letter from the President of the United States under date of October 7, 1914, and one from the Secretary of State under date of July 15, 1914, both of which are also made a part of this report.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of the Congress a letter from the Secretary of State on the subject of the repayment to the contributors of the money raised to pay the ransom for the release of Miss Ellen M. Stone, an American missionary to Turkey, who was abducted by brigands on September 3, 1901, while traveling on the highway from Raslog to Djumabaia in the Turkish Empire.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 26, 1908.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 24, 1908.

The PRESIDENT:

As will be remembered, Miss Ellen M. Stone, an American missionary to Turkey, was abducted by brigands on September 3, 1901, while traveling on the highway from Raslog to Djumabala in the Turkish Empire.

Our diplomatic and consular representatives in Turkey, in correspondence with the Department of State, shortly after the capture, indicated their belief that the motive therefor was to obtain a ransom, and stated that they had requested the Turkish officials to abstain from too close pursuit of the brigands lest the death of the captured might result.

From later correspondence with our representatives it appeared that the brigands had retired to the mountains with the captive, probably over the border into Bulgaria. The exact location of the party during the captivity, however, is not established by any evidence in the possession of the Department of State, nor does it appear clearly of what Government the bandits were subjects.

About October 1, 1901, the bandits opened negotiations for a ransom, demanding £25,000 and transmitting a letter from Miss Stone asking that the sum demanded be paid and that pursuit of the brigands by the Turkish troops be stopped.

Our diplomatic representatives were of the opinion that Miss Stone's release could only be obtained by the payment of the ransom, and the State Department shared this view. Miss Stone's friends, of course, entered into correspondence with the department regarding the payment of the ransom and were told that it must be raised by private means.

On October 3, 1901, the State Department telegraphed to the Rev. Judson Smith, of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions (this dispatch was forwarded subsequently by Dr. Smith to Mr. Charles A. Stone as "the proper custodian of this"), Boston, Mass., as follows:

"It seems imperative that the amount (of the ransom) should be raised or pledged so as to be available by your treasurer at Constantinople in season to save Miss Stone. Statutory prohibitions make it impossible for this Government to advance the money or guarantee its payment. If paid by Miss Stone's friends, every effort will be made to obtain reimbursement from whichever Government may be found responsible under international law and precedent. In the event of its proving impossible to hold any foreign Government responsible for the capture and to secure the repayment of the money, this Government is willing in the last resort to urge upon Congress as strongly as possible to appropriate money to repay the contributors."

It is claimed that this assurance given by the department in its letter to Mr. Smith, to the effect that, as a last resort, a recommendation would be made to Congress looking toward the appropriation of a sum sufficient to pay the donors, was largely instrumental in enabling Miss Stone's friends to secure the sum of $66,000, which was raised through public subscription in this country by October 23, 1901, for the purpose of effecting Miss Stone's release.

After negotiations of considerable length, the brigands finally consented to accept the amount raised and arrangements were made by United States Minister Leishman for the payment of the money at a point near Bansko, Macedonia, the Turkish authorities consenting to withhold their troops from the vicinity of the place in order that the negotiations might have a successful issue.

The release of the captive was not obtained so soon as expected, but was finally reported by Minister Leishman on February 23, 1902.

After careful consideration of all the facts, my predecessor, Mr. Hay, decided on January 19, 1905, that it was not advisable to attempt to hold the Turkish Government responsible for the capture and to secure the repayment of the money. Upon the subsequent application for reconsideration of this decision, Mr. Hay, again on April 11, 1905, reaffirmed the judgment which he had originally expressed. Upon a further review of the same subject I have come to the conclusion that it is not advisable to reverse or change the conclusion which Mr. Hay reached.

It would seem, therefore, that the executive department is bound to make good its promise to recommend to Congress that money be appropriated to repay the ransom money, a promise which was probably relied upon by many of those who contributed of their private means to save the life of an American citizen believed to be in the gravest peril.

Accordingly, I have the honor to advise that Congress be recommended to appropriate an amount sufficient to repay the contributors.

Respectfully submitted.

ELIHU ROOT.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, October 7, 1914.

MY DEAR MR. POU: I am quite sure that it is not necessary to remind you of the bill before the Committee on Claims with regard to reimbursing those who contributed to the fund for the ransom of Miss Ellen M. Stone from the Turks, for I know that your committee has again and again approved the bill. I take the liberty, however, of sending you Miss Stone's letter to me. It gives me the opportunity to say how sincerely I hope that at the next session of Congress this bill may be passed.

Cordially and sincerely, yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

Hon. EDWARD W. POU,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 15, 1914.

SIR: At the request of Miss Ellen M. Stone, the American missionary who was abducted by Turkish brigands in 1901, the department desires to call attention to the message of President Roosevelt to the Congress March 26, 1908, transmitting the letter of Secretary Root on the subject of repayment by the Government to the contributors of the money raised to pay the ransom for the release of Miss Stone, amounting to $66,000. It appears that the Department of State announced in 1901, while Miss Stone was in the hands of the brigands, that if the ransom were raised and paid by private persons every effort would be made to obtain reimbursement from the Government which might be found responsible under international law, and, in the event of it proving impossible to hold any foreign Government responsible, the department was willing to urge that Congress appropriate money to repay the contributors. Subsequent investigation appeared to show the irresponsibility of any foreign Government, and therefore the department takes this occasion again to recommend that Congress make such appropriation. I have the honor to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

W. J. BRYAN.

Hon. EDWARD W. POU,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, have the committee amendments been disposed of?

The VICE PRESIDENT. They have.

Mr. MOSES. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and ask to have it stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 29, after line 18, it is proposed to insert the following:

For expenses of delegates, not exceeding 10 in number, to be designated by the President, to the Sixteenth International Congress Against Alcoholism at Lausanne, Switzerland, August, 1921, not to exceed $7,425, to be paid out of the unexpended balance of the appropriations heretofore made for the Fifteenth International Congress Against Alcoholism, said amount including secretarial and stenographic work and transcription of reports.

Mr. LODGE. That carries no appropriation; and as far as I can, on behalf of the committee, I am very glad to accept it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAPPER. I call up the amendment which I offered to the item for the support of the International Institute of Agriculture.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 14, line 25, it is proposed to strike out "$3,600," and in lieu thereof to insert the following: "$7,500; secretary, $2,500; traveling expenses, $2,500."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. On page 15, line 5, it is proposed to strike out "$16,600," and in lieu thereof to insert "$25,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Is that the Lubin job over at Rome?

Mr. CAPPER. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He is dead.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to make a point of order on that.

Mr. CAPPER. This simply increases the amount.

Mr. SMOOT. I know it does.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not estimated for.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, it is estimated for.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought when Mr. Lubin died we would have at least that much saved. I shall not say anything more about it, however.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. LODGE, Mr. BORAH, and Mr. HITCHCOCK conferees on the part of the Senate.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take up the deficiency appropriation bill, H. R. 15962.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15962) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

APPOINTMENT OF ORDNANCE STOREKEEPER IN THE ARMY.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Wyoming if he will be kind enough to lay aside the deficiency bill in order that I may call up a very short bill reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, which I think will lead to no discussion and no debate?

Mr. WARREN. No, Mr. President; I can not lay the bill aside. If the Senator's bill, as he says, is short and will not lead to debate, I have no objection to his trying to get it passed now.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 4912, to authorize the appointment of an ordnance storekeeper in the Army. It has been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. It is just half a dozen lines long and will not lead to any debate. The passage of the bill is recommended by the War Department.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if this is the bill creating the position of ordnance storekeeper in order to give a man a position in the Army?

Mr. KING. Yes; that is it.

Mr. NELSON. No; this bill refers to a man who has been for over 43 years ordnance clerk in the War Department and has rendered faithful and efficient service. He has never taken his annual leave; he has oftentimes worked Sundays; and this is to put him on the retired list, and immediately retire him, and give him the pay of a retired captain.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that is half of it, Mr. President, but I think the other half is to give a position to another officer, is it not?

Mr. NELSON. It does not increase the Army a bit. He is to be immediately retired. I trust the Senator will make no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not the figures now, but I am getting them together, as to just what our Government is paying for retired officers of the Army and the Coast Guard and the Navy. I will say now that the figures are going to be staggering, and I want the Senate of the United States to understand just what they are. We have on the calendar now another bill proposing to retire certain other officers, and after a while we will get to retiring employees and paying them three-quarters salary, and eventually there will be nobody to pay taxes. I do not know that I shall object to the consideration of the bill, however.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4912) to authorize the appointment of an ordnance storekeeper in the Army, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with amendments.

The amendments were, on line 3, after the words "authorized to," to strike out "nominate and"; on line 4, after the word "appoint," to insert "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate"; and on line 8, after the words "pay and," to strike out "allowance" and insert "allowances," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Nathan Hazen, chief clerk, Office of the Chief of Ordnance Department, United States Army, an ordnance storekeeper of the Ordnance Department, United States Army, with the rank and pay and allowances of a captain, mounted, and that he be immediately placed upon the retired list.

The grade of ordnance storekeeper is hereby revived in the Army of the United States for this purpose only.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15962) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, at the top of page 2, to insert:

BUREAU OF EFFICIENCY.

To enable the Bureau of Efficiency to perform the duties imposed upon it by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved May 29, 1920, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 6, it is proposed to insert a separate paragraph, to read:

Executive office: The accounting officers of the District of Columbia are authorized to pay J. Thilman Hendrick the salary of a Commissioner of the District of Columbia for the period he entered upon the duties of that office to and including March 4, 1921, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1761 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, after the amendment just agreed to, to insert:

GENERAL EXPENSES.

District of Columbia employees' compensation fund: For carrying out the provisions of section 11 of the District of Columbia appropriation act, approved July 11, 1919, extending to the employees of the government of the District of Columbia the provisions of the act approved September 7, 1916, entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 20, to insert:

Coroner's office: For purchase and maintenance, hire of livery or means of transportation for the coroner's office and the morgue, jurors' fees, witness fees, removal of deceased persons, making autopsies, ice, disinfectants, telephone service, and other necessary supplies for the morgue, and the necessary expenses of holding inquests, including stenographic services in taking testimony, and photographing unidentified bodies, $1,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 3, to insert:

For advertising notice of taxes in arrears July 1, 1920, as required to be given by act of March 19, 1890, to be reimbursed by a charge of 50 cents for each lot or piece of property advertised, $2,200: Provided, That hereafter no more than 1,000 copies of the pamphlet of taxes in arrears shall be printed, and a charge of not less than cost plus 10 per centum shall be made and collected from each person furnished with a copy of such pamphlet, the moneys to be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of the United States and the District of Columbia in the same proportions as appropriations for printing the pamphlet are paid from such revenues.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 15, to insert:

SEWERS.

For operation and maintenance of the sewage-pumping service, including repairs to boilers, machinery, and pumping stations, and employment of mechanics, laborers, and two watchmen, purchase of coal, oils, waste, and other supplies, and for maintenance of motor trucks, $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 22, to insert:

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Allowance to principals: For allowance to principals of grade school buildings for services rendered as such, in addition to their grade salary, to be paid in strict conformity with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the board of education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, $2,980.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 18, to insert:

METROPOLITAN POLICE.

For maintenance of motor vehicles, $1,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 20, to insert:

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

For repairs and improvements of fire boat, $700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 23, to insert:

HEALTH DEPARTMENT.

For enforcement of the provisions of an act to provide for the drainage of lots in the District of Columbia, approved May 19, 1896, and an act to provide for the abatement of nuisances in the District of Columbia by the commissioners, and for other purposes, approved April 14, 1906, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 3, to insert:

For contingent expenses incident to the enforcement of an act to regulate the sale of milk in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, approved March 2, 1895; an act relating to the adulteration of foods and drugs in the District of Columbia, approved February 17, 1898; an act to prevent the adulteration of candy in the District of Columbia, approved May 5, 1898; an act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes, approved June 30, 1906, $400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 14, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 22, to insert:

Hospital for the Insane: For support of indigent insane of the District of Columbia in St. Elizabeths Hospital, as provided by law, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 8, to insert:

Deportation of nonresident insane: For deportation of nonresident insane persons, in accordance with the act of Congress "to change the proceedings for admission to the Government Hospital for the Insane in certain cases, and for other purposes," approved January 31, 1899, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 5, to insert:

JUDGMENTS.

For payment of the judgments, including costs, against the District of Columbia, set forth in Senate Document No. 394 of the present session, $5,373.95, together with a further sum to pay the interest at not exceeding 4 per cent per annum on said judgments, as provided by law, from the date they became due until the date of payment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 23, to strike out:

Valuation of property of carriers: To enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to carry out the objects of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof," by providing for a valuation of the several classes of property of carriers subject thereto, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year, $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 12, to insert:

For transportation of diplomatic and consular officers, including the same objects specified under this head in the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 21, to insert:

The limitation for the fiscal year 1921 as to the number of delivered sheets of customs stamps is increased from 276,000 to 520,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 13, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 22, to insert:

PAYMENT TO WALSTON H. BROWN AND OTHERS.

To pay Walston H. Brown, sole surviving partner of the firm of Brown, Howard & Co., $65,792.53; to the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co., $26,400.30; and to the estate of Henry A. V. Post, $50,359.35, as adjudged by the Court of Claims upon its findings of fact.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 15, to insert:

For reimbursement of John M. Rogers, paying teller in the Office of the Assistant Treasurer at Chicago, Ill., for amounts made good by him on account of losses incurred in the payment of disbursing officer's checks upon indorsements which were later found to have been forged, $315.44.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 19, to increase the appropriation for expenses to enforce the provisions of the national prohibition act, etc., from "$1,000,000" to "$1,450,000."

Mr. WARREN. We put in this amendment exactly what was asked for, and what was estimated, but we have decided to reduce the amount from $1,450,000 to $1,400,000. So that should be made $1,400,000 instead of $1,450,000, on line 19, page 15.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On line 19, page 15, reduce the amount to be inserted by striking out "$1,450,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,400,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 2, to increase the appropriation for refunding taxes illegally collected from "$1,000,000" to "$4,435,000."

Mr. WARREN. In the amendment on page 16, line 2, before the numerals "$4,435,000," I move to strike out the word "to."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed to line 7, page 18, the last paragraph read being as follows:

Prevention of epidemics: To enable the President, in case only of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera, typhus fever, yellow fever, smallpox, bubonic plague, Chinese plague or black death, trachoma, influenza, or infantile paralysis, to aid State and local boards, or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same, and in such emergency in the execution of any quarantine laws which may be then in force, $450,000: Provided, That a detailed report of the expenditures hereunder shall annually hereafter be submitted to Congress.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the paragraph just read provides for an appropriation of $450,000, under the title of "Prevention of epidemics." I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if this appropriation is for money already contracted for, or is it to take care of emergencies which may occur.

Mr. WARREN. I do not understand that the payment of a dollar has been contracted for, but I understand this is to provide a fund for meeting any emergencies which may arise.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the reason why I made the inquiry of the Senator from Wyoming was because a great deal of publicity has been given in the newspapers in the last day or two to some typhus cases coming into the port of New York on steamers from Europe, and I have had a request from the Public Health Service to ask for an appropriation of $200,000 for the purpose of making some alterations, extensions, and improvements in the quarantine station in New York. As the chairman of the committee knows, that quarantine station was formerly conducted by the State of New York, and was handed over to the Public Health Service of the United States yesterday, and they seem to think it is inadequate. I desire to ask the Senator from Wyoming if he has had any communication from the Treasury Department concerning that?

Mr. WARREN. I have had no communication concerning it. The matter would not be in order at this time, and I may say to the Senator that Congress has never failed to respond in any emergency or when there was any epidemic. I will say further to the Senator that I know, from the feeling of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, that in any emergency of that kind we would take up a resolution and pass it, and the House would probably do the same, as we did a few days ago when a deficiency of a million dollars was passed in an hour through both Houses.

Mr. CALDER. I am only anxious to have it made clear, because I have been in receipt of a number of communications in the last day or two from New York, and there is some fear of this epidemic spreading.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator has shown me the letter from the Public Health Service, and the Surgeon General has evidently satisfied himself, by a survey, perhaps, that certain additions and improvements should be made. But they are not connected especially with any emergency or any disease. On taking over the quarantine station from the State of New York, he wants to make some changes, just as every housekeeper does when taking over a house which some one else has occupied. I do not believe it is in any case an emergency, and, of course, it is in no case a deficiency.

So I trust the Senator will not offer it, as I shall have to make the point of order.

Mr. CALDER. I shall not offer it, particularly in view of the fact that the Treasury Department has made no request for it.

Mr. WARREN. I will say that letters are continuing to come from the Treasury Department, but nothing has occurred to cause a change, and we have read every one of them up to this time as fast as they could be printed, and some that were not printed.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, in regard to what the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] has said, let me say that a few moments ago I talked with Commissioner Wallace, and he was speaking about the necessity of the Federal Government taking over the quarantine regulations instead of their being in the hands of the State authorities, in order to secure concentration and unity of management, both with regard to the question of quarantine and with regard to the work of the health bureau, and also with regard to examinations at Ellis Island. The commissioner regarded such action as most important to meet the present emergency.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 10, to increase the appropriation for repairs to Coast Guard cutters from "$75,000" to "$425,000" and to add: "including not more than $300,000 for rebuilding the Coast Guard cutter Onondaga, so as to read:

For repairs to Coast Guard cutters, $425,000, including not more than $300,000 for rebuilding the Coast Guard cutter Onondaga.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 7, to insert:

Payment to the T. A. Gillespie Loading Co.: For payment of the claims for damage to and loss of private property occasioned by the explosions and fire at the plant of the T. A. Gillespie Loading Co., at Morgan, N. J., which have been determined by the Secretary of War and agreed to by the claimants and in amounts not exceeding those enumerated in the letter of the Secretary of War as submitted to Congress at the present session in Senate Document No. 363, $285,141.41.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 20, to insert:

CHICKAMAUGA AND CHATTANOOGA NATIONAL MILITARY PARK.

For the restoration of "Bond Bridge," located on the Government MacLemore Cove Road which is a highway included in the authorized roads of the park system, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 23, to insert:

PAYMENT TO LEAVENWORTH BRIDGE CO.

To pay the Leavenworth Bridge Co., of the city of Leavenworth, Kans., the sum of $30,843.45 in settlement for extra expense in the building of the bridge across the Republican River at Fort Riley, Kans., such extra expense being the increased cost of labor due to direct Government competition in the local labor market and overhead costs during the period subsequent to the original completion date, which extra was required because such labor as was available was incompetent.

Mr. SMOOT. Referring to the claim in the amendment just read and the claims in amendments immediately following, I wish to say that I am not going to make a point of order against the amendments, that I will let them go through this time, but if the House agrees to them I shall endeavor to have a general law passed that will cover all similar cases.

Mr. KENYON. If we are going to open the door to claims of this kind, can the Senator estimate at all what the expenses will be?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there is a person living who can do that. If the House agrees to these matters, then I know of many other claims, of course, that I shall want to have taken care of. I think, perhaps, there should be a general law covering the whole question, but as a majority of the committee have agreed to the claims, I am not going to say anything further until after the conference report is made.

Mr. WARREN. Referring to the remarks of the Senator from Utah and to the inquiry of the Senator from Iowa, of course we should enact a law to do away with these claims, but heretofore we have provided for certain classes of war claims occurring on account of certain transactions if made within certain dates. For instance, in the matter of public buildings, post offices, and courthouses, we passed a law that contracts should all be taken care of and considered by the authorities, and that we would make good to the extent of the exact cost of those that were contracted for just before the war increase in the prices of commodities, where the bids were made before the war but accepted afterwards. In that law we provided that they would consider only those claims that were presented within 90 days, I think it was, so that it was intended only to provide for a certain few, relief for all of which we expected would be applied for.

We have appropriated under that legislation, I think, $1,500,000 perhaps, but we seem to be getting about to the end of those claims, as we are with reference to the Gillespie claims and others. There were certain levee and river and harbor claims, but I hope we have reached about the end of those. I should be glad to join with the Senators who have spoken of it, and other Senators, in legislating all this twilight zone out of existence, so that we may come back to exact contracts and exact conformance with contracts.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I voted against this claim in the committee and I shall vote against it now. I wish to be in a position to vote against all claims of this kind in the future. I do not wish to be bound by any precedent in voting for this claim. I realize that there is possibly something to be said in its favor, but note the words of the bill and effect of having those go out to the country as evidence that Congress is recognizing claims of this character. I read:

Such extra expense being the increased cost of labor due to direct Government competition in the local labor market and overhead costs during the period subsequent to the original completion date, which extra was required because such labor as was available was incompetent.

It seems to me there is absolutely no end to the claims that will be presented in the future by those who have done any Government work if the reasons given here are sufficient to pay a claim of this character.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to ask the Senator if he can see any difference between this claim and the claim of a private individual for performing a contract that he had made, the cost of which was increased by reason of Government competition in the neighborhood?

Mr. KENYON. No; not at all. Every person who performed any contract with the Government and got the worst of the matter because of incompetency of labor or because of governmental competition has a claim that he can present here in the future and have this precedent for its payment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 10, to insert:

RIVER AND HARBOR WORK.

For payment of claims adjusted and settled under section 4 of the river and harbor appropriation act approved June 25, 1910, and section 9 of the river and harbor act approved June 5, 1920, and certified to Congress during the present session in Senate Document No. 378, $1,200.11.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 16, to insert:

Readjustment of contracts: For amounts found to be due various contractors under the provisions of section 10, river and harbor act approved March 2, 1919, on certain contracts for work on river and harbor improvements entered into but not completed prior to April 6, 1917, for work performed between April 6, 1917, and July 18, 1918, as fully set forth in Senate Document No. 384, reported to Congress at its present session, $362,140.98.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 24, to insert:

Payment to Roach, Stansell, Lowrance Bros. & Co.: To pay the sum of $204,307.98 to Roach, Stansell, Lowrance Bros. & Co., of which $150,110.07 is for themselves, and $14,953.84 is for the use and benefit of their subcontractors, L. Lowrance & Bros.; $5,376 is for the use and benefit of the estate of their subcontractor, George F. Ramsey, and $15,822.82 is for the use and benefit of their subcontractor, Rodgers Construction Co., and $18,045.25 is for the use and benefit of their subcontractors, H. N. Rodgers & Bro., being the aggregate losses incurred by said Roach, Stansell, Lowrance Bros. &

Co. and their subcontractors in the carrying out of certain contracts referred to in a Senate resolution of June 19, 1919, under which the Secretary of War was directed to report the amount of losses incurred by the contractors upon contracts mentioned in said resolution: Provided, That before paying said sums the Secretary of the Treasury shall require satisfactory evidence that said contracts have been completed, and that there are no other subcontractors who claim loss for work in connection with said contracts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 20, to insert:

Payment to H. B. Blanks: To pay H. B. Blanks, levee contractor, the sum of $123,569.03, of which $40,720.95 is for the use and benefit of his subcontractors, Roach, Stansell, Lowrance Bros. & Co., and $82,848.08 is for the use and benefit of the estate of his subcontractor, George F. Ramsey, being the aggregate losses incurred by said subcontractors in the carrying out of certain contracts referred to in a Senate resolution of June 19, 1919, under which the Secretary of War was directed to report the amount of losses incurred by the contractors upon contract mentioned in said resolution: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury, before paying said sums, shall require evidence satisfactory to him that said contracts have been completed and that there are no other subcontractors who claim loss for work in connection therewith.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 10, to insert:

Payment to the estate of George F. Ramsey: To pay the sum of $15,561.23 to the estate of George F. Ramsey, levee contractor, of which $13,602.27 is for the estate of George F. Ramsey and $1,958.96 is for the use and benefit of W. H. Dennison, his subcontractor, being the aggregate losses incurred by said George F. Ramsey and his subcontractors in the carrying out of certain contracts referred to in a Senate resolution of June 19, 1919, under which the Secretary of War was directed to report the amount of losses incurred by the contractors upon contracts mentioned in said resolution: Provided, That before paying said sums the Secretary of the Treasury shall require satisfactory evidence that said contract has been completed and that there are no other subcontractors who claim loss for work in connection with said contract.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 5, to increase the appropriation for pay of the Army from "$24,000,000" to "$30,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 5, to insert:

For the payment to the McClintic-Marshall Construction Co., as recommended in the report made to Congress under date of February 11, 1916, by the commission appointed under the act of June 24, 1914, and approved by the governor of the Panama Canal (H. Doc. No. 906, 64th Cong., 1st sess.), $714,007.39, said amount to be chargeable as part of the construction of the Panama Canal and reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of the bonds authorized by section 8 of the act approved June 28, 1902, and section 39 of the tariff act approved August 5, 1909.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 15, in the items for Eastern Branch, Togus, Me., National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, for household, to increase the appropriation from "$36,000" to "$54,000," and in line 19, to increase the total from "$64,500" to "$82,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 22, in the items for the Southern Branch, Hampton, Va., to increase the appropriation for subsistence from "$57,000" to "$76,500"; in line 23, for household, from "$80,000" to "$95,000"; and in line 27, to increase the total from "$208,500" to "$243,000".

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 5, to change the total for National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers from "$610,000" to "$663,100".

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 5, to insert:

So much as may be necessary of that part of the $46,000,000 appropriated in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921 for medical and hospital services of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance allotted to the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers is hereby made available for the erection of 19 sets of double quarters at not exceeding $10,000 each for the medical staff at the various branches of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 6, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the sum of $1,700,000 is hereby transferred from the appropriation "Provisions, Navy" to the appropriation "Maintenance, Supplies and Accounts," for the fiscal year 1921, and the limitation specified for pay of classified employees under the latter appropriation is correspondingly increased.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 6, after the numerals "$30,000,000" to insert:

Provided, That the sum of $1,700,000 is hereby transferred from the appropriation "Provisions, Navy," to the appropriation "Maintenance, supplies and accounts," for the fiscal year 1921, and the limitation specified for pay of classified employees under the latter appropriation is correspondingly increased.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 11, to insert:

That deficiencies under appropriations for the Naval Establishment for the fiscal year 1920 and prior years shall be charged to a naval supply account fund, which is hereby established, and to which shall be transferred the unexpended balances of annual appropriations for the Naval Establishment for the fiscal years 1919 and 1920, after two years from the expiration of the fiscal year for which made, and, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount equal to the value of all stores in the naval supply account on March 31, 1921, preliminary adjustments on account of stores to be made upon the certificate of the Secretary of the Navy that stores to the value certified are on hand; and from and after said date the naval supply account fund shall be charged with the cost of all stores procured for and credited with the value of all issues or sales made from the naval supply account, necessary adjustments being made on account of outstanding contracts or orders.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 5, to strike out "For" and insert "The sum of $5,000,000 of the appropriation 'Maintenance, Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps,' for the fiscal year 1919 is hereby reappropriated and made available for," and in line 12 to strike out the numerals "$5,000,000," so as to read:

Freight, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts: The sum of $5,000,000 of the appropriation "Maintenance, Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps," for the fiscal year 1919 is hereby reappropriated and made available for all freight and express charges pertaining to the Navy Department and its bureaus, except the transportation of coal for the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, for the fiscal year 1921.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 16, to insert:

The prices at which material is to be expended from the naval-supply account shall be fixed by the Paymaster General of the Navy, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, and materials purchased during the war shall be issued at reduced prices in all cases appropriate, such differences in values and losses to be charged to the respective funds; and hereafter no charges on this account shall be made to naval appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, after line 3, to insert:

The sum of $3,000,000 of the appropriation "Maintenance, Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps," for the fiscal year 1920 is hereby reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year 1921 under the following subheads:

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming if this is not really an additional appropriation rather than a transfer of the appropriation heretofore made for "Maintenance, Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps"? On the preceding page, from the unexpended balance of the appropriation for "Maintenance, Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps," the sum of $5,000,000 is reappropriated and made available for "Freight, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts" of the Navy Department. They must have had an unexpended balance; but is not this really increasing the appropriation?

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no. The Senator from Utah would readily understand it if he should sit down with a pencil and figure it up. For instance, in line 12, on page 35, the committee has reported to strike out $5,000,000. That amount is stricken out in one place and reappropriated in another place. It is not additional appropriation, and we are not thereby giving any more money. In other words, from prior appropriations of $120,000,000 there remained $8,000,000 which could be used in reducing the several amounts which the House had sent over here. We had to divide it in the way indicated, after conference with the admiral who has charge of the maintenance of the service, according to the various accounts, so as to leave the appropriation clear in the accounts as they are carried on the books.

The Navy Department asked for about one hundred and ninety-odd million dollars, practically $200,000,000. The House had provided for something like $61,000,000. The item was presented to them before they finished the bill, but they left it with the Senate to provide something like a needed $110,000,000 by some legislation which it was thought might be inserted in the Senate, but which, according to the rules under which the House is working and the confusion existing there, could not be put in by them. They were willing for us to put it in. So we put in this amount, but took it out of the appropriations heretofore made, which show a surplus or an unexpended balance.

It is a clean-up, for that matter, of one hundred and twenty-odd million dollars which has heretofore been appropriated and not used to cover all of these items. So we are using only something like $50,000,000 of new money appropriated instead of $190,000,000.

The Senator from Utah has to take into consideration three or four pages of the bill in order to get the matter together.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Wyoming says that we have $5,000,000 out of the item for "Freight, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts," by striking out $5,000,000 in line 12, on page 35. The only thing that I see which comes from striking out

$5,000,000 in that line is the insertion of $5,000,000 in line 6, as the committee amendment proposes.

Mr. WARREN. It is simply a transference, as the Senator will see if he will read it, and not an appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware of that, but it is making that sum available for the freight expenses of the Navy Department.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator from Utah is objecting to the amount that the department has asked for, of course we shall have to discuss it on that basis; but we made a gain in this case in the current funds by using the $120,000,000 in cutting down or filling the vacuum that the House expected us to fill in the appropriation. We thought it better to exhaust those unused items, as has been partially done, or entirely done, perhaps, in the case of the Army, and to cut down the live amounts that much.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not yet see it. It looks to me like an appropriation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee if we strike out the clause from line 4 to line 7, on page 36 of the bill, and leave it as provided in the bill as it came from the other House, would not the same amount go to the Marine Corps which would go with those lines in?

Mr. WARREN. I do not catch the Senator's question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If we strike out lines 4 to 7, inclusive, on page 36, would not the same amount be appropriated under the heading "Maintenance, Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps," as would be appropriated if we put those lines in? There would be exactly the same amount of money appropriated.

Mr. WARREN. Exactly the same amount.

Mr. SMOOT. But this is for the year 1921.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I know that; but this is what I am coming to: I understand that bookkeeping and I am not complaining of the committee, because I know how it is done. I know that last year the committee carried over and reappropriated a very large amount of money from old unexpended appropriations, so that when the balance sheet was struck they did not stand as appropriations for that year. I am perfectly willing that it shall be done in that way; but now that the election is over and it will be a long time before another election, I think we might just as well balance the books.

Exactly the same amount is coming out of the Treasury whether we include the words at the top of page 36 or not. This unused balance has lapsed back into the Treasury; it is not available now; and it does not make any difference whether we say we appropriate the amount out of a sum that has lapsed back into the Treasury or whether we provide it as an original appropriation; it is exactly the same charge on the Treasury of the United States, except as a matter of bookkeeping. I have not any objection to the committee doing its bookkeeping, I will say to the chairman of the committee, in its own way; I am not criticizing the chairman of the committee; I know that each party wants to hold down its appropriations, and before elections we have to keep our books with that end in view; but I think it is just that the record should show that these reappropriations are really appropriations out of the Treasury. I do not think the Republican Party ought to be charged with anything more than the money they have spent, but they are the party in power; they are responsible and should assume the responsibility of the money they do spend. This amount of money is coming out of the Treasury no matter how this bill is written. I think we ought to recognize that fact and the record ought to show it. That is the only purpose I had in rising, for I have no doubt that the appropriations are all right and proper.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will say that the thought of political parties in connection with this matter, or that there could be any attempt to secure political advantage because of the transfer of these various amounts as provided in the bill, never entered my head. It seems to me, however, that the Treasury would be in better condition and the Secretary of the Treasury would be able to work better if, so to speak, the house were cleaned up and he knew what is appropriated for the uses of the Government, rather than that appropriations should lie over, subject to be called upon at any minute, and driving him out to borrow money.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection to that, I will say to the Senator, except as to the old appropriations. They have lapsed; they were only continued for the last year. I merely want the record to show that the Treasury is chargeable with this money.

Mr. WARREN. Some of the past appropriations for the Navy were available until expended; but I am willing to say that the Navy Department has run behind and has asked for deficiencies amounting to nearly $200,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that is right; and I think that is what ought to be said, Mr. President. I should like also to say that if we had time I would insist upon finding out the exact balances remaining from all appropriations which were made during the war and which were to remain available until expended. Then I think it would be wise to repeal those laws and have every dollar of the unexpended appropriations go back into the Treasury of the United States. In that way every dollar appropriated from now on would be appropriated for the fiscal year in which it was to be expended.

I do not know how many hundreds of millions of dollars are yet left over in the War Department. The appropriations were made without limit, not only for the War Department but for the Navy Department. I recognize that there is not time to do what I suggest at the short session of Congress, but that is what ought to be done in the case of the War Department, and that is what I think will be done in the case of the Navy Department in the fortifications appropriation bill. So long as there is an unexpended balance, I do not care in what year the appropriation was made, if it is provided in connection with the appropriation that it shall remain available to be expended at any time until the full amount is used, then that fund is there, and the head of the department can get hold of it and can have it transferred from year to year, so that it may be available during any given fiscal year. I think that ought to cease now that the war is over.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with the Senator that it might have been justified during war conditions; but the Senator is exactly right about it. If we are going to control the appropriations, we ought to know where they are; but I think the Senator will find that in the acts that we passed right after the war ceased we converted a large number of these items back into the Treasury.

Mr. SMOOT. We converted about $645,000,000.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. More than that; a good deal more than that—something over a billion dollars.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I think that is true, as I recall now; but we have not done it in the case of all of them.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think we have.

Mr. SMOOT. Take the case of the Navy: I asked Gen. Lord this afternoon to furnish me with the exact amount of all of the unexpended balances there were in the Navy Department. Whatever those unexpended balances are, I want to have a repealing provision enacted, providing that they shall go back to the credit of the United States, so that there shall not remain on the statute books hereafter any of these appropriations made in years past to be expended whenever the heads of the department desire.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, in connection with the amendment just agreed to, I ask permission to put into the RECORD a telegram I received several days ago containing the first information I have had with reference to what may be really termed a calamity, and also a telegram which I received this morning from the Chamber of Commerce of Aberdeen, in which they say they think this amount will not be anything like the amount that will be required. I think they are correct in that belief, and I feel satisfied that when the facts are all developed Congress will appropriate whatever money may be necessary to take care of the Government property.

As I wrote to them, this appropriation is simply such an appropriation as we thought it was wise to make on the facts that were presented to us. Congress will be in session all the summer, and when the facts are actually secured and the conditions are fully realized we shall be in a position to do whatever may be necessary in order to protect the interests of the Government.

There being no objection, the telegrams referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BELLINGHAM, WASH., February 10, 1921.

Hon. W. L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Belated reports of the great storm of January 29 west and south of Port Angeles show a property loss probably greater than San Francisco earthquake. Hundreds of millions of timber down and billions in danger of fire. The most valuable forest reserve in the country is a wreck, and large areas must be logged within three years or the loss will be counted in billions. It is the greatest property loss that ever happened at one stroke. Fortunately, there is little loss of life. Alex Polson says 150,000,000 of his timber out of 500,000,000 is down. Area involved is from Grays Harbor to Clallam Bay west of the Olympics; about 2,500 square miles. To save the wreck, fire must be kept out and intensive logging under strict regulation. Begin immediately Polson's railway from the south with Goodyear Merrill and Ring and Milwaukee from north with Spruce. Railway through center will salvage three-fourths of timber. Fire danger is so great that you should give Col. Greeley, chief forester, every support. Martial law may be necessary in dry season. Shall go over there and report further to Mr. Hadley next week. There is no immediate danger, but the possibilities are tremendous if fire starts near Quiniault or Mora in summer; all life and property in that country will be wiped out. Support Col. Greeley.

J. J. DONOVAN.

ABERDEEN, WASH., February 18, 1921.

W. L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Situation in Olympia Peninsula calls for immediate provision for patrolling to guard against forest fires that otherwise are certain to sweep them this summer. Provision of $100,000, which we understand will be given by Federal Government for purpose, will be entirely inadequate. If small army of men are not provided as patrols we believe at least half of 100,000,000,000 feet of timber standing on Olympia Peninsula will be lost by fires this year, involving loss of hundreds of millions of dollars in Government and privately owned timber.

ABERDEEN CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
By W. L. MORRIS, Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 53, line 19, to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$300,000," so as to read:

BUREAU OF ENTOMOLOGY.

Preventing spread of moths: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the continued spread of the gypsy moth in New England and the discovery of a large colony in the State of New Jersey and smaller colonies in the States of New York and Pennsylvania, and to provide means for the control and prevention of spread of this insect in the States concerned or elsewhere in the United States, in cooperation with the States concerned, including the employment of persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and all other necessary expenses, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 12, to increase the appropriation for eradication of pink bollworm from $75,000 to $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, after line 14, to insert:

Damage claims: To pay the claims adjusted and determined by the Commissioner of Lighthouses under the terms of section 4 of the act of June 17, 1910 (36 Stat., p. 537), on account of damages occasioned to private property by collisions with vessels of the Lighthouse Service and for which said vessels were responsible, certified to Congress in House Document No. 912 and Senate Document No. 387 of the present session, $436.12.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, after line 6, to insert:

SENATE.

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay from the appropriation for 1921 for compensation of officers, clerks, messengers, and others, to Mark L. Black for services rendered as clerk to Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN, Senator from the State of Alabama, from November 3, 1920, to December 5, 1920, at the rate of $2,500 per annum and additional compensation at the rate of $240 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, on page 59, after line 14, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 59, after line 14, it is proposed to insert:

For additional expenses of reporting and transcribing the debates and proceedings of the Senate and to equalize more nearly the amounts paid by the Senate and House of Representatives for reporting their respective proceedings from July 1, 1921, to June 30, 1922, payable in equal monthly installments, $4,844.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 23, in the item for printing parliamentary precedents, after the words "House and Senate," to insert "one set each to the Senate and the House branches of the legislative drafting service."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, after line 22, to insert:

For printing and binding for the Post Office Department, exclusive of the money-order office, $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, line 8, to insert "and Senate Document No. 388"; after line 10, to insert "Under the Navy Department, $2,962.50"; after line 11, to insert "Under the Department of Justice, $537.43"; and, in line 13, to strike out "$7,029.58," and insert "$10,529.51," so as to read:

For payment of the final judgments and decrees, including costs of suits, which have been rendered under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," certified to Congress during the present session by the Attorney General in House Document No. 958 and Senate Document No. 388, and which have not been appealed, namely:

Under the War Department, $7,029.58;
Under the Navy Department, $2,962.50;
Under the Department of Justice, $537.43;
In all, $10,529.51, together with such additional sum as may be necessary to pay interest on the respective judgments at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from the date thereof until the time this appropriation is made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, line 20, to insert, "and Senate Document No. 398"; in line 22, to strike out "$121,059.60" and insert "$155,324.99"; in line 24, to strike out "$78,064.11" and insert "$93,898.26"; page 67, line 1, to strike out "$632,990.11" and insert "$637,304.51"; in line 3, to strike out "$117,735.31" and insert "$122,885.31"; after line 5, to insert "Under the Department of Justice, $6,135."; and, in line 7, to change the total from "$950,419.40" to "$1,016,118.34," so as to read:

JUDGMENTS, COURT OF CLAIMS.

For payment of the judgments rendered by the Court of Claims and reported to Congress during the present session in House Document No. 956 and Senate Document No. 398, namely:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 97, line 1, to change the section number from "3" to "4."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. McCUMBER. That completes the committee amendments, does it not?

Mr. WARREN. All the committee amendments have been disposed of.

Mr. McCUMBER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 59, after the two amendments relating to the Senate, insert:

To pay to Robert W. Farrar, for extra and expert services rendered to the Committee on Pensions during the sessions of the Sixty-sixth Congress, $1,200.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to explain this amendment very briefly. There are two pension committees in the House, one known as the Committee on Invalid Pensions, which has to do with the veterans of the Civil War; the other, known as the Committee on Pensions, which takes charge of all other pension matters.

Since 1887 there have been detailed from the Pension Office, under the law then passed, two experts to the Committee on Invalid Pensions and one expert to the Committee on Pensions, making three experts from the Pension Office, to assist in the preparation and in the investigation of the many private pension bills.

All of that work is done by one committee in the Senate, the Committee on Pensions, and under the same law there has been detailed from the Pension Office one expert for that committee. The expert, ever since I have been in the Senate, has been Mr. Dennis Kerr, and during the last year he has been sick most of the time. He died last Monday and was buried yesterday.

The work that had formerly been done by Mr. Kerr had to be performed by my secretary, Mr. Farrar. In other words, I had to take my regular secretary and put him exclusively on that work, and he performed the same work that was performed by three experts in the House. Each year those experts in the House have been given $1,200 extra, and Mr. Kerr also, had he lived until to-day, would have had the $1,200 extra appropriated for him in this bill. But he died last Thursday. His sickness, however, lasted nearly a year, and practically all of his work during that time was performed by Mr. Farrar.

The House pays the experts detailed to the House committees out of its contingent fund. The Senate has always paid for that work out of the general fund. The purpose of this amendment is to allow to the person who had to leave his general work on the committee and attended exclusively to the work that was performed by Mr. Kerr the same amount Mr. Kerr would have received had he lived until to-day and just one-third of the amount paid in the House for doing the same work.

It seems to me so just that there should be no objection to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I was the one who questioned the amendment in the committee, I want to explain why I did so.

It is true there are three men designated from the Pension Office to the House for the purpose of assisting the two pension committees in the House in the preparation of pension bills. But the pension committees there do not have any extra help. They have no more help than the other committees. The Committee on Pensions of the Senate has six clerks, the other committees have but four. It is true Mr. Kerr was for a long time quite ill, and it is true that he died.

I thought, Mr. President, that after the bill passed granting widows of ex-soldiers $30 a month and each ex-soldier $50 a month, which would mean, of course, that there would be a small number of bills introduced and acted upon by each Congress in comparison with what there were before, the committee, having two extra clerks, could get along.

I shall not make the point of order against this amendment. I felt when the matter was before the committee as I feel now.

But there was an objection made in the committee, and I was the one who made it, for the reasons I have stated.

It is true that Mr. Kerr, up to the time of the passage of the last bill, received $1,200 on several occasions. Last year he did not receive the $1,200, and the only reason why I entered the objection was as I have stated.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me say in reply that the number of clerks on the committee has not been increased since the time when Senator Gallinger was chairman of that committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly aware of that.

Mr. McCUMBER. That was a great many years ago; but the number of pension bills that have passed through that committee has enormously increased since that time. If I may take up just last year, they have had to go through and examine 3,600 House bills, with all the reports, and 2,100 Senate bills, which had to be thoroughly examined and gone through, and no two clerks could attend to that without the expert help.

As I said, this amendment would only give to Mr. Farrar, who did this work for Mr. Kerr, who was sick, the same amount Mr. Kerr would have received. The country will lose nothing whatever by the change of the fund from the one who would have done the work had he been well to the one who actually did it.

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize the force of that statement; unless we give Mr. Kerr's estate the $1,200 by special act, and as far as I am personally concerned I would like to see that done. I do not think there was ever a more honest, conscientious, and hard-working employee in the service of the Government of the United States than Mr. Kerr. I do not believe there was ever a man who was so deeply interested in his work. He knew his work as very few men in the Government service know theirs. I would like to see Mr. Kerr's estate, or his dependents, given $1,200, and I would not care if it was a full year's salary. That man was a splendid worker.

I know that if Mr. Kerr had served me as he served the Government of the United States and had died I would see that his services were recognized, as far as I could do it. I would see that his loved ones were taken care of, at least to a limited degree. I think the very least we could do would be to give his estate a year's salary.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me say to the Senator that I can join in everything he has said in eulogy of Mr. Kerr and his work; but remember, he drew his regular salary, even though he was unable to do the work for most of the last year, and this is simply to pay one who did his work for him.

Mr. SMOOT. I told the Senator from North Dakota I would not make a point of order against this amendment. I know Mr. Farrar, too, but not as well as does the Senator from North Dakota, however; and I know what he has done in the past. But I really thought that the Committee on Pensions, with six employees, could have done the work, when the balance of the committees have only four.

Mr. McCUMBER. They did the work, but they had to do it on Sundays and at nights and at all other times. They did the work, of course.

Mr. SMOOT. Some of the other clerks do extra work, also. Nearly every night I have my clerk up to 12 o'clock dictating letters to him. That is the only time I can do that. If this amendment is to go in the bill, I would like now to move that a year's salary be given to those who were dependent upon Mr. Kerr. I shall prepare the amendment just as soon as I learn their names.

Mr. WARREN. I ask my colleague on the committee if he will not take care of that in another way. He is a member of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall be glad to do it that way. I shall draw a resolution in accordance with the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. WARREN. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has a great many embarrassments, and he is "held up" sometimes, nearly, as one might say, like the bandits hold up their victims. The most embarrassing feature of all is the apparent ungraciousness of having to make opposition to the wish of a Senator, and especially if the Senator is as near to the chairman in affection as any other Senator could possibly be. But sometimes I think that there ought to be a little more consideration for that chairman, and there ought to be another way to handle these things that become so embarrassing to the committee.

I have nothing to say against the man who seeks this extra pay, and I shall make no point of order; but it seems to me that we ought to find a way to provide for these things as the House does, in a lump sum and out of the contingent fund, rather than to enter upon the program, in the last minutes of Congress, of this Senator and that and the other asking extra pay for this clerk, that, and the other. I say that with no reflection upon the Senator who offers the amendment and no reflection upon the man for whom he offers it, yet it occurs very often, notwithstanding that we have gone from one and two clerks each to four clerks for every Senator, whether he has a committee or not, notwithstanding that some Senators—I do not wish to name them, but I might do so if I had to do so—seem to think that their four clerks are to take care of their correspondence and be ornamental, and if there is any real work which requires the "digging," application, and routine work that the clerks of the Appropriations Committee and some others have to do, nights and Sundays and every other day, that their clerks must be paid extra.

I may say that when this matter first came up in the committee, without going any further and stating who they were, there were two other Senators who stated immediately that they desired to have extra pay for clerks, one of them not for his own clerk, but for the clerk of another committee, and the other Senator for some other clerk, perhaps his own. If we get started in that line of action, of course, there is no end to it, except within the consideration of the individual Senators.

So I express the wish that the matter might be taken up in another way. I wish hereafter that Senators may, for a moment, at least, put themselves in the place of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and see if they can not help by putting these matters up to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and let that committee provide for them. There is a way that it can be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER].

The amendment was agreed to.

COLD-STORAGE FOODS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry [Mr. GRONNA] a question or two with reference to the adoption of the conference report on the cold storage bill on yesterday. When that matter came up at the opening of the session I was in the Appropriations Committee. I did not know it was coming up at that time.

I received a telegram a few days ago from the dairy interests of my State claiming that the bill, as finally reported by the committee of conference, would work very great injury to that industry, and I intended to ask the chairman of the committee about it. I know that he is as much interested in the farming industry of the country as anyone and that he would be the last man in the country to indorse and put through legislation that would injure any agricultural interest. I have just had sent to me to-day a copy of a telegram, from Congressman KAHN, of California, by a gentleman who claims to represent the poultry interests of California, Oregon, and Washington.

I do not wish to take up very much time of the Senate now, but I do desire to have a brief statement from the chairman of the committee with reference to that feature of the cold storage bill. I think what these people had in mind was that the new provision with reference to the temperature that was required, and so on, would injuriously affect the disposal of their products.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have received a great number of telegrams from people in my own State and from people in other States with reference to the same matter. The bill as it passed the House did not provide for any period for precooling at all. The Senate bill in its original form provided for a period of 30 days for precooling. It was a very difficult matter for the conferees to agree on the item because the Members of the House were opposed to that provision. We finally agreed upon 10 days.

I will say to the Senator from Washington and to the Senate that this does not affect the articles of food to which he has referred. If a carload of eggs or a carload of poultry is shipped from the Pacific coast, the articles or the containers will have to be marked anyway, and the only difference would be the marking of the date, the supplying of the additional figures of the date. The bill as reported to the Senate provided for a period of 10 days for precooling and then provides for 30 days during which the product may be held in cold storage, which means 40 days altogether, without the product being classified as a cold-storage product.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is the precooling proposition that seems to worry these gentlemen. The Senator will appreciate the fact that it will probably take much more than 10 days to ship from the Pacific coast to the eastern market.

Mr. GRONNA. Oh, yes; but I will say to the Senator that the refrigerator cars and the ships are all included and classified as cold-storage warehouses. I will try to give the Senator an illustration. Suppose a carload of eggs is being shipped from his State to New York. Every container in that car would have to have some sort of mark upon it, and the only additional mark that would have to be on those cases of eggs would be the date.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The date of what?

Mr. GRONNA. The date of shipment, or it may be supplied on the invoice according to the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture. It may be done in either way. If the eggs are sold within 30 days, they are still classified as fresh eggs. They will not be classified as cold-storage eggs. So the people are laboring under a misapprehension.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is, if they are sold within 30 days from the date of shipment?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; or 40 days from the time that they were first put in cold storage for precooling.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I hope we will not get too many eggs in my basket until we can dispose of the pending appropriation bill.

Mr. GRONNA. Have I made the matter clear to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know about it myself, and I am just making inquiries because of certain telegrams that have come to me. I understand that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has a long letter with reference to the matter and he thinks that probably the act will have to be amended. I feel satisfied that the committee, if they find they have put in a provision that will work injuriously, will ask to have it changed.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to say that all these matters were gone over by the committee, and, if my judgment is worth anything, I will say to the Senator that it will not be necessary to provide an amendment so far as this particular provision is concerned.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say that I am quite sure the bill will have to be amended.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15962) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, immediately following the amendment just agreed to, offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], I submit the following amendment, and I wish to offer a word of explanation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Under the head of "Senate" the Senator from Iowa moves to amend by inserting the following:

Charles A. Webb, for extra services rendered as clerk of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, $200.

Mr. KENYON. I know there is force in what the Senator from Wyoming has said.

Mr. WARREN. I am not going to object to the amendment.

Mr. KENYON. It went out in the committee. The Senator must not get angry about it.

Mr. WARREN. I am not angry. I told the Senator I would not object to it. I am satisfied, if it does not lead to more.

Mr. KENYON. In view of that statement I am going to explain the amendment. I am just as much opposed as is the Senator to piling up any extra compensation for clerks. But there are cases that are different from others.

Mr. Webb is the clerk of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. We proceeded with the investigation of campaign expenditures under resolution of the Senate, which was not a particularly desirable job, and there has been a tremendous amount of work. Mr. Webb has worked Sundays and nights. The chairman of the subcommittee supposed that we could pay Mr. Webb extra compensation out of the contingent fund, and I told him, when I asked him to work nights and Sundays and extra time, that he would be so paid. We could have employed some one else to do this enormous amount of work and handle the 11 or 12 volumes of testimony, getting them ready for our report, and it would have cost, I think, four or five hundred dollars. But by having Mr. Webb do it we have saved money to the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. Why does not the Senator make it $1,200, the same as the other amendment?

Mr. KENYON. No; that is too much.

Mr. SMOOT. He did just as much work as the other man, and more.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; Mr. Webb did just as much work as the other man. When that amendment went out in the committee I did not insist on the Webb amendment staying in. But Mr. Webb is a modest man and has not any exaggerated idea of the value of his services. This is not enough to pay him for all his extra work, but it is something, and I feel that in offering it I am doing the right thing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] I propose the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 39, after line 13, insert the following paragraph:

For the conduct of investigations in the development and standardization of methods of preservation of Pacific coast fishes, including the payment of salaries and traveling expenses and the purchase of materials and supplies, $10,000.

Mr. WARREN. I intended that this item should be included in the sundry civil appropriation bill, but it was overlooked. I had no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, in the earlier consideration of the bill I inquired of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], if he had an estimate from the Treasury Department for $200,000 for the improvement of the quarantine station at New York. I explained at the time that the State of New York had turned this quarantine station over to the Government yesterday and that I had understood the Treasury Department had made an estimate for the improvement. Since that time the chairman of the committee has received an estimate. I merely wish to state that I have a letter here in connection with the matter from the Secretary of the Treasury, who strongly urges that the appropriation be made, in view of the threatened epidemic of typhus as a result of the large immigration to this country during the past few weeks. I propose to submit an amendment to cover the matter, and I shall ask the Senator from Wyoming not to object, but to let it go to conference.

Mr. WARREN. I suggest that the Senator send the amendment to the desk and let it be read.

Mr. CALDER. Very well. If it afterwards develops that it is necessary for him to do so, the provision may be eliminated from the bill. I think, however, it is a most important amendment and that it should be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 19, after line 25, it is proposed to insert the following:

New York, N. Y., quarantine station: For water supply, additional buildings, increased disinfecting facilities, and miscellaneous equipment, including all necessary mechanical equipment, lighting fixtures, etc., $200,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senate that I expect, if we can finish the bill to-night, we may save from five to ten million dollars, or perhaps $20,000,000 for every day hereafter, because estimates are coming in so fast, and wet with fresh ink when they come here, that it is impossible to keep up with them, although there seems to be a beaten path from the Public Health Service by way of the Treasury to the Senate. I am not going, however, to object to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair inquire how that estimate got to the committee?

Mr. WARREN. It was brought to my desk by the Senator from New York a few moments ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the heads of the departments communicate to the United States Senate through the Presiding Officer of the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. There is no doubt about that, and that should be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is saying this for the benefit of his successor. Recently communications from the departments seem to be sent almost anywhere.

Mr. WARREN. The Vice President is perfectly right about that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They are supposed to come to the President of the Senate and by him to be placed in the RECORD.

Mr. WARREN. That is why I said that it is dangerous to keep this bill before the Senate any longer; it has already been greatly increased. At least 20 different matters have been brought up here since the committee concluded the consideration of the bill on yesterday.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the estimate was transmitted in the regular way to the Speaker of the House. It should undoubtedly have come to the Vice President, but it was a matter of emergency. The messenger from the Treasury Department handed it to me, and I handed it to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say that it is simply a copy of a letter to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not objecting; he is simply entering a protest against such a method of transmitting communications to the Senate of the United States. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. SMITH of Maryland conferees on the part of the Senate.

BRITISH POSSESSIONS IN WEST INDIES.

Mr. REED. I introduce a resolution which I should like to have read—it is short—and lie on the table.

The resolution (S. Res. 457) was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the President be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to ascertain whether the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain, etc., is willing to discuss the cession by it to the United States of all or any part of its possessions in the West Indies, including the island of Trinidad, and also the Bermuda Islands.

Mr. REED. I should like to embrace this opportunity to say merely that in the near future I intend to address the Senate on this subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 15812, being the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, we are very anxious to proceed to-morrow with the immigration bill. I think that we can dispose of it in the early part of the day, possibly; at any rate, that is the expectation of those with whom I have discussed the matter. Much as I should like to accommodate my friend from North Dakota, I dislike to have the Agricultural appropriation bill taken up at this time, as thereby the unfinished business would be displaced.

Mr. GRONNA. Is the immigration bill the unfinished business now?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes; the immigration bill is the unfinished business.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to Senators on the other side of the Chamber that we have resumed and completed the consideration of and passed one appropriation bill and considered and passed two other appropriation bills to-day. The hour is growing late. I know there are a number of Senators on our side who are interested in the immigration bill, and also others who are very much interested in the Agricultural appropriation bill. I should not like to have the motion to take up that bill come to a vote at this late hour. I think we should take a recess now and leave the status remain as it is, and to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock determine the question when everybody is here.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Under the circumstances, Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I withhold it.

RAILROAD EXPENSES UNDER GOVERNMENT GUARANTY.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I submit a resolution, which I ask to have read, and then I shall ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 459), as follows:

Whereas the transportation act of 1920 provides for a definite guaranty of net earnings out of the Treasury of the United States during the period from March 1 to September 1, 1920, and for the fixing of freight rates by the Interstate Commerce Commission to yield net earnings amounting to a definite per cent upon the so-called "aggregate value" of the railroads; and

Whereas any artificial, fictitious, or fraudulent increases in operating expenses or other reduction of bona fide net earnings constitute an unwarranted and vicious drain either upon the Treasury of the United States or upon the pockets of American producers, shippers, and consumers; and

Whereas some or all of the railroads subject to the transportation act have contracted to pay unreasonable and extravagant prices for railway supplies, equipment, repairs, and renewals charged to maintenance account; and

Whereas separate corporations have been organized in certain cases, with the participation of railroad officials and stockholders, to which railroad shops have been leased for nominal sums and to the profit of their promoters; and

Whereas it is stated upon good authority that the charges paid by railway companies for supplies, equipment, repairs, and renewals are excessive, amounting to from two to five times the cost of doing the work in the shops of the railroads; and

Whereas it is further charged that these excessive prices for repair work have fictitiously and fraudulently increased the operating expenses of the roads and thereby imposed an unwarranted drain upon the Treasury of the United States and the American people amounting to many millions of dollars per annum; and

Whereas the Interstate Commerce Commission has conducted investigations into the relative costs of repairs and construction work in the railroad shops and in the shops of equipment companies and are collecting and have acquired a large amount of reliable data upon the subject since the railroads were returned to private control: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to furnish to the Senate of the United States all information in its possession relating to this subject.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I prefer to have an opportunity to look over that resolution. Therefore I shall object to its present consideration.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then I ask that it lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rule the resolution goes over and lies on the table.

EFFICIENCY AND ECONOMY OF RAILROAD OPERATION.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I submit a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin will be read.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 458), as follows:

Whereas certain bills now before Congress propose to confer certain benefits and privileges upon the railroads of the country; and

Whereas these benefits and privileges will empower the railroads to secure from the United States Government certain monetary advantages which they would not otherwise secure; and

Whereas the railroads have contended and are now contending that such monetary advantages and other privileges are due them as a result of Government operation or should be granted them in order to free them from unnecessary regulations which they contend would curtail efficiency and economy; and

Whereas these monetary advantages will mean increased expenditure by the people and Government of the United States and will be an unwarranted burden unless they do institute just remuneration and do make possible increased economy and efficiency; and

Whereas it is essential that the Senate have at its disposal all available information as to the justness of the claims and the efficiency and economy of railroad operation which is a material fact in the claims advanced by the railroads; and

Whereas in the report of the director of the division of operation of the United States Railroad Administration for the year 1919 it is stated:

"From the beginning the mechanical department has diligently endeavored to maintain the equipment without any idea that economies should or could be realized by reducing maintenance which the equipment ought to receive. With this thought in mind, we began immediately after the roads were placed under Federal control to check locomotive shop output and roundhouse and shop costs, so that all unnecessary expenditures might be eliminated and greater efficiency in shop and roundhouse operation obtained. Where improper practices were found to exist, action was taken through the regional directors to have more efficient methods adopted.

"In order that expenditures for maintenance of equipment might be measurably controlled, Federal managers were required to prepare and submit on suitable forms information regarding maintenance of equipment during the test period, during the seven years prior to the test period, as well as during the calendar year 1918. This information was collected on the basis of the miles of roads operated, the units of equipment, and the locomotive and car miles, together with averages showing the cost of locomotive repairs separately on the basis of miles run, tractive power miles, and per locomotive owned.

"Freight-car repairs were reported on the basis of 10,000 freight-car miles and freight cars owned, and the passenger-train car repairs were reported on the same basis.

"From these reports studies of the maintenance of equipment costs were made and furnished to the regional directors, to keep them in touch with the actual conditions and aid them in the control of maintenance of equipment expenses.

"In this work we have constantly kept before us the thought that the ability of the railroads to move present and prospective business was the first consideration, and after this requirement had been fully met reductions in maintenance expenditures which could properly be made should be made on railroads which were clearly overexpended in the matter of maintenance of equipment in comparison with the test period, but in no case has the fact that a railroad has been overexpended for maintenance of equipment been permitted to reduce maintenance to a point where it would interfere with the handling of traffic.

"Analyzing and tabulating the information received from the different railroads in connection with the maintenance of equipment expenditures is going forward, so that all available data may be in shape for proper consideration when needed. This also includes the establishment of equation factors for increased costs of labor and material to enable comparisons to be made as between the test period and the period of Federal control"; and

Whereas in this report it is further stated:

"The work of the field forces has consisted of making special investigations of improper conditions reported, checking up conditions in shops, engine houses and repair yards for the purpose of promoting efficiency and economy in operation and handling labor matters that had not reached the stage where they should be referred to the Division of Labor.

"During the war the forces at practically all terminals had been built up to such an extent that they were out of proportion to the business handled. A check on the Erie Railroad, in 1918, showed the need for a thorough investigation of shop and engine-house conditions on all railroads; therefore this work was extended and developed into a comprehensive system of reporting conditions of shop and engine-house operation monthly through the regional directors.

"On account of the changed values due to increased labor and material costs a comparison on a money basis was worthless; therefore, all comparisons of shop and engine-house operation were made on a man-hour basis.

"To illustrate the improvement in conditions, a check of 2,921 engine houses in January, 1919, showed an average of 30.58 man-hours per locomotive handled, while a check of the same engine houses in July, 1919, showed 25.77 man-hours per locomotive handled, or a decrease of 7,013,036 in the number of man-hours in handling approximately 54,000 locomotives. This represents a saving per month of $4,263,541, which is at the rate of approximately $50,000,000 per annum.

"Other matters which have been investigated by the field forces include disputes between officials and the employees, losses due to good material finding its way into the scrap bins, shop practices, and the efficient use of machine tools, storage of material to see that it is properly protected, condition of shops and shop grounds, condition of roundhouses, turntables, cinder pits, and other terminal facilities to see that they were sufficient and were efficiently operated, checking up car-repair forces and facilities, and in many instances reorganizing forces at division points or on an entire railroad, seeing that shops and repair yards were properly supplied with material and tools so that the work could proceed without delay." Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Director General of Railroads be requested to furnish the Senate with said information compiled by the special field forces of the mechanical department relative to improper conditions in shops, engine houses, and repair yards, and to the comparative efficiency of shop and engine-house operation as reported monthly to the administration.

Also, all studies of maintenance of equipment made on the basis of the check of locomotive shop output and roundhouse and shop costs with a view to eliminating unnecessary expense and to increasing efficiency.

Also, all the information prepared and submitted to Federal managers regarding maintenance of equipment during the test period, during the seven years prior to the test period, and during the calendar year of 1918.

And, in general, all information gathered and tabulated by the administration, as indicated in the foregoing quotations, from the report of the director of division of operation relative to maintenance of equipment, as well as the equation factors for increased costs of labor and material, to enable comparisons to be made as between the test period and the period of Federal control.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The resolution will lie over under the rule.

RECESS.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, February 19, 1921, at 11 o'clock a. m.

Mr. MONDELL. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

GREETINGS FROM PORTO RICO.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, the Legislature of Porto Rico has just assembled and is in session. The speaker of the house and the president of the senate have cabled me greetings to the House of Representatives, and have asked me to present them to the House. I ask unanimous consent that they be read from the Clerk's desk and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the cablegrams referred to by him be read. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

TOWNER,
House of Representatives, Washington:

House of representatives in session assembled requests you to express to the House the sentiments of adherence and respect of the representatives of the people of Porto Rico for the Representatives of the national sovereignty looking for that justice worthy of both in the granting of our immediate aspirations in the extension and development of our present system of government under democratic principles.

CAYETANO COLL CUCHI, Speaker.

Judge TOWNER,
House of Representatives, Washington:

Senate of Porto Rico in session assembled unanimously requests you to express to the House of Representatives the sentiments of adherence and respect of the senators of Porto Rico to the Members of the House of Representatives of the United States looking for that justice worthy of both in the granting of our immediate aspirations in the extension and development of our present system of government under democratic principles.

BARCELO, Presidente.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if it be in order, I should like to have the House express its thanks and appreciation for this patriotic and cordial message from the two houses of Porto Rico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

The motion was unanimously agreed to.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, in that connection may I make a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. These communications from the Legislative Assembly of Porto Rico have been read. Are they to be referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think they need any reference.

Mr. DYER. I should think they ought to be referred to that committee, and that the request contained therein merits serious consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the motion which has been agreed to carry with it the sending of a message?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. CANNON. What is the foundation of the message? What is it that Porto Rico wants?

Mr. DYER. They ask for more liberal representation in their local government.

Mr. CANNON. I wanted to see whether this would be construed as an expression of opinion of the House that what they might consider local government according to democratic principles should be accepted by the Committee on Insular Affairs from that standpoint. I am content that the messages should go to the Committee on Insular Affairs, but they ought not to go with any expression of opinion which might cause that committee to do what might not meet with the sentiment of this House or the coming House or the people.

Mr. DYER. That was not my intention.

Mr. GARD. The motion of the gentleman from Wyoming having been adopted, does it then become the duty of the Speaker to transmit a message in reply?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he would do so whether it was his duty or not.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 15441) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the amendment of the Senate, and had appointed Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. MOSES, Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. BECKHAM, and Mr. HENDERSON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4205) to amend section 4, chapter 1, of Title I of an act entitled "An act making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1900, as heretofore amended by section 2 of an act entitled "An act to amend section 86 of an act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii, to provide for additional judges, and for other judicial purposes," approved March 3, 1909, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 4903) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across Detroit River within or near the city limits of Detroit, Mich.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

February 15, 1921:

H. J. Res. 472. Joint resolution making an appropriation to continue the valuation of the property of carriers.

February 16, 1921:

H. R. 15344. An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

H. R. 10920. An act declaring Platte River to be a nonnavigable stream, having been presented to the President of the United States on February 4, 1921, and not having been approved or returned to the House of Congress in which it originated within the 10 days prescribed by the Constitution, has become a law without his approval. Last day was February 16, 1921.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Which calendar is in order to-day, claims or war claims?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks preference would be given to claims. War claims had the last Private Calendar day. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. Without motion, the Clerk will read the first bill on the calendar.

Mr. CRAMTON. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. I understand the statement of the Chair to be a direction to the Clerk to read the first bill. I have no objection to its being read, but I do not want to lose any rights. I want to reserve a point of order against the consideration of the first bill. If it is preferred, I will make the point of order now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the first bill.

MAJ. GEN. CROWDER.

The Clerk read the title to the first bill, as follows:

S. 2867. An act authorizing the President, when Maj. Gen. Crowder retires, to place him on the retired list of the Army as a lieutenant general.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that to-day bills upon the Private Calendar reported from committees on either War Claims or Claims are in order. The suggestion of the Speaker was that probably Claims had priority. My point of order is that bills reported from any other committees except Claims or War Claims are not in order until the bills having precedence are disposed of. I will be very glad to cite precedents if the Chair cares to hear them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. CRAMTON. The rule provides that—

On Friday of each week after the disposal of such business on the Speaker's table as requires reference only, it shall be in order to entertain a motion for the House to resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House to consider business on the Private Calendar in the following order.

As I understand, the motion to go into Committee of the Whole to consider the bills on the Private Calendar could not have been made except by virtue of this rule, and the rule prescribes the order in which the bills on the calendar shall be considered. Omitting the reference to the second and fourth Friday, the rule continues:

On every Friday, except the second and fourth Fridays, the House shall give preference to the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Claims and the Committee on War Claims, alternating between the two committees.

The rule is as explicit, direct, and positive as it would seem possible for language to make it that at the present time in this committee in considering bills on the Private Calendar we are obliged to consider them in the following order, and under that to-day bills coming either from the Committee on Claims or War Claims have precedence. The matter has been up before in the House, and decision was made in the second session of the Sixty-third Congress, found on page 3053 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in Committee of the Whole, for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. It was held that business on the Private Calendar reported from the committee having priority on that day, whatever the committee might be, should be disposed of before any other business on the Private Calendar should be considered. That decision is in harmony with other decisions that are equally explicit. For instance, it was held in 1901, which decision the Chair will find reported in Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, section 4913, that in Committee of the Whole the rule of procedure prescribed by the House may not be set aside. The House has prescribed a definite and positive rule of procedure in this case, that certain bills shall have precedence for consideration. That rule having been prescribed by the House, the Committee of the Whole has no authority to set it aside.

It is somewhat analogous to the case of fixing debate by the House in which it is repeatedly held that fixing debate by the whole House, the Committee of the Whole can not, even by unanimous consent, agree to an extension contrary to that order of the House.

I am aware that there are some precedents for the making of a motion to set aside the particular order of business. Such a case is reported in Hinds, volume 4, section 4730, but that, it should be noted by the Chair, was under an old rule of the House in which the right to change the order was expressly given to the committee. Under the present rule the right is negatived, the House has fixed a priority, and taken discretion away from the committee.

There are some other precedents, one in Hinds, volume 4, section 4731, which was also under the old form of rule. But the one in section 4732 under the changed form of rule, the motion there had reference to taking a bill out of order that came from the committee that had the priority right.

Now, what is attempted here is not to take up a bill reported from the Claims Committee and consider it out of turn, but to take up a bill from a committee that has no priority rights to-day, and hence these decisions are not at all in conflict with the ones reported in section 4734, or the one decided by Chairman Adair.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, of course I have no contention with the gentleman from Michigan who has addressed the Chair on the point he has made. But I think the rulings have been to the effect that notwithstanding the rule which gives priority to war claims and claims on this day, that it is within the rights of the Chair to entertain a motion to consider a certain bill not included in claims or war claims.

The Hamlin decision, I think the Chair will find, held that it is quite proper to make a motion to consider any bill on the Private Calendar, and it is for the committee to decide whether or not that bill, whatever it may be, shall be taken up for consideration—not merely that the rules provide that on certain days war claims or claims may be given the preference, but only on condition that no motion is made to consider a bill that is not a war claim or a claim. It is quite within the province of the Chair to hold that it is proper to permit such a motion.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I want to supplement what the gentleman from Illinois has said by suggesting to the Chair that there is a great distinction in meaning between a rule which says that certain business shall have preference and a rule which states that it is an order of the business of the day arbitrarily to consider certain business, and that no other business shall be considered. I think there is a difference between a preference and a determination. If the committee, acting under a rule that it give preference to certain business, having opportunity to decide whether it shall exercise the preference or not, determines that it prefers some other business to that which had the first right of way, it would leave the committee utterly helpless if a motion to consider the business which was first presented to its attention could not be determined.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. If I understand the contention of the gentleman from Illinois correctly, it is that a motion would be in order to make some other bill in order for consideration, but the Chair announced that without motion the Clerk would report the first bill on the calendar, which is not from either of the preferential committees. If I understand the gentleman, he contends that it requires a motion to take a bill from some other committee?

Mr. MADDEN. I think the committee would have to express its desire to consider bills other than war claims or claims by a vote.

Mr. WALSH. The Chair can not tell the committee what it shall consider.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Upon taking the chair, there being no motion pending, the Chairman directed the Clerk to report the first bill on the calendar, which is a bill not reported by either the Committee on Claims or the Committee on War Claims. As the Chair understands the situation, to-day is the day under the rules when bills from the Committee on Claims have "preference," whatever that may mean. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] makes the point of order that a bill not reported from the Committee on Claims can not be considered to-day until all bills reported from the Committee on Claims have been considered, and cites from the Manual a ruling by Chairman Adair, made in the Sixty-third Congress. The gentleman from Michigan correctly cites from the Manual the briefing of that ruling made by the parliamentary clerk. Upon a thorough examination of the ruling the Chair finds that the briefing in the Manual does not accurately present the ruling made by Chairman Adair.

This question was first directly ruled upon, so far as the Chair is able to find, by Chairman Hamlin in the Sixty-second Congress. The question came up on a motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] to take up, out of its order as it appeared on the calendar, a certain bill reported from the Committee on Claims. A point of order was made against it. After some discussion, Chairman Hamlin held that he would entertain the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina to consider the bill which was from the Committee on Claims out of its order on the calendar; that is, it was not the first bill on the calendar. This is all that Chairman Hamlin's ruling decided.

In the Sixty-third Congress this question again arose when the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. Adair, was Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, but no point of order was, in fact, made, so far as the RECORD shows. There was a long, informal, illuminating discussion participated in by the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MANN, the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. GARRETT, the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. Hardwick, the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. POU, and others. After a thorough and able discussion, Mr. Adair, the Chairman, overruled the point of order, although no point of order had been made. These are the only precedents in point that have been brought to the attention of the Chair.

In view of these precedents and the present parliamentary situation, no ruling that is now necessary for the Chair to make will overrule either of the rulings to which the Chair has just referred.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair permit an interruption? At the time of the Adair ruling the RECORD makes it very plain that it was considered by the Chair and by the gentlemen who took part in that debate, including the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], that the Adair ruling was in conflict with the Hamlin ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. It was so argued.

Mr. CRAMTON. Perhaps it is unnecessary, but I want particularly to direct the attention of the Chair to the section I cited from Hinds' Precedents, section 4713.

The CHAIRMAN. Being warned that he might have to rule upon this matter, the present occupant of the chair took occasion to look over the precedents and was unable to find any that were in direct conflict or that need be overruled by any ruling that the Chair thinks he must make at this time on the point of order now pending.

Paragraph 4 of Rule XXIII provides that—

In Committees of the Whole House business on their calendars may be taken up in regular order, or in such order as the committees may determine, unless the bill to be considered was determined by the House at the time of going into committee.

That rule, unless modified, would permit the committee to take up any bill on the Private Calendar. Paragraph 6 of Rule XXIV, which has already been read by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], and of which the Chair will read only a part, provides:

On every Friday, except the second and fourth Fridays, the House shall give preference to the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Claims and the Committee on War Claims, alternating between the two committees.

The gist of the whole question is the word "preference." What does it mean? Does it mean to give an exclusive right to consideration of certain bills on certain days; and if not, just what does it mean? The Chair feels constrained to attempt to construe together the two paragraphs of the rules just referred to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will permit, the point is not that the claims from the Committee on Claims are exclusively in order, but that they have preference over other bills and shall be considered before other bills are considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not believe that the word "preference" as used in this connection means that. In directing the Clerk to read the first bill on the calendar, the Chair took pains to say that "without motion" the first bill on the calendar would be reported. No motion was made. If any gentleman had made the motion that bills from the Claims Committee on the calendar be considered, the Chair would have entertained the motion.

Mr. CRAMTON. But, Mr. Chairman, immediately upon the statement of the Chair I reserved all my rights.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman still has his rights.

Mr. CRAMTON. And I am unable to find anywhere a requirement that a motion be made, but I shall be glad to make this motion if the Chair will recognize me for that purpose, although, if the Chair will permit, I would like to read this statement:

On January 25, 1901, the House was in Committee of the Whole House considering business on the Private Calendar under the rule making in order bills granting pensions and removing charges of desertion and political disabilities.

That is the other branch of the subject [reading]:

A question arising as to the consideration of a bill (H. R. 5931) for the relief of Henry L. McCalla, not strictly within the terms of the rule, Mr. Eugene F. Loud, of California, made the point of order that the Committee of the Whole House were operating under a mandatory rule of the House of Representatives, which the committee might not set aside. Therefore, the Chairman was not permitted to entertain a request that the bill be taken up.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the Chairman could not even recognize the gentleman to make a motion to take up a bill that did not have precedence, certainly any motion would not deny the right to those bills which had precedence.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair carefully considered the very case to which the gentleman from Michigan has referred, and has found nothing in that reference contrary to what the Chair has stated.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has heard the gentleman.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized to make a motion.

The CHAIRMAN. No motion is in order until the ruling is made.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve my rights.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has his rights and has had them reserved from the beginning. The Chair feels constrained to attempt to construe these two paragraphs of Rules XXIII and XXIV, so that they may both mean something, and therefore does not feel warranted in holding that the word "preference," mentioned in paragraph 6 of Rule XXIV, means that the Committee on Claims, by reason of having this "preference," must have every bill on the calendar reported from that committee considered before any other bill can be considered. The Committee on Claims would have the preference in making a preferential motion to consider bills reported from that committee and would continue to enjoy this preference provided that a majority of the committee did not vote otherwise.

Mr. CRAMTON. This is of some importance, if the Chair will permit. If it is in order for the Committee on Claims to have precedence it can not be then necessary to have a majority vote it. If it takes a majority vote to secure it, what benefit is the rule to the Committee on Claims?

The CHAIRMAN. The benefit of the right to a preferential motion to consider bills reported from that committee.

Mr. CRAMTON. Has the Chair ruled?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not been permitted by the gentleman from Michigan to rule.

Mr. GARD. Will the point of order lie that the Chair be permitted to finish his ruling?

Mr. WALSH. I was going to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I hope the Chair will not feel constrained to rule that a motion to take up war-claims bills would be in order on to-day when the rules give the Committee on Claims' bills preference.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Committee on Claims did not claim preference or attempt to exercise its preferential rights then war-claims bills undoubtedly would be in order, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But I hope the Chair will not rule on a day when the Committee on Claims have preference that on a motion in the committee the Chair would construe that bills from the War Claims Committee be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would not so rule. This is what the Chair would hold, that even though a motion had been made to take up some other bill and that motion were pending, if some gentleman arose and moved to take up a bill reported from the Committee on Claims or the bills on the calendar reported from that committee, the Chair would hold that to be a preferential motion and would put it to the committee. The Chair believes that this preference is all that is intended by this rule. To construe the rule to mean that no other bills can be considered on this day would result in this situation: That with two pension days on two Fridays of the month and claims and war claims alternating on the other Fridays of the month, there would never be an opportunity for bills coming from any other committee, like the Committee on Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, and other committees reporting private bills, to be considered at all. The present occupant of the chair does not believe that such a construction of the rule is required by the language of the rule or by any precedent or established practice. If such a precedent were established and followed, it would, in effect, take away from the committees of the House other than those given preference the opportunity to have their private bills considered. Such a result would be unfair, unwise, and not in accord with the spirit of the rules. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee of the Whole House now proceed to the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the Committee of the Whole House now proceed to consider bills reported from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Are we considering bills to-day on the Private Calendar not objected to?

The CHAIRMAN. No; there has been no order of that kind made.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Is it in order to raise the question of consideration in the Committee of the Whole upon bills of this calendar?

The CHAIRMAN. That question has not arisen and the Chair will not cross the bridge until he gets to it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I move as a substitute for the motion of the gentleman from Michigan that the committee proceed to consider the first bill on the calendar, S. 2867.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the motion made by "the gentleman from Michigan," under the ruling of the Chair, is a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains that point of order.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. May I ask a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair? I thought the Chair did not rule it was necessary to go to the consideration of claims, that that was a preferential order, unless another motion to another effect prevailed.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the basis of the Chair's ruling; but it is clear that the preference is intended to be given to the Committee on Claims to-day, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] has made the preferential motion that bills from that committee be considered, and that motion is now in order.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Then, the parliamentary status is this, that if this motion is voted down I may be recognized?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands it. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that he was in doubt.

Thereupon the committee divided; and there were—ayes 67, noes 76.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. CRAMTON and Mr. GREENE of Vermont took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 110, noes 109.

The CHAIRMAN. On this vote the tellers report that the ayes are 110, the noes 109. The Chair votes in the negative; the ayes are 110, the noes 110, the noes have it, and the motion is lost.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order. The vote was announced and the Chair has no right to vote.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order—first, that it was not a tie vote; second, that the Chair did not pass through the tellers; and, third, that the Chair announced the vote and then, after consideration, gave his own vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not pass between the tellers, and the Chair did not announce the vote. [Cries of "Oh, yes!"]

Mr. CRAMTON. The Chair announced the vote. We still have rights here. The Chair did announce the vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the Chair announced the result of the vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is correct.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Chair announced the result of the vote by tellers, and did not declare whether the affirmative or negative had it. But I doubt whether the Chair is authorized to vote without passing between the tellers, except in case of a tie vote. The Chair in case of a tie vote, where he has not passed between the tellers, has the right to vote in the affirmative in order to carry a proposition. But in this case there was no tie vote. I do not recall whether there is any precedent on the subject, but barring a precedent, certainly it seems the Chair could have come down and passed between the tellers by calling somebody else to the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks, reasoning by analogy, that if the Chair can vote on a tie, he should be permitted to vote to make a tie, which would be equivalent to breaking a tie since it would change the result. But the Chair will examine the precedents, and, if wrong, will recall his vote. The present occupant of the chair wishes to rule and vote only in accordance with the rules of the House and the precedents. [After a pause.] The only precedent the Chair is able to find in the very brief time at his disposal is the following. It is very brief, and the Chair will read it in full:

5997. Hinds' Precedents. On February 18, 1904, the fortifications appropriation bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union when Mr. Choice B. Randell, of Texas, proposed an amendment and a vote thereon was ordered by tellers.

The tellers reported—ayes 79, noes 78.

Thereupon the Chairman announced that he voted in the negative; that the ayes were 79 and noes 79, and that the amendment was disagreed to.

This is all the precedent that the Chair finds. [Applause.] The Chair overrules the point of order. The Clerk will report the first bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee proceed to the consideration of the second bill on the calendar.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move a substitute to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the committee proceed to consider the second bill on the calendar.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. To invite the attention of the Chair to the announcement he made in the ruling, that if this motion failed I might be recognized to make another motion to consider the first bill on the calendar.

Mr. CRAMTON. That was, provided it was a preferential motion.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. And the Chair recognized the other gentleman first. I relied on the statement of the Chair that I might move a substitute amendment.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair hear me just a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Vermont to make a motion.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CALDWELL. I thank the Chair very much for letting me state the point of order. The proposition is this: The gentleman asked the question in the ruling of the Chair whether or not he should be recognized for the Crowder bill if it was asked, and the Chair said yes; and immediately upon the Chair reading the precedent and sustaining his own ruling the Chair, without waiting, though the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] rose to his feet, for anyone else to say anything, directed the Clerk to read the bill, so that the gentleman had not lost the floor. But the Chair was carrying out the promise to the House, and so I make the point of order the Clerk should read the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can make no promise to the House except to carry out the rules of the House. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Vermont to make any motion proper under the parliamentary situation.

Mr. CALDWELL. The parliamentary situation is that the gentleman from Michigan has made a motion to take up the second bill on the calendar, and the Chair has recognized him?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. CRAMTON. I moved as a substitute that the committee proceed to the consideration of the second bill on the calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that this would simply be a complication—an unncessary complication—where the same result would be reached by a vote "no" on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is for the Chair to determine whether the House gets into a complicated position or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Chair held, as I understood, on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], to consider, first, bills from the Committee on Claims, which under the rules have preference; that it was not in order to substitute for that a motion to consider a bill from a committee other than the Committee on Claims. But the pending motion is to consider a bill from the Committee on War Claims, which does not have preference.

Now, it seems to me that where a motion is made to take a bill out of its order in the committee it is in order to amend that by substituting another bill. That is simply the motion of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE], to let the House express its determination. And while the Chair intimated there were complications, yet until the consideration of a bill has commenced in the committee under the ruling of the Chairman it is not in order to move to take up any other bill on the calendar, and the complication would be, if Members are alive to their jobs—and it looks to me as though they were—they could make motions one after another to take up any bill on the calendar, and if they were voted down each time, then the entire day could be consumed on motions to take up a bill out of its regular order in determining the right to take up a bill by way of substitution. It seems to me——

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; I yield.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Under the gentleman's contention, it would be in order for me to take up the packer bill during the day?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, if the packer bill was where it belonged, on the Private Calendar, for the purpose of subserving the interests of certain private individuals, especially the interests of the gentleman from Texas——

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. And the packers——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It would be in order. But it is not on the Private Calendar. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair intimated that he would rule not to entertain a motion until the other was disposed of, on the analogy that when a motion is made to go into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of a certain bill you can not move as a substitute to consider another bill; and that was the precedent that the Chair had in mind in making the intimation. But the Chair is inclined to believe that he was wrong, and is willing to accept the motion of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE].

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I offer as a substitute, then, a motion that the committee proceed to take up the first bill on the calendar, known as the Crowder bill.

Mr. TINCHER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kansas rise?

Mr. TINCHER. To make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TINCHER. I want to ask the Chair to tell me, under the ruling of the Chair, what advantage any bill has by reason of the rule giving it the right to preference to-day? For instance, I have in mind the third bill on the calendar, which is a bill from the Committee on Claims. I wondered if it would not be in order to demand the consideration of that bill, it having preference by reason of the rules of the House for to-day, and ask for the consideration of that bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would hold that that question having been put to the House to proceed to the consideration of bills from the Claims Committee, and the House having decided adversely to that, it would not have a privileged status.

Mr. TINCHER. That prompts another parliamentary inquiry: If the rule gives a certain bill a preference, does a tie vote defeat that preference?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Under the rulings of the Chair, the first bill on the calendar was reported to the House for consideration. "The gentleman from Michigan" then moved to take up, instead of that bill—that being the effect of the motion—to take up the second bill on the calendar. Now, the motion made by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] is not in the same position as would be a motion to substitute any other bill, because it is to substitute the very bill that was to be reported to the House, and which was to be substituted for by the motion of "the gentleman from Michigan."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is the gentleman accurate in saying that the consideration of the first bill was commenced?

Mr. CRAMTON. No. I stated this: "It was reported to the House for consideration."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No. I think the gentleman is again inaccurate. The gentleman from Michigan made his motion as soon as the Chair had ruled as to whether the first bill was in order. But the first bill——

Mr. CRAMTON. Whatever be the proper language, the idea I want to convey is this: That if the motion I have made is not adopted and should be voted down by the House, then under the rulings of the Chair, and in the absence of other action by the House, the House would proceed to the consideration of the first bill. And that is exactly what the gentleman seeks to accomplish by his substitute.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Suppose, however, the gentleman from Michigan, or myself, or any other member of the committee, moved to take up another bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, Mr. Chairman, I have some views of my own, that this all might have been very nicely avoided by following the rules of the House.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will not quarrel with the gentleman about that.

Mr. CRAMTON. We are not to blame for any complications that may arise. I stated that the motion by the gentleman from Vermont to substitute would simply bring before the House, if the substitute prevails, the very motion that would be brought before the House in the absence of any motion by me or by him, and that particular bill could not be substituted for the one that I have referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules that point of order.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the motion of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] that it is out of order because it contains no suggestion or attempt to suspend the rules, and I wish to be heard on that for a moment.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Kansas briefly on his point of order.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is necessary to say very much. It is very obvious that the rules of this House provide that the claims bills shall have preference to-day. That is the rule of the House, unless from the Committee on Rules, as has been suggested, another rule is adopted. That is still the rule, and the rules of the House can only be suspended by a two-thirds vote. The Chair has held, we will concede for the purposes of this argument rightly so, that he will entertain a motion to take up some other bill instead of a claims bill. That involves a suspension of the rules. The Chair can hear the motion, but in order to be in order it must contain the suggestion that the rules be suspended and that the committee take up something which will be considered in violation of the rules. While the Chair has held that he will entertain the motion, yet to have that in order it must say, "I move to suspend the rule"—that is, the rule which gives preference to the claims bills. The gentleman from Vermont has not done that, and his motion is obviously out of order.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair hear me for a moment on that?

The CHAIRMAN. Very briefly.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I think it is only necessary to say in response to what the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] has said, that it is not in order to-day to move to suspend the rules, and no one heretofore in this procedure has attempted to do that. We have sought an interpretation of a rule——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not care to hear the gentleman further.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to another point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order which the gentleman has made. What is the gentleman's other point of order?

Mr. LITTLE. The Chair has overruled my point upon the theory that you can not move to suspend the rules to-day, and, therefore, I make the point of order that this motion is not in order under any circumstances to-day, because you can not suspend the rules to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. TINCHER. I rise to make a preferential motion. I move that the committee consider the bill S. 1330, on the Private Calendar, reported by the Committee on Claims, as having preference on this day by virtue of the rules of the House over other bills that the motions concern.

The CHAIRMAN. The other motion is already pending.

Mr. TINCHER. I want to be heard on the proposition that my motion has a preference.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman very briefly.

Mr. TINCHER. And it ought not to take long, because the distinguished Chairman himself has ruled that the only thing which the rule of this House, which was cited by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], means is that the bills from the Committee on Claims have preference; that is, that the rule saying they have preference gives them a preferential standing if some one moves their consideration. There is a motion to consider war claims, and another one to substitute for that a bill from the Committee on Military Affairs. I have made a motion for the consideration of a bill reported by the Committee on Claims, which under the rules has preference to-day, and I think under the ruling of the Chair it would be preferential.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I submit that question has already been decided by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. That question was decided by the committee itself. The Chair overrules the motion.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. As I understand the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] he moved to consider a specific bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. WINGO. And the gentleman from Vermont offers as a substitute for that the consideration of another bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. WINGO. Why is it not in order to amend the substitute by specifying a bill that the gentleman from Kansas wants, giving its number? That would be in order; and I suggest to my friend from Kansas that if he wants to amend the substitute he may do so by substituting the number of the bill that he wants considered for the bill the gentleman from Vermont desires considered.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will hear me, I think the only analogy that the Chair can make is the rule of the House authorizing the House to resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union after one hour is used up on what is called the ordinary call of committees. That rule, which is paragraph 5 of Rule XXIV, expressly provides that it shall be in order under those conditions to move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider a particular bill—to which motion one amendment only, designating another bill, may be made.

While that rule is not directed to the Committee of the Whole House, it is an analogous matter, and the Committee of the Whole is guided by the rules relating to the House, so far as they are compatible with work in the Committee of the Whole. So it seems to me that one amendment substituting one other bill is in order, but that no further amendments could be made.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a further point of order, but pending that I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry as to whether the point of order ought to be made now or after the Chair determines the point of order now pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] is not germane to the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON]. The motion of the gentleman from Michigan proposes to consider a specific bill, not a series of bills. The Chair is familiar with the rule that where a motion is to consider or involves the consideration of a specific proposition, it is not in order to amend that by adding another proposition or by substituting another specific proposition.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I submit that these bills, all being on the Private Calendar, are all of one class, and an amendment is not the introduction of a new class of bills, but simply the amendment of a specific item in the class.

The CHAIRMAN. The substance of the pending question is not the merits of either bill. The point at issue is, Which bill shall be considered? The analogy in the rules cited by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes it clear that, following that analogy, the Chair should not now hold another amendment in order. The rule provides that where a motion is pending to go into Committee of the Whole on one bill, it is proper to move only one amendment to go into the committee on another bill, and the same rule will apply in Committee of the Whole House. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kansas rise?

Mr. LITTLE. I rise to move an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The CHAIRMAN. There is already one amendment pending.

Mr. LITTLE. Then I move this as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has just stated that under the rules of the House, where one motion of this character is pending, only one amendment can be made to it, and such an amendment is now pending.

Mr. LITTLE. I move this as a substitute. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Vermont by inserting in lieu of the bill he mentions, S. 1637, an act for the relief of Albert B. Campbell, and I would like to be heard for five minutes on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not entertain that motion, and will hold that it is out of order, unless the gentleman can bring more conclusive argument than he has thus far.

Mr. LITTLE. A parliamentary inquiry. Why is it out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. For the reasons just stated by the Chair, and so much better stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] a few moments ago. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Vermont.

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that he was in doubt.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. CRAMTON and Mr. GREENE of Vermont.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 134, noes 99.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Vermont is agreed to, and the question recurs on the adoption of the motion as amended.

Mr. CRAMTON. I desire to move to amend the motion as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule that that is not in order at this time, one amendment having been voted on.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; but does the Chair rule that, a proposition being pending before the committee, only one amendment of any nature can be offered to it? There can be only a certain number of amendments pending at one time, but the committee has before it now only one proposition, the motion made by the gentleman from Michigan as amended by the committee, and to that I desire to move a further amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, in addition to what the Chair has in his mind, you can not amend the original motion, because that has been displaced. You can not amend the substitute, because that has been adopted.

Mr. CRAMTON. But, if the gentleman will yield, we have the original motion as amended by the committee but not yet adopted.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But the original motion has been eliminated.

Mr. CRAMTON. The original motion as amended.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The original motion has been eliminated, because the substitute has been agreed to. We are past the amending stage in any event.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the Chair prefers, I will move a substitute.

Mr. DYER. I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the gentleman's point of order and holds that his motion is not in order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman is evidently trying to defeat the wish of the committee to consider a certain bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. If you want to debate the bill, I am willing.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] that the committee do now rise.

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. CRAMTON. On that I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. CRAMTON and Mr. GREENE of Vermont.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 102.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee declines to rise, and the question is on agreeing to the amended motion of the gentleman from Michigan as amended by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Vermont.

The motion as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. I wish to raise the question of consideration, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has just decided by a vote to consider this particular bill, and the Chair therefore declines to entertain that motion. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I raise the point of no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote just taken disclosed the presence of a quorum. Evidently there is a quorum present. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill (S. 2867) to authorize the President, when Maj. Gen. Crowder retires, to place him on the retired list of the Army as a lieutenant general, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in view of the long and faithful services of Maj. Gen. Enoch H. Crowder, Judge Advocate General of the United States Army, and especially his conspicuous services as Provost Marshal General in conjunction with the various State and Territorial executives and the local and district boards, in the execution of the selective-service law, the President is hereby authorized, when that officer retires, to place him on the retired list of the Army as a lieutenant general, with the retired pay of that grade as fixed by section 24 of the act of Congress approved July 15, 1870; and to grant him a commission in accordance with such advanced rank.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. To offer an amendment to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order at this time. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, what is the time on this bill?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. One hour.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Vermont yield for that purpose?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Certainly; I am willing to yield if the gentleman wants to take more of the time of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont yields. The Chair will hear the question.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am glad that with the aid of the gentleman from Vermont I have recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is enforcing the rule.

Mr. CRAMTON. I desire to know what the time for debate is. The Chair has stated that the gentleman from Vermont is recognized for one hour. Then will some one opposed to the bill have an hour in opposition?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will attempt to enforce the rule. The gentleman from Vermont under the rules of the House is recognized for one hour.

Mr. CRAMTON. But I have asked a parliamentary inquiry as to what further debate will be permitted?

The CHAIRMAN. Unlimited, so far as the Chair is concerned, except that debate must be confined to the bill under consideration.

Mr. CALDWELL. And any Member having the floor can move the previous question.

Mr. CRAMTON. Not in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, and gentleman, I dare say that I speak your minds when I suggest that you are quite as well prepared to vote on this bill now as you may be at the end of an hour or more of attempts to debate or discuss its merits. I dare say that I am also within the limits of probabilities when I suggest that the several votes we have just had more or less indicate the temper of the committee now toward this particular measure. At the same time I feel, having been charged with the responsibility of reporting the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs, that I would not be true to that responsibility nor would I be true to the object and purposes of the bill if I did not briefly outline some of the reasons why the committee felt constrained, yes, felt moved by common impulse, to ask the House to give Maj. Gen. Enoch H. Crowder the distinction of being retired at the completion of his active service with the exalted rank and dignity of lieutenant general in the Army of the United States.

I realize that following a great war, a great world cataclysm, in which the largest armies the United States ever employed in the field were engaged, and in which some of the most brilliant records were made by splendid American soldiers, this Congress is likely for some time to come to be beset on the right hand and on the left by requests to give recognition to the valor and gallantry and distinguished services of many of these leaders in the field. But I also realize, as doubtless you do, that unless we approach the task manifestly before us with something like deliberation, and with the idea that we will be judicial and judicious enough to avoid making our first step a dangerous precedent, we may help somewhat to solve the problem that lies before us in the near future.

It has been said that republics are ungrateful, and doubtless there is much in history to substantiate it.

It is worthy of notice that this particular war was not fought under conditions that prevailed throughout all ages past in war time where the combatants were more or less conspicuous in the open field, and where individual instances of gallantry and meritorious service, of distinguished leadership and great sacrifice stood out prominently on the canvas, so that the people throughout the country might personally recognize and identify these heroes.

War has changed its wrinkled front somewhat; it is just as murderous, just as barbarous, but now invokes the high intellectual powers of men to do these awful things by means and methods that do not bring the leaders as clearly in the light of publicity as great men who direct the awful carnage and death. So it seems reasonable that we ought to approach these questions of bestowing awards of honor to these soldiers of the war in a judicious and judicial manner lest we start with a precedent that may come to provoke us and plague us, and to defeat our better intentions through all the cases that may lie before us in the near future.

We know that it is the first common impulse of a man thinking about war heroes to think of the brilliant deeds of service rendered by great military men who led the troops on the battle field, and that impulse is natural enough, and of course is supported by brilliant instances in the long history of warfare. But, as I have just taken the liberty to remind you, the character of warfare has changed. Right in this very Hall a few years ago we all dwelt upon the peculiar characteristic changes in the manner of warfare and the fact that the Nation was in arms now, not alone the men on the battle field but every man, woman, and child who could render service to the country in her great hour of stress was invoked to perform that service, and that right from the start the patriotic devotion and service of our people, whether in the field, whether at the plow, whether in the factory or workshop, the duty devolved upon them equally——

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield? Is the gentleman thinking of presenting any reward to anybody who was working at the plow or the factory or in the shop?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I think the gentleman's question answers itself. I can not think of an answer as absurd as the question.

Mr. LITTLE. And I can not think of anything so absurd as the proposition of taking this lawyer, who never was in a fight in his life, and making him lieutenant general.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I should prefer to make my effort for missionary work somewhere else than the floor of the House. This is not a primary school. All men can not be on the battle field——

Mr. LITTLE. What battle field was this man ever on?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the only way to get an honorable reward is to be shot at, some man might get an old squirrel rifle and pull the trigger with his toe if he was sure that the aim was right. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLE. If this lawyer is to be made lieutenant general, why do not you make some of these farmers and nurses lieutenant generals? They are as much entitled to it as he.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Has the gentleman consumed all of my time that he desires?

Mr. LITTLE. No; I would like to have about 20 minutes of it, but the gentleman has not answered about the nurses yet.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I never saw a nurse who could not answer for herself. When I was interrupted I was about to suggest that there were important responsibilities——

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do.

Mr. JONES of Texas. In all seriousness does not the gentleman think it is unwise to select an individual who served this country and promote him in this fashion or give added distinction when it will necessarily exclude a great many who served on the field of battle and at the front?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I realize the gentleman's question is well founded in a very proper doubt, and I think we shall eventually be brought to exactly the same test of our judgment whether we dodge it now or not. There is unquestionably a reason to feel that men who have rendered unusual and peculiarly distinctive service when their country is in peril should have something more than a per diem when the proper time comes, when we are not in the first flush of enthusiasm over the thing and when we can approach it with more deliberation. Now, I realize, of course, there is no end to the amount of sacrifice in personal cases which were made in this country during that awful conflict, and yet as reasonable men, as men whose business it is to sit here and reason and deliberate apart from the influence of enthusiasm or even prejudice, I hope we realize that there are some institutional things in the Government that it is necessary sometimes to recognize by unusual distinctions because they are fundamental institutions and without them——

Mr. BANKHEAD rose.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the gentleman will permit me—there is really no certainty or security of government. Now, we can not recognize of itself such an impersonal thing as an institution. Humans as we are, we seek and we attempt to identify some person of the institution as best typifying the great work which that institution may have rendered during the crisis. It is entirely within that idea that we select a man who represents this institution, of a great governing force in the administration of this war along the line of the requirements of placing armies in the field and——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman now yield for a question?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I would be glad to yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. This bill seeks to confer upon Gen. Crowder an honor for his distinguished services. I would like to ask the gentleman from Vermont why it is, in view of the fact that Maj. Gen. Hunter Liggett—who is soon to be retired from the Army on account of age and was commander of the American Army in France, and who, I think, the gentleman will admit made a most brilliant record as commander of that Army—is not included in this bill? I would like to ask the gentleman whether, if the bill is to be passed, if an amendment will be permitted to be offered including Gen. Hunter Liggett?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I am afraid my good friend takes me somewhat at a disadvantage, because what I might say to him in my personal capacity in the presentation of legislation I would not feel authorized here in behalf of the committee I am now representing to guarantee on this floor, and therefore I want to suggest that from the gentleman's long experience in parliamentary usage and subtleties of parliamentary strategy he knows if we open this bill to amendment by adding the name of one man we might as well add the lineal list of the Army to it at once.

Mr. CALDWELL. If the gentleman will permit, I do not know whether the gentleman was present in the committee when the Liggett bill was up——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I was.

Mr. CALDWELL. A couple of days ago, and he might answer as to what took place.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not think I am privileged to reveal what took place in the way of deliberations of the committee just now.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Gladly.

Mr. RUCKER. In answer to the gentleman from Alabama, I understood the gentleman to say this bill is to honor Gen. Crowder.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. If it is passed he would never be a lieutenant general, active?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. No, sir.

Mr. RUCKER. It would have effect after his retirement from the Army?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes, sir.

Mr. RUCKER. Is it his purpose to retire as soon as the bill is passed?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I understand, not officially—I hope I avoid the risk of misquoting the gentleman—but I understand it is his hope to be able to retire under the law.

Mr. RUCKER. If the gentleman can not quote him accurately many other gentlemen can, because he has talked with them frequently. What amount of retired pay would this bill give Gen. Crowder?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. As I recall now, he would retire in his present grade of major general at $6,000 a year, and if he is advanced to the grade of lieutenant general he will be given $750 a year more.

Mr. RUCKER. $750?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Pardon me, but I hope it is not necessary to suggest that it is not a monetary consideration that brings out this bill.

Mr. RUCKER. I believe I can show to the House it is.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Very well.

Mr. RUCKER. And I want to say to the gentleman who reported the bill that the gentleman has developed the fact that he does not know the bill, as I shall show the gentleman when I get the floor.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Well, I am very sorry.

Mr. RUCKER. I appreciate the fact possibly the gentleman is sorry, but I mean no discourtesy. I mean to say the gentleman's statement about the amount this bill carries is not correct.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I said that I believed and so understood. You must remember, and I am sure the gentleman does, that the grade of lieutenant general does not exist in our Army, and we have only the analogies of the several temporary instances in the past when it was permitted to exist for a while to go by when we make any computation for the present. There is no statutory law, I am now of opinion, that absolutely fixes, as it does the other permanent grades of the Army, what shall be the emoluments of a lieutenant general.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman state in general figures what it is, as he understands it?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I can not, because I have been informed that I do not understand it.

Mr. RUCKER. I thought the gentleman would give me the benefit of his understanding.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. And in that I am very sincere. I mean no disrespect to my ancient friend; no disrespect whatever. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield to another ancient friend?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I would like to ask if the gentleman from Vermont, or any other member of the Military Committee, will state to the House exactly the amount of money that would be given to Gen. Crowder if this rank was granted to him under the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 15, 1870?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I am obliged to say to my friend exactly what I did say to the other gentleman just a moment ago, that I have not myself prepared all the argument that is to be, I hope, brought forward on this floor. There is some data, circumstance, and detail that I do not know. I only know in a general way that the grade of lieutenant general, being only occasionally created by special act for a special purpose, is not a part of the tactical organization of the Army that has a prescribed statutory limitation to all the emoluments that are connected with it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Could it possibly be true that this great committee would bring in a bill before this House creating this rank, and then not be able to tell the House how many thousands or hundreds of dollars the general will receive when he gets this rank, it being recognized by all of us it is for more than lieutenant general?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. When I get through, if nobody else will say anything, his assumption may have an argumentative effect on this company. I am not taking such a position and do not intend to. I have been chosen by the committee to open the door, and when I sit down the gentleman will probably be able to learn a great deal more than I will be able to tell him.

With the indulgence of the House for having occupied so much time, I merely wish to suggest this about the services of Gen. Crowder, and I will suggest again that the details will be dwelt upon by men who have prepared themselves to do it.

A great many people naturally question what may be the character and foundation of this service, and in the enthusiasm and excitement, the stimulus and the inspiration, of the Great War days, I dare say few people had occasion or took thought to inquire into the magnitude, the almost overwhelming magnitude, of the task that was put through by the Provost Marshal General of the United States. If you will permit me to get back just for this one little stepping-stone, I will say that years ago, when Enoch Crowder was graduated from the United States Military Academy at West Point and assigned to duty as a second lieutenant of Cavalry, he was sent to a far-away post in the Southwest. Those were the old, old days of the old, old Army, a solitary, hermitlike life in a little one-troop or one-company post out in the desert somewhere, in a place that had been marked out on the frontier line in Indian warfare.

Enoch Crowder went down there a young second lieutenant, a "shave-tail," as the Army calls them, to this isolated Army post, where there was little or nothing of service; but they were simply more or less on guard, waiting an occasional alarm from the Indians or excitement from bad men, so called, or from cattle rustlers, or something like that. And yet even then, in the beginning of his military career, Enoch Crowder did not choose to be idle, did not choose to luxuriate in the ease and independence of his assured military station. He began to study. He was naturally a student of men and things, of history and the philosophy of history, and particularly, of course, of his speciality in military science.

He made up his mind in those days that if again a great war confronted this country that there could be no question that it must have as a foundation principle upon which its armies were raised and organized and put into the field what we have come now to know as the selective service. In other words, this Nation would have to abandon its ancient and sentimental idea of the volunteer soldiers fighting the battles of the country, and that military duty and the duty of defending this country, even to the point of death, must be distributed among men just exactly as any civic responsibility must be and is distributed under the law, all men according to their measure alike. So the young "shave-tail" in his hours of leisure through years set himself to read all he could find in libraries and in other ways about the manner and the custom that had been followed in the small, incidental draft that had been conducted in this country during the Civil War and then the policy and the status and the practice in European countries in their great military establishments where the service was compulsory.

He perfected himself through years of study of this question until he became an authority upon it, and yet few people probably have ever known it outside of those intimates who may have shared in personal conversations with him at times when his hobby was up for discussion. Nobody knew about it. But when the time came when this country was confronted with exactly that same situation that this young "shave tail" had studied out in the deserts of Arizona 25 or 30 years before, he was ready with a draft of the law that went onto the statute books of this country in that great hour of emergency, with some amendment, of course, meeting the opinions of people on the floor and in the committee room, and it became the foundation upon which all our great armies, involving millions of men, were raised and sent to Europe and which came home with a glorious victory. His was the foundation law. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Permit me to go on for just a moment, and then I will be happy to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That, of course, is simply the recital of a well-known fact. Possibly there is no argument in it, and yet facts themselves, if properly marshaled, are better arguments than rhetoric, and certainly a fact like that will stand all the assaults of mere rhetorical critics, because it is the basic fact in our military history during the World War.

Now, I am only going to ask you to consider the magnitude of the task of Gen. Crowder in this aspect alone. You are familiar from your own experience with what happened here in Washington at the time, with much of its vexatious and sometimes exasperating detail. But when you think that after nearly 140 years of the old-time sentimental idea of serving our country in its armies by volunteering in time of war there was suddenly clapped down upon the people of this country the iron hand of the selective-service law, and that, too, without a popular referendum, and that, too, without any attempt to consult the hearthstones back home; and then when you consider that one man was called upon to be responsible for the administration of a law that was to go into every home in the land and search out every chimney corner and fireside and drag out every boy of physical condition and military age to go and make his fight for his country, no matter what he thought about it, no matter what the families thought about it, no matter about any other consideration except that one first elementary duty—you can easily imagine that the man who had that stupendous task imposed upon him did not have a very popular station in the United States of America during that time. We know that such a man, entering upon such a duty under such conditions, would have all the problems of evidence to meet in any case of misunderstanding, in any case of reluctance to perform the duty, in any case of misapprehension or complication of any kind, and all the evidence apparently would be by prejudice set against him and he would have to contend against all the adverse influences which you and I know came up from every section of this land, in some instances, to nullify that draft.

But it is nevertheless true, and I believe the gentlemen on this floor will respond to this sentiment as being true, that if there was one man who came through this great war test in high station in our Army and when the clouds had rolled away and when an opportunity for reflection and a perspective came to the American people, that man was held to have discharged a monumental task in true American fashion, it was Enoch H. Crowder. [Applause.]

Newspapers, pamphleteers, magazine men, people on platforms, and even the voices at the fireside in the homes, testified when it was all done that the man who was apparently equal to a task such as had never been laid before on a military administrator in this land was Enoch H. Crowder. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. How many young men are suffering unjust penalties in Army prisons to-day under the Army regulations that Gen. Crowder helped to maintain and perpetuate? [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not believe that that is altogether an argument against this bill. I am not a lawyer, but I think that there is a maxim of law that——

Mr. ROBINSON of North Carolina. I would like to answer that question.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I will be happy if the gentleman will.

Mr. ROBINSON of North Carolina. I want to state, in justice to Gen. Crowder, in reply to the question propounded to the gentleman from Vermont, that in September I had occasion to go before Gen. Crowder asking for the release of a young man in my county who was court-martialed on the charge of rape and larceny and sentenced to 20 years in prison, and who was at that time confined in the penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga. Gen. Crowder treated me with every courtesy, sent for the record, examined it, and stated to me that he found not a scintilla of evidence to sustain that charge; and within three weeks the young man was a free man. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Does the gentleman know that in October last year there were only 31 persons who were in Federal military prisons who were there at the close of the war?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I believe the gentleman has stated what the additional salary would be. What are the additional emoluments?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I have stated that as to that I am not fully informed. Those who will follow me will doubtless go into details as to that.

You gentlemen know in your own experience that it is true—it does not matter what we say here in debate sometimes for rhetorical flourish or for the purpose of carrying a point in argument—but the fact is that as to the man who is titularly the head of an enormous establishment, charged with the responsibility of carrying out the law, we all know that there are a great many facts of maladministration and details and instances of injustice which can not fairly and honestly be laid against that man's personal doorstep, where he can be made to shoulder the full responsibility. We could bring forward all sorts of instances of maladministration of great tasks like this against a great many men which they would then learn about for the first time. We all know that.

I am grateful to you, gentlemen, for your consideration and indulgence while I have endeavored merely to open the door. I am afraid I have taken up more time than I intended, but it was caused by answering questions. Those who will follow me will give the details, and give them in a better way than I could. I hope that in our consideration we will be both judicious and judicial. Remember that "peace hath its victories no less renowned than war." Remember also that war itself must divide the honors between those who served gallantly on the battle field and those who at home, by executive administration of great responsibilities nobly discharged, make it possible to achieve victories on the field.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont had an hour. He reserves the balance of his time.

Mr. QUIN rose.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Vermont reserve the balance of his time?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CRAMTON. I ask recognition in my own right in opposition to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] is the ranking member.

Mr. CRAMTON. Is he opposed to the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Mississippi opposed to the bill?

Mr. QUIN. I am.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is the ranking member of the committee, and in fairness the Chair feels he ought to recognize the gentleman.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman is not seeking recognition, as I understand.

Mr. QUIN. As I understand, there is no limit of debate agreed to?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. No.

The CHAIRMAN. There is unlimited time. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] reserves the balance of his time. The gentleman from Mississippi has an hour, which he can yield, if he wishes to.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. To inquire as to the parliamentary status. Has time been yielded to anyone else?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] has been recognized for an hour. What disposition does the gentleman wish to make of his time?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be some confusion in the minds of some Members about the debate, and in order to clarify it I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT. Has there been any limit placed upon general debate?

The CHAIRMAN. There has not.

Mr. GARRETT. Is it then true that whoever may obtain the floor is entitled to recognition under the rules for one hour?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands it, and the gentleman from Mississippi being the ranking member on the committee that reported the bill, and being himself opposed to the bill, is recognized by the Chair.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes of my time——

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman does not have to yield his time. Anyone can get recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can yield his time if he desires to do so.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, this committee is considering at this moment a measure that is presumed to honor some great hero of the late war. I voted on this floor and made a speech in favor of having the honor of general conferred upon Gen. Pershing. I believed that the American people owed that duty to the leader of our forces in this war.

I voted against making Rear Admiral Sims and Rear Admiral Benson admirals; and while I believe that every man who played a conspicuous and honorable part in this war is entitled to all the honor that is due him, I can not believe that the American people through the Congress of the United States owe the conferring by a private act of Congress of a special dignity upon each and all of the gentlemen who performed conspicuous services in this war while they were on duty as officers. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE], gave you some reasons why Gen. Crowder should have this honor.

I have no grievance on earth against Gen. Crowder as a gentleman or as an officer. My service on the Committee on Military Affairs for eight years has brought me into some close contact with Gen. Crowder, and if the American people owed a duty to give every man who has done splendid service in the war some great honor, increased emoluments and office, there could be no legitimate excuse against conferring this honor upon Gen. Crowder. But since, according to my conception of the duty of our Government, it is incompatible with the institutions of this country to follow the forms and fashion of monarchy, I can not support the bill that has come to us from the Senate conferring upon Gen. Crowder the title of lieutenant general, with all of the emoluments and retired pay that go with it. Listen! This war sent across the seas corporals, sergeants, lieutenants, captains, majors, colonels, brigadier generals, major generals. It sent across the seas millions of red-blooded privates, who were on the battle field in Flanders, with gas and shells flying about them. Seventy thousand of them lost their lives. The hospitals in this country are now filled with the wounded. This Government owes a duty to the private soldier and to the officer who lost his vitality and his ability to earn a livelihood during the remainder of his life, and it will do well to carry out its full obligation to each and all of that type. Here in the city of Washington we had several distinguished generals who rendered able service during the war, and down here in The Adjutant General's Office was Gen. McCain, who rendered splendid service during the war. Is it proper that this Congress should confer upon him the honor and title and emoluments of a lieutenant general and retire him on the pay of that office? Is it proper to take all of the officers, from one end of this country to the other who did their duty, and retire them with such signal honors as this? This Congress, in failing to pass this measure, would not reflect upon Gen. Crowder. It would in no wise reflect upon the splendid service he rendered his country in time of war and in time of peace. Not for one minute would I do such a thing as that, and I would not stand idly by and see it done. But this bill is calling upon the American people to place Gen. Crowder upon a special pinnacle, to confer upon him a special honor and a special privilege over the other officers who rendered splendid service in this war. Do you believe it reflects the sentiments of the people throughout this Republic to confer such an honor upon each and all of these distinguished gentlemen? I can not believe and I do not believe that our country expects the American Congress to pass such legislation as this.

We came out of the war with great honor to our country. Did Gen. Crowder do any more to bring honor to this Nation than did other splendid soldiers wearing the title of general? My friend from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] speaks of the great Army being gathered by Gen. Crowder. It did not depend on Gen. Crowder to fight its battles across the seas. All of the American people are entitled to the honor of winning this war. These young men who were gathered together from the workshops, from the offices, from the stores, from the mines, from the factories, from the farms of the United States and placed in the camps and sent across the high seas—all the officers over them, from corporal up to general in command, are entitled to what glory there is, and also, my friends, the man with the hoe, who was bending his back working in the hot sun, in the rain, in the snow, and in the sleet in order to produce food to feed the soldiers and officers connected with the Army, is entitled to his share of the glory.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. Certainly.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I want to ask the gentleman in what instances he would be in favor of the Congress of the United States recognizing the services of its officers and generals, and if he is in favor of recognizing them in any instance?

Mr. QUIN. This Government has done its full duty in that regard when it recognized the head of the Army, Gen. Pershing.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Did the gentleman vote for that?

Mr. QUIN. I surely did, and if the gentleman had listened to my speech he would have known it and the reason why the Government of the United States owed it to the Army. It was an honor to the men, from the humble private clear up to the officers and all of those under him. It was not any special honor conferred upon Gen. Pershing; it was, as I conceive it, an honor to all the soldiers and all of the men composing the machinery of that great organization that conducted this war. Certainly we could not go out and honor each and every distinctive individual soldier and every individual officer who performed splendid service by giving them distinctive honors and such emoluments as this bill does in this instance. So far as the emoluments are concerned, I presume that Gen. Crowder does not care anything about it.

Now, the American taxpayer is always the last man to be considered. I have no doubt they will put their eyes upon the American Congress and say, "Where do we come in?" I do not believe that the real hero, coming out of any war on the bloody battle fields, will ever have any contest on the floor of the House as to whether he shall be honored by conferring upon him the title for conspicuous service. Since the signing of the armistice in 1918, during all this time, has the American Congress honored anybody? At the proper time it rendered that honor to the American Army by giving Gen. Pershing great distinction in both branches of Congress, practically unanimous. Has our full duty been rendered to the men who fought these battles? You want to take an officer who sat in a swivel chair during the war, confer upon him conspicuous honor, when, according to my conception of its effect, this action would not extend to the privates and other officers of the Army. We might bring it where the private soldier of the United States engaged in that great struggle would have a conspicuous history and would be entitled to such honors as we are contemplating conferring upon this officer on this occasion. Gen. Pershing did not ask this Congress for any honor. The American soldiers have not asked this Congress to confer this title upon Gen. Crowder. The American private has not called on this Congress to pass this act. The American people, in my judgment, do not care for the time and money to be wasted in such legislation as this. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield? The gentleman controls the time for all who are opposed to the bill, and we are forced to come to the gentleman to get time. With the disposition shown here to steam-roller this bill through Congress some one may move the previous question and shut us out. While the gentleman controls the time, would it not be well to follow the customary procedure and allow the gentleman from Vermont to divide the time for speeches with the gentleman from Mississippi instead of taking the speeches all on one side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi controls 1 hour of the time, and as the matter now stands the gentleman from Vermont has half an hour remaining, and the gentleman from Mississippi has been recognized for an hour and has consumed 15 minutes, and has 45 minutes remaining in his control.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I have been out of the Chamber for a little while. Has there been any agreement as to time?

The CHAIRMAN. There has not.

Mr. TINCHER. I want to oppose the bill, and I suppose I will have an opportunity sometime if I remain on the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not promise the gentleman.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, is debate to be confined to the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask whether it will be proper for me to suggest to the gentlemen opposing the bill that we go along in the usual way and consume the time that each of us control, and then we can come to some understanding as to whether there should be an extension of time.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I think the gentleman is aware and perhaps others are that I have shown some interest in this matter, that I have been doing my best to get recognition, to which I feel I am entitled, in order to explain my reasons for opposing the bill, but that up to this time I have not been recognized. Under the procedure here to-day it would appear that any time the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] can get recognition, he may move to rise and go into the House and shut off debate. We would like to feel that we are not going to be gagged.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, if he is shadow-boxing, that is all well and good, but I have not shown any sign of moving to rise, and shutting off debate, and I never heretofore have been accused of trying to gag anybody.

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not know what the gentleman means by shadow-boxing, but I know what kind of a procedure is being had here to-day.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I want recognition in my own right. I want more than 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be constrained to recognize somebody in favor of the bill, when the Chair is informed what disposition the gentleman from Mississippi desires to make of his time.

Mr. RUCKER. I have no objection to that, if the Chair will recognize me afterwards.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair has an opportunity, in due course he will probably recognize the gentleman. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield or reserve his time?

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Vermont want to use any more of his time now?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I propose to use more, but I submit that it is the usual custom to keep the time very nearly balanced as between the two sides. The gentleman from Mississippi has three-quarters of an hour awaiting him, and I have only 30 minutes.

Mr. RUCKER. Then let me use my hour now.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I would further suggest to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] that he is much older and experienced on this floor than I, and he knows that if we begin to accumulate unused time on the part of everyone getting recognition of an hour, this thing will run off to a point where everybody will be disgusted.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to disgust anybody, but I want to talk, and I do not want to be limited to 15 minutes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I think if we go ahead and exhaust these two hours which are now apportioned, one on either side, we will get along better, and then will be able to determine whether we want a limitation of time, and we can rise and go into the House and ask for it.

Mr. TINCHER. The gentleman knows that he wants an hour now.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield the remainder of his time or does he reserve it?

Mr. QUIN. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Mississippi follow the usual precedent and use some more of his time now.

The CHAIRMAN. That is in the discretion of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would feel, inasmuch as the opposition has had one hour, that he ought to recognize somebody in favor of the bill.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Does the opposition intend to use any of its time?

Mr. RUCKER. I desire to use an hour.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is there anyone else on that side who desires time?

The CHAIRMAN. If no one is seeking recognition in favor of the bill, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

Mr. RUCKER. That is all right.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I ask to be recognized in the hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 30 minutes remaining.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I understand that, but I had hoped the other side would pursue the usual courtesy in the circumstances, and nearly equalize the time. If the gentleman from Mississippi does not propose to do that, then I am put to my other alternative.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not determine that for anyone. If anyone wants the floor in favor of the bill, the Chair will recognize them.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. FISHER].

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, am I to be taken off the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not had the floor.

Mr. RUCKER. I have had it for 15 minutes, although the Chair may not know it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Chairman, since the armistice too much attention has been given by Congress and its investigating committees to the repeated efforts to take away the great credit due the Army of the United States for winning the greatest victory in the history of the world. The people of this country are tired of these attempts to belittle the work of our Army. The passage of this bill which is a suitable reward for the great service rendered by Gen. Enoch H. Crowder to our country, will be most welcome news to our people who will rejoice that a man whose conspicuous services as Provost Marshal General in the execution of the selective service law has been recognized by the Congress of the United States.

We recognized the great services of Gen. Pershing and of our fighting forces in France when we created the office of general, but the war was not won solely by those of our Army who were fortunate to get in the battle line in France. In the passage of this bill we have now the chance where we can honor the great army of civilians who made up the organization and personnel of the selective service system. The selective service act authorized the President "to utilize the services of any or all departments and any or all officers or agents of the States, Territories, and the District of Columbia," requiring them "to perform such duty as the President shall order or direct." When this great act was being discussed in this House many predicted that the execution of the law would bring about a state of civil war in our country. Those of us who voted for the act knew that it was a new and untried scheme and that its success depended on the type of man who was put in charge of its execution. There can be no doubt now that Gen. Crowder, having prepared the law, was the one man in our country to undertake the task which was most intricate and difficult. Under the law a nation-wide machinery had to be set into motion. This system consisted of many parts and all had to coordinate and function regularly. There were (1) State executives, (2) district boards, (3) industrial advisers, (4) local boards, (5) Government appeal agents, (6) medical advisory boards, (7) legal advisory boards, (8) boards of instruction, and (9) civic cooperating associations.

These various boards and associations enabled practically every patriotic man and woman to render a service. Many who were physically disabled and unfit for service in our Army were given an opportunity to serve. Every home in our land responded, and the scheme of selection succeeded far beyond the predictions of its most enthusiastic supporters.

There were enrolled 24,000,000 men. We mobilized under it a selected army of more than 2,800,000. One million were mobilized within 90 days. The enormous group was classified in the order of its military and industrial importance. The war-time activities in the industrial world were speeded up and maintained to a maximum of efficiency.

In the report of the Provost Marshal is given a letter which well expresses the great work of this system:

> Public opinion is kind and cruel, lenient and severe, just and unjust, but never corrupt. It passes sentence after hearing only one side of a case, but, nevertheless, in most cases it enforces its decree. It was public opinion that enforced the draft law. The local boards simply administered it.
> The entire population volunteered. Congress merely designated the method of selection, local boards determined who should be exempted and the order in which the selected men should go, and public opinion attended to all cases of opposition to the law.
> I have seen men who looked haunted because of the moral conflict raging within their breasts, between the duties they owed their country, their families, their business, or themselves. I know of cases where it took moral courage to enlist and others where it took more courage to stay out. I know of cases where men displayed a lack of courage when they joined the colors, and of others where they showed a lack of courage because they did not. But in this emergency public opinion condemned no man who donned the uniform. It concerned itself only with those who did not (p. 288).

When we pass this bill giving recognition to the services of so distinguished an officer as is Gen. Crowder we do credit to the Congress of the United States. To retire him as a lieutenant general is an act of justice.

The thousands who were rendering service through the many coordinating agencies of the selective system, many of them at great sacrifice, will recognize that the tribute paid Gen. Crowder is a tribute paid the entire personnel of this great organization which penetrated to every home in our land.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Do I understand the gentleman is recognized in his own right for one hour?

The CHAIRMAN. No one else claiming the floor the Chair recognized the gentleman.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. So that the time thus far allotted is one hour to myself, one hour to the gentleman from Mississippi, and one hour to the gentleman from Missouri?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would have recognized——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I have no objection to raise.

The CHAIRMAN. No one claimed the right to the floor.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I simply wanted it to be understood.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Of course, the Chair intends to recognize some one who agrees with the gentleman, so that the time allotted will be divided two hours to a side?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair intended to divide the time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I wanted it clear that no one opposed to this bill was trying to get two hours to one of the gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentlemen who are standing for this bill had exercised their right they could have saved all this parade, this filibuster here to-day of roll calls, and brought out of their pockets the rule which the Committee on Rules gave them two months ago, but they did not do that.

I realize that in arising on the floor to oppose the passage of this bill I subject myself to some embarrassment, and perhaps to some criticism. Gen. Crowder comes from the State from which I hail. He is one of the eminent men who adorn the pages of history of that grand old Commonwealth. Near by from where he came, Gen. Pershing also came; so Missouri gave to the United States for service in this last war two of its most distinguished men, Gen. Pershing and Gen. Crowder, and I realize that in opposing the passage of this bill I subject myself to some criticism, perhaps.

Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. I do.

Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio. I want to suggest that Admiral Koons is also from Missouri.

Mr. RUCKER. I have not attempted to name all the distinguished Missourians, for if I did I would name my colleagues on both sides of the House. The more I have studied this bill the further away from it I have gone, and I believe now, and I make the statement deliberately, there is not a Representative on this floor, be he from the North or South or East or West, who can vote for this bill if he follows the dictates of judgment. Why? Oh, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. FISHER], with their wonderous eloquence and persuasive tones of voice, speak about the selective draft act. They say that Gen. Crowder is the author of that mighty, of that great bill. I am prepared to challenge the accuracy of the statement. I believe that a West Point graduate, a man by the name of Hugh S. Johnson, late a major of the United States Cavalry, an Oklahoma citizen [applause], wrote the draft bill, but, I admit, Gen. Crowder got credit for it. But it suits me just as well to accept the fact that Gen. Crowder is entitled to all the credit for that masterpiece of legislation, and if he is entitled to credit for the good the act contains, then answer me this, Is he not responsible for the bad it contains also? If he wrote the good that is in it, did not he write the objectionable? I will show you gentlemen before I get through that from the beginning of the appearance of the war clouds over this great Republic, when the rumblings of war and discontent confronted our people, at the time when every home was in distress and when hearts were bleeding everywhere, when this grand Republic was trembling in the balance for its cherished institutions, I will convince this committee that even at that early period the man who wrote this selective draft act, the man who gets credit for it, wrote into that act language which convicts him of being the greatest profiteer in the United States. A man who will seek to coin the tears and the anguish of a hundred million patriotic people into money is the foulest of profiteers. Did he do it?

I will read you a line or two from the first draft of selective-service bill sent to the Committee on Military Affairs, and in it I will point you to some language which shows the beginning of an effort which has been continuous from that day to this. In the very first draft of the selective-draft bill that ever came from the War Department to the Committee on Military Affairs occurs this language:

> Each bureau of the War Department shall during the existing emergency have the rank, pay, and allowances of a major general in the Army.

Now, if you say Gen. Crowder wrote that bill, then Gen. Crowder wrote that language, and for what purpose? To fill his pockets with money drawn from the pockets of the people by taxation.

The Committee on Military Affairs swept that language out of the bill, eliminated it, and did not report that proposition to the House. And I say that somebody was seeking to make money out of the war, and that somebody was one who, from his long life of service and great emoluments, was bound to respect that flag. But he did not secure the prize he sought through the draft bill. The committee would not report the language I have read, but, on the contrary, amended the bill by striking it out. The greed and cupidity of Gen. Crowder was not satisfied; he was still persistent. Later on this House was considering an amendment to the war-risk insurance act. It was the amendment which all you gentlemen remember that made allotments, allowances to widows and children and other dependents, and provided for the compensation of soldiers—a bill that had as many supporters as there are Members in this House. No man was opposed to it. Everybody was its advocate and for its speedy passage. The only difference of opinion was as to whether some man did not have a proposition more liberal, more beneficial to the soldier boy who made such great sacrifices for his country, and we vied with each other to bring about the best bill, the most liberal bill. It passed the House, my recollection is, by unanimous vote.

In the Senate there were some amendments. I will call your attention to amendment No. 120, put on by the Senate. And in connection with the amendment, I will say right now that Congress was about to adjourn, had already adopted a resolution fixing the hour for adjournment at 2 o'clock the following day. At about 4 o'clock the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] brought in a conference report, which had been agreed to and signed by all the conferees.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. For just a minute.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. The gentleman knows I have great respect for his ability and his opinion. I have just been told that under the original draft of the bill proposed by Gen. Crowder, the selective draft bill, that Regular Army officers would have had charge in every State instead of the civil authorities. Is that true?

Mr. FIELDS. That is true.

Mr. RUCKER. That is my understanding of it; certainly. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] can answer you, or the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] can.

Mr. QUIN. That is true; and the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. Shallenberger, and one or two others, and myself, helped to get that change made.

Mr. RUCKER. Yes; under the magnificent work performed by Gen. Crowder, if performed by him, some Army officer of the Regular Army of the United States would have invaded every home and taken our boys, but under the wise and humane plan recommended by the Military Affairs Committee and adopted by this House the work was done by civilians, by their neighbors, by 16,000 or 18,000 people all over the country. And I challenge the gentleman who is responsible for this bill to name any one of the hundreds of the local draft boards which contributed so much to the administration of that law. He does not know one.

Mr. VAILE. Does the gentleman consider a United States Army officer as in the light of an alien enemy when this country is engaged in war?

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman need not ask me that question. But the gentleman knows that all over this country people are jealous as to the interference with their rights by Army officers.

Mr. VAILE. They ought to be jealous of the Army officers to protect their rights.

Mr. RUCKER. I have been diverted. I have digressed too far from the matter I was discussing.

These gentlemen brought in a conference report, and I will read what it says with reference to this Senate amendment No. 120:

Pay attention to this:

> Amendment 120: Adds a new section to the bill, section No. 3, which provides for the revival of the term "general" in the United States Army and provides for the appointment of the commander of the United States forces now in France to this rank.

That is all we were advised about it. Everybody in the House was in favor of raising Gen. Pershing to the rank of full general, and the committee told us the Senate amendment did it. The rules were suspended by unanimous consent. The conference report was not printed in the RECORD. It was passed upon and adopted instanter, and then when we awoke to a realization of what happened we find that in addition to what the committee reported to the House, that Senate amendment 120 carried this additional language:

> And hereafter the chief of any existing staff, department, or bureau, except as otherwise provided for the Chief of Staff, shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a major general in the Army.

By whom was that inspired? Who had been active all the time in this matter? Some gentleman spoke here awhile ago about seeing Gen. Crowder incidentally. You know as well as I know, that Gen. Crowder has visited this Capitol and the House Office Building oftener since this bill has been on the calendar than he has in 25 years, perhaps. Night after night he or some one for him has visited offices of Members of Congress, night after night and day after day he or some one for him has seen you and consulted you and tried to fix you. Some gentleman said that not long ago he went to Gen. Crowder and sought to get a pardon for one of his constituents who was confined in the penitentiary on one of the Judge Advocate General's abominable 20-year sentences, and within three weeks that boy was at home. Oh, yes. I expect all of us could have gotten our boys out; we could have emptied the jails and penitentiaries if we had gone to Gen. Crowder before this bill came up for consideration. I am speaking plainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield? The gentleman does not mean to charge the Members of the House could or would or did go down to see Gen. Crowder under such circumstances as that? He does not mean to insinuate that?

Mr. RUCKER. No; and I did not say so. I said that he came here to see us or had some one come for him.

Mr. VAILE. The last remark does not sound any better to me than for the gentleman to say that Gen. Crowder was a domestic enemy.

Mr. RUCKER. I have great deference for the gentleman and want to please him, but I will not change one sentence in order to please him. What I said is true, or I believe it to be.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Does the gentleman mean to say that Gen. Crowder is a domestic enemy of this country?

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, no.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Is not that the statement the gentleman made a while ago?

Mr. RUCKER. I do not think I said so. I do not think any man wearing the national uniform is a domestic enemy; but I say he is not too loyal and patriotic to his country to try to get money from the Public Treasury through this bill, to which, in my judgment, he is not entitled.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The gentleman is simply calling attention to the fact that the general was very much in favor of increasing his salary $3,000 a year, and always had that interest?

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. I will.

Mr. KEARNS. In what way would this bill increase Gen. Crowder's salary to the extent of $3,000 a year? How would it do it?

Mr. RUCKER. Three thousand dollars a year is not a starting point, I will tell you.

Mr. KEARNS. How would it increase his salary $3,000, if that is not a starting point at all? Tell us how.

Mr. RUCKER. I will come to it later on.

Mr. KEARNS. Why not do it now?

Mr. RUCKER. I am trying to pursue a certain line of argument, and that would not be in the order as I have planned it.

A few moments ago I referred to three gentlemen, members of a conference committee. I do not mean to impeach them or to attach any blame whatever to them. Those gentlemen, two of them on this side, are honorable men, and one on that side is an honored Member of the House. They were simply overreached by some one, and they will tell the House so, frankly. By the passage of that bill for the aid of soldiers we also passed a bill that raised Gen. Crowder to the rank of major general and gave him the emoluments of that office, which altogether, I am told, amount to $8,000 or $10,000—about $10,000, $8,000 salary and approximately $2,000 emoluments. One would think that that was pay enough. But he was not satisfied, because that promotion and increase of pay was on October 5, 1917, in the closing hours of the session of Congress, and in the following May, when the Army appropriation bill was being considered by the Senate—not in the House, because the gentleman had already tried the House two or three times, and each time his avaricious ambitions had suffered disappointment, therefore he turned to the Senate, after the House passed the Army appropriation bill, carrying millions and billions of dollars for the support and protection of our boys who were fighting in foreign lands, who were being killed, and every breeze that wafted across the ocean bore to us the sad intelligence of the death of some of our boys—a bill he knew had to pass and was bound to pass promptly, Gen. Crowder got an amendment put on to the bill which says:

Provided, That section 8 of the act entitled "An act authorizing the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, shall be held and construed to authorize the President in accordance with the provisions of said act * * * to appoint as lieutenant general the officer detailed by direction of the President to perform the duties of Provost Marshal General.

Who was the officer? Gen. Crowder. That amendment was put into the Army appropriation bill in the Senate, but the House conferees struck it out and left it out. Then the war closed. There were no more bills that were so certain of passing that an amendment of the kind he sought would not result in their defeat, and therefore he had to resort to a different plan.

Let me tell you: It is of strange significance that on the 22d of August, 1919, a bill was introduced here in this House, and on the same day a bill was introduced in the Senate, and by a strange coincidence both bills are identically alike; every punctuation mark and the capitalization and every word are just the same; one introduced by our colleague from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who does not appear to be present now, and one introduced by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], both introduced simultaneously. Oh, they commenced bombarding the House and the Senate with a proposition to raise—a gentleman says to promote—Gen. Crowder.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman from Missouri want the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] to be here? He has stepped out for a moment.

Mr. RUCKER. No; I will tell you confidentially I hope he will not come back this evening. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is generally here, you know.

Mr. RUCKER. Yes. I did not mean to cast any reflection on him. You had better invite him in. I am going to read from one of his speeches, a very eloquent speech, but directly the contrary to what the man says who introduced this bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I understand he is getting a little sustenance, and I will notify him.

Mr. RUCKER. This bill was introduced simultaneously in the House and the Senate. The Senate, with that knack that they have, soon got consideration of it one day when there were a few Senators there. It was passed in the Senate, but while on passage it was amended. Now, let me suggest right now that if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] actually drew the bill, or if the Senator from Pennsylvania, who has filled so well and with such distinction so many high places under this Government, actually drew the bill, he or they knew just as well on the 22d of August, 1919, as they ever have known since what the bill should contain to accomplish the end desired. I think there is some question as to who drew it. I think the same man that some people say wrote the draft act wrote the bill, because on its passage in the Senate Senator KNOX caused it to be amended.

I asked a gentleman a while ago when he was on the floor how much money this bill would carry if passed, and, mark you, it will never do Gen. Crowder as a general of the Army one iota of good. If he serves 1 month or 10 months, he would serve as major general, even though this bill passes. It is only after he ceases service, after he quits the service of his country, after he turns his back, in effect, or, literally speaking, on the flag, that the bill becomes operative. After he retires from the Army the bill provides his name is to be placed on the retired list of lieutenant generals of the Army and paid every year thereafter as written in the bill.

Now, I ask the gentleman and I ask the other gentleman in charge of the bill if he is willing to interrupt me and tell me, and tell the committee, how much money will this bill carry if it is passed? As originally introduced it would carry three-fourths of $8,000, or $6,000 a year. But it was amended. As originally drawn the bill read:

To place him on the retired list as a lieutenant general of the Army, with the pay of that grade, and to grant him a commission.

And so forth.

That is the way it originally read.

As amended the bill provides that he shall be placed on the retired list of the Army as a lieutenant general with the retired pay of that grade "as fixed by section 24 of the act of Congress approved July 15, 1870." Why that amendment? Oh, that brilliant Senator knew what he wanted to do on the 18th of August, 1919. But why this amendment? It is for the simple purpose of extracting from the Federal Treasury $1,500 a year more than the bill would have granted otherwise.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. The gentleman says if this bill is passed it will give Gen. Crowder $1,500 a year more money?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. Awhile ago, in response to a question from the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], I understood he said it would give him $3,000 more money, and I ask the gentleman to explain that.

Mr. RUCKER. If Gen. Crowder should retire now under his present rank he would receive $6,000 a year during the remainder of his life. If this bill passes he will receive $8,250.

Mr. KEARNS. How much more?

Mr. RUCKER. Two thousand two hundred and fifty dollars.

Mr. KEARNS. I understood the gentleman a moment ago—possibly I misunderstood him—to say he would receive $1,500 more.

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, no; I did not. I say this: The bill carries $1,500 a year more than the bill as originally introduced would carry, because as originally introduced he would have received retired pay based upon the current salary of a lieutenant general—$9,000—but the bill as amended relates back to 1870 to an old, antiquated, repealed, annulled statute and ties himself onto that, because in that way he can claim $1,500 more out of the Treasury.

Mr. KEARNS. How much does the gentleman say he will get if this bill passes?

Mr. RUCKER. This is from the Comptroller of the Treasury:

In compliance to your request, you are advised that if Senate bill 2867 is enacted as it is now written Gen. Crowder, after retirement, will be entitled to receive pay at the rate of three-fourths of $11,000, or $8,250 per year, being $687.50 per month.

That answers the gentleman. But, mark you, in the same bill which authorized the appointment of Gen. Pershing to the rank of general it fixed the salary of general at $10,000 a year and of lieutenant general at $9,000 a year, and if this bill had passed unamended Gen. Crowder would have received three-fourths of $9,000. But by amending it so as to receive the pay of that grade "as fixed by the act of Congress approved July 15, 1870," by going back 50 years into antiquity and picking up out of the rubbish some old law which has been repealed for many years the proponents of this bill seek to give him $1,500 more than he would get if the bill were passed in its original form.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. Do I understand that if this bill is passed in its present form Gen. Crowder, upon retiring, will receive a larger salary than Gen. Pershing will receive upon retiring?

Mr. RUCKER. That is my understanding of it exactly. Gen. Pershing's salary is fixed at $10,000, and he gets three-fourths of that, while Gen. Crowder would receive three-fourths of the pay under an old, antiquated law that fixed the salary of lieutenant general at $11,000.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. My information is that Gen. Pershing's present salary is $13,500 for as long as he lives.

Mr. RUCKER. I have heard that.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. I am advised of that by the War Department.

Mr. RUCKER. I heard that was done by special act of Congress, but I looked for it and could not find it.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. They tell me at the War Department that he is being paid that.

Mr. RUCKER. That may be so.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. And $8,000 additional for allowances, making $21,000, that Gen. Pershing would get on retirement.

Mr. RUCKER. That is no parallel. Now, gentlemen, if it was not dollars and cents that somebody was looking for, I ask, why this amendment? If Gen. Crowder had come into this Congress asking through his friends to be honored for the part he played in this war, if he had asked that the Congress grant him some distinction, I doubt if there would have been any opposition to it; but every time he comes to Congress he comes with his hand out asking for some honor which can only be represented in a check on the Treasury of the United States. Oh, it is easy enough to do it. We can vote him this, and it will not bankrupt the Nation. But before it is done I want to remind Congressmen that we passed a bill—I never thought there was any good faith in it at all, although many of our people voted for it—we passed a bill last summer granting bonuses to the ex-service men of our Nation. It is hung up in the Senate, and I understand its death sentence has been pronounced. We know that all over this land, once so happy and free from care, there are to-day roaming over the country one-armed and one-legged men who turned their backs on home and family and offered their lives under Pershing's command in France. We know that many of our boys sleep in foreign soil. We know that others are hopelessly bereft of reason, that the future is dark with despair to them. They are knocking at the doors of Congress, and we are getting letters in every mail, not demanding but pleading with us that we do common justice to them. And I want at this time to relate a little incident with regard to an afflicted soldier.

During the last session of Congress a certain major in the Army from Gen. Crowder's office visited me in my office and pleaded with me to cease opposition to this measure. On that same day a scene was presented in the House Office Building which it seemed to me should arouse the sympathy of every man in this presence. A gentleman went in there to get lunch and found an employee of the majority—and I will call his name, because I honor him and know he is a splendid specimen of patriotic manhood—Mr. Pickering—you all know him. The gentleman went in and saw Mr. Pickering sitting at a table with a boy in uniform. He noticed Mr. Pickering was holding a glass of water to the soldier boy's lips. That attracted the attention of my informant, and he discovered that the soldier boy had neither hand. The incident was repeated to me and I sent for Mr. Pickering, and you can do that if you want to, for he is a brave, good man. I asked him the circumstances of his eating lunch with the soldier boy, and without my naming the particular district from which he came, Mr. Pickering said that he was going to lunch and saw the young soldier perambulating the hall, apparently looking for some one. He asked him if he could do something to help him. The boy said he was trying to find his Member from the State of New York, but he could not locate the office. Mr. Pickering said, "I will find it for you." He went to the Member's office, and when he got there the door was locked. Mr. Pickering said to him, "It is now lunch time and the Member is doubtless on the floor and his clerk has gone to lunch. You come and eat lunch with me, and when we come back we will likely find the secretary here." He said, "No; I can not eat lunch here; I must go out to Walter Reed Hospital and there get some of my comrades to feed me, for I have neither hand." Mr. Pickering said, "Come on, come with me; I am not ashamed to eat with and help feed a soldier who is bereft of his hands." [Applause.]

Then I said, "How did he lose his hands?" He said, "On the battle field. His gun was pointed at the enemy, when a shell came and cut off both hands with that one shell." Gentlemen, to-day that boy is getting the meager sum that we give him, but the titled officers, these men who are not crippled, are asking to run their arms down into the Treasury and get more pay for one month than this poor boy gets for a whole year.

Mr. PELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. PELL. Is it the idea of the gentleman that a general should not get more than a private?

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, by no means; but $8,000 is more than $2,000, is it not?

Mr. PELL. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. And a good deal more.

Mr. PELL. It is less per year of service that he has been in the Army in the United States than was voted to give every man in uniform.

Mr. RUCKER. I quote the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], in a burst of eloquence and patriotism, when he said if the Army officers are not satisfied with what they are getting, let them get out. He did not think of Gen. Crowder then. Gen. Crowder is the only one he wants to stay in, I expect.

Gentlemen, we have heard of Sergt. Alvin C. York, of Tennessee, a gallant officer, who, if the hearings before a committee of this House can be depended upon, was the one man who achieved a deed unexcelled by any man who wore a uniform of the American soldier. He captured 127 men, single-handed and alone, and among them three officers. A bill was introduced to promote that man to the rank of a lieutenant and retire him. That would give him about $1,800 a year. That bill was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs long before this bill now under consideration reached the Senate, and there it slumbers the slumber that knows no waking in the archives of the Committee on Military Affairs. When will they report it? I remember the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] appeared before the committee and made an exhaustive speech in which he recounted the wonderful deeds of Sergt. York. That bill has not been reported. This bill came from the Senate one day and was reported with agility, activity, and speed by these gentlemen the following week.

Why do you not bring up the York bill. Why has not something been done for that soldier whose deeds we heard so graphically detailed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. EAGLE] last week. Why, if you are going to reward service, do you not go back to Missouri, close to where Gen. Crowder hailed from, and find that young captain, Capt. Joe McQeen, who three times was wounded on the Argonne fields, who was finally dragged off for dead; whose company, consisting of 127 of the bravest boys of Missouri and Kansas, went into that battle, and when they came out of that awful fight there were only about 17 boys, all that were left of that gallant company. Why, if you are going to reward valor, do you not reward him? No, gentlemen, you turn your back on these boys of the Argonne fields in favor of an officer who never left Washington, who never faced danger, and reward him out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. I can not now, for I have not the time. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. RUCKER. I shall be glad if the Chair will notify me when I have consumed five minutes more. Gentlemen, let me call your attention to a significant fact, and I think it is significant. There is not a soldier in this House who fought in the American Expeditionary Forces who favors the passage of this bill; not one.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. Is there one in this House who fought in the War of the Rebellion who favors it?

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, I think not.

Mr. TINCHER. Gen. SHERWOOD is going to retire from this Congress on the 4th of March.

Mr. RUCKER. At that time, the gentleman must remember, the officers fought. They do not fight now as they did then.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. FISHER. Will the gentleman not admit that it was solely through the selective draft act that the world now knows of York of Tennessee?

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, no.

Mr. FISHER. Does the gentleman understand that he would not volunteer, and it was only through the selective draft act that he was brought into the Army?

Mr. RUCKER. With all due deference to the gentleman from Tennessee, you never can convince me that a man who has the American courage to capture 120 Germans, single-handed and alone, and with but one pistol, would not have gone to the rescue of his flag when that flag was in peril.

Mr. FISHER. The gentleman must know that York would not volunteer? He had religious scruples against volunteering in the Army.

Mr. RUCKER. That may be, and that is one of the good things of the selective service act; but I am not in favor of paying Gen. Crowder $2,250 a year always because he happened to discover York. [Laughter.]

Mr. TINCHER. Does the gentleman understand that the Military Affairs Committee offer as an excuse for not reporting the York bill and reporting the Crowder bill the argument offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. FISHER]?

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, no; I do not think so.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman from Kansas should make a statement of that character.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, I could not suffer that to be taken out of my time. I want to say one word in conclusion, and I apologize for talking so hastily and so incoherently. When I think of all these cases, when I think of the fact that in the town that Gen. Crowder came from there lives the widow and two little orphan children of Maj. Stepp, who died across the sea, and that nothing has been done for his widow and orphans, but that we must now take Gen. Crowder up and not only honor him by giving him a high title, but honor him by perpetually paying money to him out of the Treasury of the United States, I am reminded of a little poem—

> A blind man is a poor man, and blind the poor man is,
> For the former seeth nobody, and the latter nobody sees.

Gentlemen, turn from Gen. Crowder and all of the glory and glitter of high Army officers stationed in the city of Washington, and look through the battle fields for the heroes of the war, for those who came back wearing the crown of glory and of victory, and go search those mounds in France, and every one of them represents the burial place of an American patriot, a hero to whom we owe some duty. [Applause.]

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NEWTON].

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized as was the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Vermont withdraw his yielding?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NEWTON] for one hour.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with regret to efforts upon this floor to discredit the achievements of Gen. Crowder and to attempts to deprive him of the honors and awards which, because of the services which he has rendered, he so richly deserves. As a Member of this House who hails from his native State and who knows the many friends who admire him, I feel that I would be derelict in my duty should I fail to arise from my seat to say a word in his behalf, because however severe and unjust the attacks upon him he can not come here to defend himself against them.

In 1877 a tenant farmer in Grundy County, Mo., mortgaged his only team in order to enable his son, Enoch H. Crowder, to go to West Point. So limited were his resources that young Crowder traveled the entire distance in a day coach. By hard application and studious habits at West Point he laid the foundation for a long, active, and useful career. Immediately after he graduated he entered active service, and his record in the War Department is replete with a career of achievements so useful and diversified as to be seldom, if ever, equaled in that department. He has seen active service in the field. For 14 years he served as a Cavalry officer and distinguished himself in the Sioux and Apache Indian wars. But, in addition to being a soldier, he has been a student, and by patient and arduous work has equipped himself until he has been acclaimed the greatest military lawyer in the country. It was Gen. Crowder who worked out and set in operation the civil governments of Cuba and the Philippine Islands, and it was he as Provost Marshal General of the American Army, when this country was hurled unprepared into the European conflict, who formulated the plans and constructed the machinery which, under his direction, selected and marshaled the greatest army in the shortest time ever known in history. The recognition of his ability has been confined to no political party, nor has it been limited to the World War. On January 9, 1913, President Taft, in a letter to Secretary of War Stimson, after relating the long, brilliant governmental and international career of Gen. Crowder, said:

> Whenever contingency arises in which it is necessary to have a man of great experience, a law administrator, and a lawgiver Gen. Crowder would be peculiarly fitted to satisfy the governmental need. I regard him as the best Judge Advocate General we have had in a long time. He is a real lawyer. His opinions are based upon his own judgment and do not respond merely to the wishes of the man who asks his opinion.

When we entered the World War and the herculean task of raising an army from an undrilled and unprepared people arose before us President Wilson, recognizing the training, experience, and ability of Gen. Crowder, appointed him provost marshal general. So well did he perform the duties assigned to him that on June 7, 1917, two days after the first registration, Secretary Baker, in a public letter addressed to Gen. Crowder, said:

> You have done the biggest thing of its kind we have ever been called upon to try, and you have surrounded it with an atmosphere which not only created the success but made of it a stimulating demonstration of our national solidarity and patriotism.

A little more than a month later the Secretary of War, inspired by a sense of gratitude and justice, wrote a public letter to Gen. Crowder in official recognition and appreciation of his great work, in which he said:

> When this letter reaches you the actual drawing of the numbers selecting the men for the first National Army of 500,000 men will have been completed and the third stage in your great task brought to a successful conclusion. First, you drafted the law for this great undertaking; second, you perfected with extraordinary accuracy the registration; and third, you worked out with infinite patience and zeal the arrangements for the great choice which affects the careers and lives of so many young men of our country.
> It is not necessary for me to recount the embarrassment and difficulties which you have had to face; they would have discouraged, if not appalled, one having less devotion or less clear and serviceable knowledge.

Three months later, when an army of one-half million men had been mobilized, in a public address in New York, again Secretary Baker officially recognized the marvelous service of Gen. Crowder in the following language.

> I have had an intimate, a most intimate, opportunity to observe the writing and working of the selective service law. I know better than anybody else who wrote it, who interpreted it, and who accomplished in the main its success. There are in the lives of all men moments which above all others are supreme, and this moment is justly entitled to be a supreme moment in the life of Gen. Crowder.

Thus it will be observed from the statements of Secretary Baker it was Gen. Crowder who wrote the draft law, that it was he who interpreted it, and that it was he in the main who accomplished its success. And in this connection it is well to remember that to him is due the credit of abandoning the draft system adopted during the Civil War of conducting the draft by the military forces and of substituting in its stead the democratic system of organizing draft boards of civilians who lived in the community where the work was to be done and who knew the families and the circumstances surrounding the men who were to be called to the colors of their country.

It is doubtful whether there was a man in this land who was so well equipped to judge of the worth of public and military service or whose heart yearned more for America's success than Theodore Roosevelt. On August 19, 1917, after the task of selecting the first division of our American Army was well on the way, Mr. Roosevelt said:

I regard Gen. Crowder's work with the draft as one of the best specific bits of work our Army has done in my time. I knew he would do it well, but I had no idea of how very well it would be. Of all our people in the first six months of the war he is the man who has actually accomplished most, the man to whom all good Americans should be most grateful. I respect—and I fear that I envy—the man who has earned the right to have this said of him.

Mr. Chairman, when I think of the marvelous services which Gen. Crowder rendered to his country in the hour of its great peril, of the patience and fortitude and endurance with which he took up a most difficult and unpopular assignment, and when I think of the brilliant success he made of it all, I am distressed when I find that the Member of this House who has the distinguished honor to represent in Congress that district, which gave Enoch Crowder to the country, should fail to appreciate the services which he has rendered. People of that district, boyhood friends of Gen. Crowder, have been to my office and pleaded with me to fight for him and do all within my power to counteract the hostile efforts of their Representative.

Mr. MILLIGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. MILLIGAN. Was not Judge RUCKER the only Democrat in this House to be reelected from Missouri?

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Inasmuch as the gentleman has raised that question, I call to the attention of the House the fact that although Judge RUCKER is the only Democrat in the present House to be reelected from Missouri, yet he had not made the speech that he made to-day when the last election occurred, a speech in which he charged Gen. Crowder with being a profiteer, and in which he reflected upon his honor, his courage, and his character. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] must have felt that Gen. Crowder had friends and admirers in the old district in which he was born, because prior to the primary two years ago, when the Trenton Weekly Republican and Tribune, a newspaper published in that district and in the county in which Gen. Crowder was born, published an article under the headline "Rucker opposes Crowder," and stated, in effect, that it had learned that Congressman RUCKER was disgruntled and was fighting a bill to promote Gen. Crowder, Mr. RUCKER wrote a letter to the editor of that paper, which was published at his request on July 25, 1918, about 10 days prior to the primary, in which Mr. RUCKER was a candidate. (I seem to have misplaced my copy.)

Mr. RUCKER. I will furnish a copy if the gentleman will tell it all.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. I have it here. It was published on the 25th of July, 1918. It reads in part as follows:

Mr. RUCKER. It is a very good letter.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. I know it is; I agree with the gentleman. In that letter Mr. RUCKER says:

I desire to add that I have had many business transactions with Gen. Crowder and always found him competent and courteous. It has been my proud boast that among my many distinguished constituents was one man who is perhaps more prominent than any other American citizen in matters relating to the existing war, unless it is Gen. Pershing. I have a high and exalted estimate of Gen. Crowder and of his great achievement in connection with the enforcement of the selective-draft law. His distinguished services richly merit the recognition of a grateful people; and I as the Representative of that district from which he entered public life, would be gratified at any time to be able to cast a vote in recognition of his most distinguished and gallant services. I am not "disgruntled," have not been, and could not be with reference to Gen. Crowder or any matter pertaining to him. Our relations have always been pleasant and agreeable.

I trust you will give this space in your paper and that my friends who have written and wired me since your article appeared will accept this as an answer to their communications.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. Now, as the gentleman knows, I wrote my letter in response to a newspaper article attacking me for having opposed Gen. Crowder?

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. And that letter was written before I knew anything about the things that I have talked about to-day, and I will say that I still honor him, but I will not take money out of the people's Treasury to pay him.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Many attacks have been made and much criticism offered regarding the court-martial proceedings during the late war, and it has been urged that inasmuch as Gen. Crowder was Judge Advocate General during that period, and that such proceedings were had in that department, he should be held personally responsible. I have abundant confidence that any fair-minded man who is conversant with Gen. Crowder's record in dealing with military offenders and who is familiar with his activity during the late war will conclude that this criticism is unfair. In addition to being Judge Advocate General when war was declared he was appointed, as I have heretofore stated, Provost Marshal General of the Army, and with that appointment came responsibilities which required all of his time and which were of the first order of importance to the country, and the duties of the office of Judge Advocate General necessarily had to be performed by others. It was manifestly impossible for Gen. Crowder, while drafting and revising and putting into operation the laws for raising a vast army in a limited period of time, and while formulating the machinery and guiding its operation in registering the manhood of the country and in selecting therefrom with care an army of 3,000,000 men from the fields, the factories, the shops, and the mills, to examine court-martial proceedings.

Shortly after Gen. Crowder became Provost Marshal General Samuel T. Ansell, then a lieutenant colonel in the Regular Army, but who was subsequently advanced to the grade of brigadier general in the emergency forces, became Acting Judge Advocate General. In that capacity Gen. Ansell remained in immediate charge of the Judge Advocate General's office and immediately responsible for the performance of the Judge Advocate General's functions in respect of courts-martial until after the armistice, except for a brief period while he was in Europe, during which period Col. James J. Mayes was in immediate charge of the office. While serving as Acting Judge Advocate General Gen. Ansell undertook to constitute himself and the office over which he was presiding a court of last resort, asserting the power to review and reverse or modify the decisions in all court-martial proceedings resulting in convictions. When notice of that assertion of power reached the Secretary of War he brought the matter to the attention of Gen. Crowder as Judge Advocate General of the Army, who examined the law pertaining to his office and concluded that no such power had been conferred by Congress. He held that such appellate power as had been established had been conferred by Congress upon commanding officers authorized to convene courts-martial and upon the President of the United States as Commander in Chief of the Army, and that appellate power should not be usurped by the office of the Judge Advocate General. His opinion was upheld by the Secretary of War and later by a committee of the American Bar Association, and generally by every reputable legal authority that has critically and impartially examined the question.

Though Gen. Crowder found himself compelled to hold, as a matter of law, that the Congress had not placed the power of appellate review in the hands of the Judge Advocate General, he was prompt in suggesting that Congress be requested to establish full appellate power; and he was likewise prompt, while awaiting the action of Congress, in devising as near an approach to the exercise of an appellate power as the law would permit. He drafted and submitted to the Secretary of War, for transmission to Congress, a proposed amendment to section 1199, Revised Statutes, designed to vest full appellate power in the broadest way in the President of the United States as Commander in Chief of the Army, who would regularly act upon the advice of the Judge Advocate General as his constituted legal adviser. The proposed amendment was transmitted to the chairmen of the Military Affairs Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives by the Secretary of War, and was introduced in both Houses—S. 3692 and H. R. 9164, Sixty-fifth Congress—but, due, no doubt, to the great volume of business requiring the attention of Congress at that time, the proposed amendment never reached the floor of either House. Practically coincident with his action looking to new legislation upon the subject, Gen. Crowder transmitted to the Secretary of War a draft of an order designed to establish, pending the action of Congress, a system of review of records of trial by general court-martial. The plan thus proposed was promulgated as General Order No. 7, War Department, January 17, 1918. In carrying out the plan established by that order a board of review was constituted in the office of the Judge Advocate General, and a branch office with similar functions was established in France; and from that date every record of trial by general court-martial involving serious punishment was, in fact, required to be reviewed in the Judge Advocate General's office or in the office of the Acting Judge Advocate General for the American Expeditionary Forces in Europe, with the same care with which a court of last resort of a State reviews a record of trial by an inferior court; and though technically the Judge Advocate General's office and the branch office were without judicial power to reverse or set aside an illegal sentence, nevertheless substantially the same result was obtained as if the power had existed, for the record in each case involving serious punishment was reviewed as to its legal sufficiency before any order respecting the execution of the sentence could be issued. Statistics show that only in the rarest cases did a convening authority ever fail to act upon the recommendations of the Judge Advocate General's office respecting the legal sufficiency of a record of trial.

On June 4, 1920, the President approved an act reorganizing the Army, and including, as Chapter II of the act, a code to be known as the Articles of War, which had previously been approved, after long study and extensive hearings by the Military Committees of both Houses of Congress, and which contained a revision of the law pertaining to court-martial proceedings. In that code it was written so plainly that he who reads can not fail to understand that the power of reviewing and reversing or modifying judgments in court-martial proceedings is vested in the President of the United States, and not in the office of the Judge Advocate General—except in those cases where the board of review, which the law establishes, and the Judge Advocate General are in concurrence as to what should be done; that is, those perfectly plain cases in which, because there is really no question as to how they should be disposed of, Congress did not think it necessary to burden the President personally with them—thus confirming the views of Gen. Crowder as to the intention of Congress as to where such appellate power should be vested.

Let us examine Gen. Crowder's record in dealing with military prisoners and determine by his actions whether his conduct has been harsh or inhuman. In 1911 he was appointed Judge Advocate General of the Army. At that time the Government had three military prisons—one at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., one on the Atlantic coast on Governors Island, and one on the Pacific coast on Alcatraz Island, in San Francisco Bay. In those prisons were confined not only general prisoners convicted of purely military offenses or of misdemeanors, but also many who had committed grave crimes against the ordinary laws of the land. All were treated substantially alike; that is, those who had committed offenses no more serious than an infraction of Army discipline were dealt with in the same manner as those who had committed grave crimes. The men who had not been guilty of offenses involving moral turpitude were held in intimate association with those who had committed such offenses.

Feeling that these prisoners should be segregated, Gen. Crowder formulated a plan which was indorsed by the War Department, made effective by general orders in 1913, and finally adopted by Congress in 1915, to segregate prisoners guilty of purely military offenses or of misdemeanors from those who were guilty of grave crimes and who were criminals at heart. Pursuant to Gen. Crowder's plan and recommendations, Congress converted the three military prisons above referred to into disciplinary barracks, in which the lesser offenders whose acts involved no moral turpitude were given an opportunity to reform. The prison clothes which had theretofore been worn and which carried numbers on their backs were removed from such prisoners as availed themselves of the new conditions and earned the opportunity thus afforded them. As soon after arrival in the institution as their conduct and prior record warranted, they were placed in uniforms and equipped with rifles without firing pins. During a portion of each day they were drilled in military exercises and during the remainder of each day they were given an opportunity to learn trades. They were surrounded by environments which encouraged them to become respected and law-abiding citizens. If their conduct justified, they were permitted again to join the colors and earn an honorable discharge, and to those who feared to again hazard the test of Army discipline was given aid in seeking civil employment. So that instead of military prisoners who had been guilty of offenses involving no moral turpitude being subjected to association with offenders guilty of grave crimes and being dealt with in the same manner and finally turned out into the world as ex-convicts, they were given a helping hand by Gen. Crowder, and thereby many of them were again honorably restored to the colors or returned to civil life as useful citizens. The system of dealing with military prisoners thus evolved was firmly established by congressional enactment in 1915 and is still in effect. Under the operation of the reformatory system thus established in disciplinary barracks upon Gen. Crowder's recommendations, more than 4,000 men originally sentenced to dishonorable discharge and confinement have since 1913 been restored to the colors and thus afforded an opportunity to earn an honorable discharge before finally leaving the Army. In this connection and as one illustrative example of the result of Gen. Crowder's efforts, it may not be out of place to cite the case of an enlisted man sentenced to two years for desertion. He arrived at a disciplinary barracks in March of 1916, acknowledged the error of his former conduct, earned assignment to the disciplinary battalion, was restored to duty within nine months, and assigned to the Sixty-fourth Infantry. He became, successively, corporal, battalion sergeant major, and regimental sergeant major; landed in France early in 1918, and, being anxious to get into the fighting, began again at his own request at the bottom as a private in another organization; was promoted to sergeant, fought at Chateau-Thierry, was sent to an officers' training camp, and was commissioned a second lieutenant in October of 1918, was promoted to first lieutenant before the end of that month, and on armistice day was in command of his company, Company L, One hundred and thirty-eighth Infantry.

Shortly after the close of active hostilities, within three months after the armistice had been signed, and almost immediately after his return to duty in the Judge Advocate General's Office—that is, in February, 1919—Gen. Crowder established in his office certain clemency and restoration agencies to examine the record of trial of every military prisoner then in confinement in a disciplinary barracks or a penitentiary pursuant to the sentence of a general court-martial, and to recommend to the President, in each case, such clemency as might appear to be just and reasonable. As rapidly as possible—and by far the greatest portion of the task was accomplished within six months—the records of 9,545 military prisoners whose average term of confinement as originally adjudged was five years and eight months, were examined, with the result that pursuant to recommendations based upon those examinations, the entire unexecuted portion of the sentence to confinement in more than 3,000 cases was remitted, and the average term of the prisoners remaining in confinement was reduced to 1 year and 10 months.

But the establishment and operation of clemency and restoration agencies does not constitute the sole contribution made by Gen. Crowder to assure that no man convicted by a court-martial should be required to undergo excessive punishment. Almost immediately after his return to duty as Judge Advocate General following the armistice and practically coincident with the establishment of the clemency agencies above referred to, Gen. Crowder took effective measures to prevent the imposition of sentences that might be regarded as unduly severe. Upon his recommendation the Secretary of War, on January 22, 1919, caused instructions to be sent to every officer exercising general court-martial jurisdiction impressing upon each such officer the manifest propriety of observing in general the limits of punishment fixed by the Executive order of 1916; although up to that time Congress had not conferred upon the President, or any other central authority, the power to limit maximum punishments in time of war. And on March 10, 1919, in a letter addressed to the Secretary of War, Gen. Crowder went on record in favor of—and recommended—a legislative modification of the Articles of War which would invest the President in time of war, as well as in time of peace, with the power to fix limits of punishment by Executive order. That recommendation has since been embodied in the new Articles of War enacted by Congress in June 4, 1920.

It is interesting to note that while on April 1, 1917, before the World War began, and when the Army comprised only 100,000 men, the military prisoners confined in disciplinary barracks and penal institutions numbered 2,300. Yet on October 31, 1920, after the World War had been fought and while the Army still consisted of over 200,000 officers and men, and after an Army of 4,000,000 men had been called to the colors and had served and had been discharged, but after the President had acted upon reports made by the clemency and restoration agencies established by Gen. Crowder, the military prisoners of the country in such barracks and institutions numbered only 2,500, or only 200 more than before the war began. In the face of this record, who would dare to charge that there has been anything in the conduct or official action of Gen. Crowder in his dealings with military prisoners which is subject to criticism or reproach?

By an act of this Congress the office of general in the Army of the United States was revived for Gen. Pershing, and his appointment thereto has been confirmed. By that act Gen. Pershing is allowed to retire with full pay and allowances for quarters, heat, and light. He is now receiving a salary of $13,500 per annum, with an allowance for quarters, heat, and light amounting to $8,000 per year, making his total annual pay $21,500 as long as he lives.

Gen. Crowder now receives $9,500 per annum for salary and allowance for quarters. If this bill becomes a law, he will receive, after his retirement, $8,250, with no allowance for quarters.

Mr. TINCHER. That is, after he retires?

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Yes; after he retires he will receive this salary with no allowance for quarters. Nearly all the Members of this House voted to make Gen. Pershing a general for life with the salary of $13,500 per year and with an allowance for heating and quarters, after his retirement, which amounts, in addition, to $8,000 per year. When we remember the honors which have been conferred upon Gen. Pershing, the privilege which was given to him to lead our armies overseas and to lead the triumphal marches in this country after the Army returned, and when we remember the difficult and painful task which we gave to Gen. Crowder of raising the army which Gen. Pershing led and which made victory possible, do we begrudge to Gen. Crowder the $8,250 per year for the little time he has left after his retirement? If after casting a vote to confer that honor upon Gen. Pershing I should vote against this bill providing for Gen. Crowder, I would be ashamed of myself. [Applause.] I believe in being just and fair and equitable, and I do not believe that any man can give a fair, just, or equitable excuse for voting against this bill after doing what this Congress has done for Gen. Pershing.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield once more?

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. I will.

Mr. RUCKER. If the gentleman votes to pass this bill the same argument will be made with reference to another one that will take in the whole line of officers.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. I will say, in answer to the question, there is not any other man in the military service of these United States in the last century who stands in the same class with the peculiarly effective service rendered by Gen. Crowder.

Mr. RUCKER. Some stand in a better class, having led victorious armies on the battle field.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. The proposal in this bill to promote Gen. Crowder, when he retires, from the rank of major general to the rank of lieutenant general, in order that when he retires he may receive that honor and be allowed to retire with the retired pay of an officer of that rank, is not new in our history. Congress conferred that honor upon Gen. Nelson A. Miles, commanding general of the Army during the Spanish-American War. They also conferred that honor upon Gen. S. B. M. Young, who commanded a brigade in Cuba and the Philippine Islands during the Spanish-American War. That honor was also conferred upon Gen. Adna R. Chaffee, brigade commander during the Spanish-American War. It was also conferred upon Gen. Arthur MacArthur, who served during the Spanish-American War and was afterwards Governor General of the Philippine Islands. It was also conferred upon Gen. Henry C. Corbin, Adjutant General of the Army. It was also conferred upon Gen. John C. Bates, commander of a brigade during the Spanish-American War.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Were all these gentlemen retired with the rank of lieutenant general?

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Exactly. Many of these officers are still alive and drawing their retired pay.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Were they retired under the act of 1870, which gives them $1,500 extra?

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. This bill does not give Gen. Crowder $1,500 extra. This bill provides only $8,250.

I am told by those who have examined the bill and studied it carefully that this bill will result in his receiving, after he retires, $8,250 per year as long as he lives, without any allowance.

Mr. RUCKER. That is true; but does not the current law or the act of 1916 fix the salary of a lieutenant general at $9,000?

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. I know it was the purpose of framers of this bill—and I think there is no doubt about them having accomplished their purpose—to have Gen. Crowder receive $8,250.

It has been contended that Gen. Crowder's service did not require him to go to the front. But Gen. Crowder was not responsible for his failure to get to the front. After he had constructed the draft machinery and had set it in operation, and after he had inducted the earlier drafts, he went to the Secretary of War in person and pleaded to be permitted to organize a division and to go with it to France; but he was advised that his services in raising the Army, and his ability to handle that department, were so important to the country that he could not be spared to take the command of soldiers and go to the battle front.

As the result of the last war there stand out in America two great military figures. One is Gen. Pershing and the other is Gen. Crowder. To Gen. Pershing was given the honor—the envy of every soldier—of commanding our armies at the front. His was a service which caught the imagination of the masses, and kindled the enthusiasm of the Nation. The eyes of the world were upon him, because he was at the scene of the conflict. When the war had been won and the enemy vanquished, he returned, a conquering hero. His path was strewn with flowers, while he rightly received the plaudits of a grateful people. And the Congress justly rewarded him by creating for him the office of General of the Armies of the United States, to which he has been appointed and confirmed. To Gen. Crowder was assigned the painful, difficult duty of going to the mountains, prairies, and valleys of the country and calling from the homes and firesides of the people the boys who were to make up the Army which Gen. Pershing had the signal honor to command. This service did not appeal to the popular fancy. But it was a service fully as necessary and difficult as any service rendered in France; for without the draft an adequate army could not have been raised; and without an army Gen. Pershing could not have achieved success. Yet, difficult as the service was, Gen. Crowder performed it with boundless success. He constructed the machinery and set it in operation, which without friction or discord registered 24,000,000 men. From that number he called to the colors 3,000,000 men, while a million more volunteered in the Regular Army and the National Guard without waiting for the draft. Four million men were mobilized and drilled, and more than 2,000,000 of them were landed in France in a time so short as to amaze the civilized world. In performing his task Gen. Crowder expended only $30,000,000 out of a much larger appropriation, and the charge has never been made that graft ever existed in his department or that one dollar of that vast sum of money was ever misappropriated. Great men of this Nation have acclaimed his work as one of the marvels of the conflict, and yet there are those among us who begrudge to Gen. Crowder the recognition a lieutenant generalcy would imply.

Now, gentlemen, I do not care to take more of your time. I think that when you have examined the facts in this case, when you have studied the justice involved in this bill, you will come to the conclusion that this Congress, as a matter of gratitude and justice, can do no less than to give to Gen. Crowder this honor, because by his services he has so richly deserved it. [Applause.]

Mr. QUIN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

The CHAIRMAN. How much time?

Mr. QUIN. Thirteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] is recognized for 13 minutes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, in every debate in this House that extends for any length of time and that is contested with any feeling whatever, a number of side issues necessarily are brought in, and this debate is no exception. For my own part I would like to emphasize that I am glad to concur in much which has been said in behalf of this measure by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NEWTON]. I am very glad to be able to agree with them, as I think all of us are, that America played a wonderful, glorious part in the Great War. I think we are willing to concede that Gen. Crowder, at the post of duty that was given to him, performed his duties to the best of his ability, with credit to himself and his country. But I contend that we may agree to all that and still feel that this is not the time to give him the preferred recognition proposed, and that if we are to give him preferred recognition at this time the bill reported is not the proper expression of that desire.

Gen. Crowder was not the only man who performed his duty to the best of his ability and with credit to himself and his country.

Both great political parties in their platforms adopted less than a year ago pledged themselves to give recognition to certain individuals who performed their duty in that crisis. I have looked in vain to see anything in the political platforms concerning the meritorious services of Gen. Crowder or of other generals who worked here in the department, but I do find in the Republican platform the pledge that the Federal Government should treat with the utmost consideration every disabled soldier, and the Democratic platform contains a like pledge. Still every Member of this House knows that there are in committee to-day and that there are upon the calendar measures to give proper care to the disabled soldiers, and the time remaining in this session does not permit their consideration by the Congress. Those disabled soldiers can not get the justice that the platforms of both parties and the demands of the country insist they shall have, but we can take a day here to give preference to Gen. Crowder.

Further, a bill passed the House in the last session to give expression of the appreciation of the people of the United States to the services of the men in khaki through the adjusted compensation law. I stood here at this center aisle to-day as several votes were taken by the tellers with reference to this measure, and there came between the tellers the members of this committee, and I say to you the thing that impressed me most, remembering the fight we had here to get adjusted compensation for those men who made the real sacrifices that the country wants freely to recognize—I remember that I found coming through between the tellers man after man and score after score of those who voted against adjusted compensation for the private soldier, trooping through to vote for this preferential proposition for Gen. Crowder.

But I do not want to tear down any credit due Gen. Crowder, neither do I want him preferred above every private soldier, and above every officer who served with distinction on this side or on that side in the war. [Applause.]

But they say, "We recognized Gen. Pershing, and so we must recognize Gen. Crowder," linking those two names as the great military chieftains of America in a century. Let that stand for itself. We recognized Gen. Pershing in part for his own services, but in part we gave that recognition to the great commander in chief of our forces in the field, as a recognition to the armies themselves. But when in this bill you recognize Gen. Crowder, it is Gen. Crowder alone. But they say that it was a greater responsibility to sit at a desk in Washington and draft legislation and handle the selective-service measure than to command troops in the field.

I remember in July, 1918, I sat on a field near the River Ourcq, where a week before the soldiers of Michigan and of Wisconsin had won imperishable fame as they pressed back the German troops—back, back, kilometer after kilometer, to Fismes. I sat beside an old schoolmate of mine, a major in the service with the National Guard, who had under his command in that fierce fighting boys from his own neighborhood in Grand Rapids. My old friend was still shaken from his experience and his responsibility. It had not been his privilege to sign his name to orders—to appear before committees of Congress. It had been his duty on the field of battle to say to this bunch of boys that he had known from babyhood, whose parents he knew, "You make that attempt," when he knew that it was death to those whom he selected. Can anyone believe there is any comparison between the responsibilities that lie upon the shoulders of a general behind a desk at Washington as compared with the responsibilities of any commanding officer on the battle field? I say we have no business here to make this preference for Gen. Crowder. And let me say to you, one and all, that if this Congress adjourns on the 4th of March having given this preference to one desk general and denied proper recognition of their claims to the soldiers disabled during the war, and to the men in khaki who made the sacrifices, you will hear from it every time you meet a man in khaki in your home districts.

Well, time passes. I say not only that we ought not to make the preference proposed here; but if we were going to give Gen. Crowder preference, this is not the proper kind of a measure. I think there is not a squarer man in the House than my friend from Vermont [Mr. GREENE], nor is there any in whom I have more confidence, both in his honesty and his ability and his knowledge of military matters. Still, when he was before this committee he was asked why they went back to the law of 1870, and what the effect would be on Gen. Crowder, and he was not able to give the committee the information.

I have before me the bill that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] introduced. It is identical with the Senate bill now before you, except that the Senate bill harks back to the law of 1870. Now, what is the difference? I have here an Army pay table compiled by the Chief of Finance of the War Department. I find in this that on active duty the pay of a lieutenant general is $9,000 a year, of a major general, $8,000, from which I understand that Gen. Crowder to-day on active service, this highly important active service, is getting $8,000 a year. If he were to-day promoted under existing law to lieutenant general, he would get $9,000 a year.

Now, the rule of retired pay is 75 per cent of the pay on active duty. I have not examined the law, and I do not know whether there is a provision in the law for retired pay for lieutenant general, but if there is, the analogy would be for retired pay three quarters of the pay on active duty, and you can easily reckon that. Instead of that they go back to the act of 1870, section 24, in which it is stated—and there is nothing about the section which is not very plain—that the pay of a general shall be $13,500 a year, and of a lieutenant general shall be $11,000 a year—$2,000 more for pay for active duty under that act than under existing law. It is very plain to be seen why they went back to the law of 1870.

It is said that the measure is simply a matter of recognition by giving him extra rank. Recognition? I say that the reference to the act of 1870 entirely dispels any such illusion, and the object of it pure and simple is financial, to give him a higher pension in the retired pay than he otherwise would have.

There are many other measures here pending before the Committee on Military Affairs——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman will yield, what will be the pay of Gen. Crowder if retired?

Mr. CRAMTON. Three-quarters of $11,000, and the gentleman can figure that in his own time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to get recognition.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I would like to get recognition, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, in five minutes' time I think I could make the best speech by indorsing what the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] said and what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NEWTON] said. I agree with them. If I had any doubt about it at all when we commenced the consideration of this bill, I believe I would have been converted; and if it was necessary for my salvation, I think I would have joined the church. [Laughter.]

I am acquainted with Gen. Crowder, but not intimately acquainted with him. He is not one of my constituents. I have no prejudice against him. I believe he did great and effective service. I do not believe that there is any man who has talked or will talk on this matter that will dispute it.

If I am reliably informed, and I think I am, as soon as Gen. Crowder's work was done he applied for service across the seas, and it was denied him; possibly properly so. I have no brief to defend Gen. Crowder. As I said, he is not one of my constituents. I did not know him up to the time he commenced his duties that he has performed so well.

Now, I have great respect for the soldiers. They have been well treated; they will be well treated after we are all forgotten. "Oh," says somebody, "you voted against the bonus bill." Yes, I did; and I would do it again, because it was used as a vehicle to call together and pull through a lot of legislation that would have been enormously expensive in the name of furnishing homes for the soldiers. I have answered for that to my constituents. I am willing to vote all proper aid for care of the wounded and diseased. I am ready to vote a proper bonus to stand on its own merits. So much for that.

I have little patience with the man who gets up and praises the work of Gen. Pershing and then attacks Gen. Crowder for so ably performing his duty in the enactment and writing of the law and the administration of the law that enabled Gen. Pershing to receive the support of the most magnificent Army that ever existed in the annals of time. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer a suggestion. We have already parceled out time by individual recognition for two hours on each side, and in the experience of the House as practical men we know that is far more than the usual time allotted in measures of this kind. It would seem as if that ought to be sufficient for general debate. I do not want to take advantage of my parliamentary privilege by moving to rise, and I know that the House does not want to force me to that extremity. Can not we arrive at some agreement as to the remaining portion of time to be parceled out to both sides?

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman in charge of the bill is trying to arrive at an arrangement.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I would say to the gentleman that I want to speak for 15 or 20 minutes against the bill, but because of the way in which the time has been used it seems to be an impossibility to do that, unless I can get recognition from the Chair. We have no desire to extend this debate unnecessarily, but there are many gentlemen here who desire 5 or 10 minutes. There is the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], and a dozen other gentlemen.

Mr. LITTLE. I would like to have 20 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. And the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MURPHY], and several others.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It is quite obvious in my situation that I am not really disposed in principle or by strategy to give over any more time to the opposition. At the same time I think we ought to break fair and be good sports about it, and I know the gentleman from South Dakota wants to do that.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. That is the attempt.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Would it be a fair proposition, considering that we now have four hours already allotted and partly consumed, that we should rise and fix some time in the House for the termination of the debate and agree to a division of that time and then close out absolutely with all good faith to that agreement?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Can not that be fixed right here by unanimous consent instead of going into the House?

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I thought I had a sort of understanding by which I was to be recognized by the Chair at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not promise the gentleman from Kansas any preference over any other Member of the House.

Mr. LITTLE. But the Chair did promise me, as I understood it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman in charge of the bill is trying to arrive at an arrangement in respect to time.

Mr. LITTLE. As I understood it, the Chair did tell me that when these gentlemen who had already been preferred had finished their argument he would recognize me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman when those who have been already recognized, who are entitled to precedence over the gentleman, have used their time.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentlemen interested on the other side consent, under such parliamentary form as may be necessary, that one hour more be allotted and so parceled out that 30 minutes of it will be allotted to those on each side, so that whoever gets recognition of that hour will see to it that 30 minutes of it goes to the opposition?

Mr. LITTLE. That would not give time to those desiring to be heard.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The idea is so that it would really make the division here of two hours and a half on each side.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman means one hour more, in addition to the time remaining unused?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes; but with the understanding that whoever gets the recognition will divide it thirty-thirty.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I think that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] should be given the hour, if it is given to anybody.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is that agreeable?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The gentleman can submit his request, and I shall not object to it.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I shall.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I submit the unanimous-consent request that the next recognition for one hour be with the agreement, so to speak, that 30 minutes be occupied by the side taking the hour and the other 30 minutes by the opposition.

Mr. LITTLE. The suggestion of the gentleman is not satisfactory to me and I shall have to object.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. How much does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] desire?

Mr. LITTLE. I do not imagine that I shall take over 10 minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. How much time has been consumed of the different allotments that the Chair has already recognized the gentlemen for?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont has 20 minutes remaining, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NEWTON] has 31 minutes, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] has 10 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] 32 minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is an hour and 32 minutes, approximately?

The CHAIRMAN. Approximately; yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I ask the gentleman from Vermont to submit a unanimous-consent request that there be 45 minutes on a side. That would take care of all gentlemen who want to talk. That would give the gentleman from Kansas 10 minutes. I think we could reach an agreement upon that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Probably we could reach a unanimous-consent agreement if we could agree on who is to control the time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. That would be for the Chair to decide.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Chair can not decide that.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, if we can come to an understanding that there shall be, in addition to the four hours that are already allotted and partially consumed, 45 minutes additional on a side, with the understanding that the time be controlled by somebody agreed upon on one side and by him allotted so that there will be no further misunderstanding about the division of time, I shall be willing to consent to it and to make such a request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will formulate his request.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the gentleman expect to finish this debate to-day?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is what we are trying to do. I ask unanimous consent that, in addition to the four hours already allotted, there be 45 minutes additional of debate for each side, making an hour and a half in all; that the time on this side be in the control of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] and that the extra 45 minutes on the other side be in the control of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent that, in addition to the time already allotted and partially consumed, there be an hour and a half additional, 45 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] and 45 minutes by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And that at the end of that time general debate shall end.

The CHAIRMAN. And that at the end of that time general debate shall close. Is there objection?

Mr. SISSON and Mr. RAYBURN. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, I would like to make this inquiry. I understood the gentleman to say there is an hour and 32 minutes remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. Something like that; an hour and 32 minutes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This would make three and a quarter hours, after which time there would be debate under the five-minute rule with a roll call or two. I do not know whether I want to miss my dinner engagement for the purpose of hearing more hot air or not.

Mr. WINGO. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RAYBURN. For the present, in order to settle this, I object to the request.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I ask unanimous consent that a request for one hour be allowed by the Chair, and that that time be divided 30 minutes each between the sides.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the arrangement suggested before by the gentleman from Vermont seemed to me reasonable, and in view of the importance of the bill I would have to object. I shall have to object to this.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. All right, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, on that I demand tellers.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAYBURN. What is this on?

The CHAIRMAN. That the committee do now rise.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. GREENE of Vermont and Mr. CRAMTON) reported that there were—ayes 96, noes 47.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill S. 2867, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. CRAMTON and Mr. BARKLEY) there were—ayes 71, noes 96.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. It is clear there is no quorum present.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Did not the gentleman from Oklahoma ask for the yeas and nays?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought the yeas and nays were demanded on the point of no quorum, and wondered——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I am not sure an automatic yea-and-nay vote would come under the motion, but I should not think so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. It does not require a quorum to adjourn. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Oklahoma when he made the demand for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 110, nays 205, answered "present" 1, not voting 112, as follows:

YEAS—110.

So the previous question was ordered.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. KAHN (for) with Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. KNUTSON with Mr. BELL.

Mr. RANSLEY with Mr. O'CONNOR.

Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania with Mr. SMITHWICK.

Mr. TOWNER with Mr. STOLL.

Mr. TREADWAY with Mr. SIMS.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. BELL, and will withdraw my affirmative vote and answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Is this motion to go into Committee of the Whole House and fix the time for debate divisible?

The SPEAKER. There are two motions. The first vote is on the motion to close debate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that is a dilatory motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not feel that he would be justified in so considering it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We have just had a motion to adjourn.

Mr. BARKLEY. And another roll call.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; and another roll call; and it is not adjournment time. We have just had a motion to adjourn voted down. It is clearly dilatory.

Mr. BARKLEY. Business has been transacted in the meantime.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That does not affect the fact that the motion is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not believe he is justified in calling the motion "dilatory" now. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the House do now adjourn. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 92, noes 129.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks for tellers. Those in favor of taking this vote by tellers will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Fifty-eight gentlemen have risen in the affirmative—a sufficient number. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] will please take their places as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 99, noes 136.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] that the House do now adjourn. Those in favor of that motion will answer "yea" when their names are called; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 133, nays 181, answered "present" 2, not voting 112, as follows:

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota (for) with Mr. KAHN (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. BRITTEN with Mr. CONNALLY.

Mr. DENISON with Mr. FIELDS.

Mr. FOCHT with Mr. FLOOD.

Mr. KENDALL with Mr. MCKEOWN.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from California, Mr. KAHN, and I desire to withdraw my vote of "yea" and to vote "present."

Mr. KNUTSON. I desire to withdraw my vote and to vote "present." I am paired with the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. BELL.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Is there not some quick way in which we can dispose of this legislation, so that we can take up the packers' bill?

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] to close debate.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. CRAMTON) there were—ayes 134, noes 89.

Mr. CRAMTON. I demand tellers, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 157, nays 140, answered "present" 4, not voting 127, as follows:

So the motion to close debate was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. HOWARD (for) with Mr. WINGO (against).

Mr. HILL (for) with Mr. CROWTHER (against).

General pairs:

Mr. FREAR with Mr. BLANTON.

Mr. COOPER with Mr. PHELAN.

Mr. GOOD with Mr. DEWALT.

Mr. MANN of Illinois with Mr. MONTAGUE.

Mr. HAYS with Mr. HOLLAND.

Mr. MONDELL with Mr. WATKINS.

Mr. KLECZKA with Mr. ROBINSON of North Carolina.

Mr. KIESS with Mr. MCLANE.

Mr. LAMPERT with Mr. RAINEY of Alabama.

Mr. LANGLEY with Mr. SCULLY.

Mr. LUCE with Mr. BLAND of Missouri.

Mr. MCARTHUR with Mr. HAMILL.

Mr. NOLAN with Mr. BRUMBAUGH.

Mr. SNELL with Mr. SCHALL.

Mr. SWOPE with Mr. NEELY.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. HOWARD, and I withdraw my vote of "no" and answer "present."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I think I must have been in the corridor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to withdraw my vote of "no" and answer "present." I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. SNELL.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the motion of the gentleman from Vermont be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that that motion is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the further consideration of the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The SPEAKER. But the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. On the motion to close debate, but not on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the motion I have made, it was based on the fact that the motion for the previous question had not been made except on the motion to close debate. A request for a division of the question was made by the gentleman from Mississippi before we voted on the previous question, and the vote on the previous question was only with reference to that part of the motion. It was my understanding that the way would then be open for the other motion, the preferential motion to lay it on the table.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. The motion of the gentleman from Vermont now pending is that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. That motion is not in order after the Committee of the Whole House has reported to the House that it has come to no resolution on the measure, which has been considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see any basis for the gentleman's statement.

Mr. WALSH. This is not a Union Calendar bill. We resolved ourselves into Committee of the Whole House, and now the motion is that we resolve ourselves into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the motion that way.

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman from Vermont will admit that the motion he made was to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was not aware of it.

Mr. WALSH. And the Chair stated it in that form.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not pretend to remember as to that, but he did not suppose so.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I did make the motion in that language, and I ask now to amend the motion, as I have a right in the House to do. I had in mind to resolve ourselves into committee from which we had just emerged and expected to use that language.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the previous question has been ordered on his motion to go into committee, the gentleman can not move to amend; and if it has not been ordered, my motion to lay on the table is in order and has preference.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I repeated the usual formula, but used unnecessary words. I had in mind the committee from which we had just emerged, but a Member has a right to amend his motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to amend before the previous question is ordered.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, in view of the unfortunate situation we are in, and to give the gentleman time, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MONDELL. That is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is dilatory.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It is not the duty of the Chair to assist the gentleman from Vermont out of his unfortunate predicament, is it?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman from Vermont has not asked the Speaker to take him out of any predicament. The gentleman from Vermont is quite aware of the motion that he made.

Mr. CRAMTON. More than that, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Vermont can not take himself out of his predicament.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes, he can; because he moved the previous question on the second part of his motion.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then that substantiates what I have been urging to the Chair.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I am not debating that with the gentleman.

Mr. CRAMTON. That being true, we are in agreement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that the previous question was ordered on both motions.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, may I refresh the Chair's recollection about that?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. When we got back into the House from the Committee of the Whole House, the gentleman from Vermont moved that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill, and pending that motion, he moved then to close debate, and on that motion he moved the previous question, and it was upon ordering the previous question upon the motion to close debate that we voted upon the previous question.

The SPEAKER. And not upon both motions?

Mr. BARKLEY. Not upon both.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, that is a correct statement of the situation.

The SPEAKER. If that is correct, then the previous question has been ordered only upon the motion to close debate. There is no reason for ordering it on the motion to go into committee.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the Chair will permit, I also desire to call the attention of the Chair to the practice long standing in the House which permits a motion made in mistake of language to be corrected upon the floor. The formulas of this House are repeated over and over——

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Kentucky is correct, then the previous question has been ordered on the motion to close debate.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; and my motion to lay upon the table is in order and is now pending.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Chair rule that the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to lay on the table is in order?

The SPEAKER. At first blush the Chair would say that it is.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that led us into this dilemma. The motion to close debate was predicated upon the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Personally, I think the gentleman ought to be permitted to change his motion.

The SPEAKER. He certainly could change it if the previous question has not been ordered.

Mr. WINGO. I think the House ought to give him unanimous consent, or if that be not granted then he could withdraw his motion, and the Chair could recognize him to make the original motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] to lay upon the table is not in order, unless he can cite authority to the contrary. Has the gentleman any authorities to cite the Chair? The Chair would be very glad to hear them.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am just trying to find them. I had them a few minutes ago, but pending that, in order to permit me to find some authority, and the gentleman from Vermont to find some authority, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is dilatory.

Mr. CRAMTON. I submit to the Speaker that the situation is a little unusual. We have now spent 5 or 10 minutes trying to find out where we are at, and it rather saves the situation.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Following the long practice of the House, I repeated——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, has the Chair ruled upon the point of order, and are any motions affecting the matter in order at all until the point of order has been disposed of?

The SPEAKER. To what point of order does the gentleman refer?

Mr. WALSH. Is the point of order which I made still pending, or has it been disposed of?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to call attention to a fact which the Chair was not aware of. The Chair is satisfied from what has been stated that the gentleman from Massachusetts is correct. What is the point of order that the gentleman made, based upon that?

Mr. WALSH. The point of order is that the motion of the gentleman from Vermont has made is not in order upon this measure, which has already been considered in Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is correct.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, before any ruling is made, may I make a statement? Following the long practice of the House, I intended to make the motion in its usual parliamentary form, but I misstated it, and had started to correct it when the Speaker went on to repeat the motion and to proceed with the business of the House, assuming that it was made in its correct form, because we had emerged from the committee which I intended to name, and into which we would go back if we went back at all. Therefore I supposed that the matter had been passed over as a usual slip of the tongue is and that no more attention was paid to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman has now the right to modify his motion.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Then I ask to modify it—to state it in the correct terms.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House, and on that motion I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont, the Chair understands, has withdrawn his motion and so modified it that the motion is now that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Can he do that?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he has the right to do that in spite of objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, there being nothing now before the House, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is mistaken; there is a motion pending before the House.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Following the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to lay on the table the original motion of the gentleman from Vermont, I was recognized to move that the further consideration of this measure be indefinitely postponed, which is a preferential motion. What is the status of that?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will wait. The Chair thinks the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] is not in order.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. There can not be so many pending at one time. The Chair presumes the gentleman relies upon Rule XVI, clause 4?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER (reading)—

When a question is under debate, no motion shall be received but to adjourn, to lay on the table, for the previous question.

Now, the motion to go into the committee is not a question of debate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then does the Chair hold where the House must resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole in order to debate a question that in the House it is not in order at any time to move to postpone indefinitely the consideration of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. BARKLEY. Surely the Chair does not——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Massachusetts having insisted on his point of order and being sustained, that it does away with both the motion of the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Kentucky, because they are predicated upon a motion which the gentleman from Vermont has abandoned. The gentleman from Vermont has now made a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole, and on that he has demanded the previous question. That is the only motion that is in order, because the previous question shuts out all other motions.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly——

Mr. WINGO. That is the situation now.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, may I supplement that with this plain matter-of-fact statement?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can by unanimous consent.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It is very plain, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that it is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Vermont on the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts on the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order that pending the motion that the gentleman from Vermont originally made, the House having voted to close debate upon the matter on which he moved to resolve the House into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, that that action of the House will not now be in force under another motion, namely, to consider the matter in the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is just the point I desired to bring to the Speaker's attention.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is disposed to think that the gentleman's point is well taken.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. May I be heard?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I made the usual motion after the ordinary practice of the House and misstated it by the addition of words. I attempted to correct it at once, but the proceedings were taken up as they were. It is manifest the Chair understood the motion as I intended it, and being aware that day after day, and day after day——

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that debate is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not debating. The Chair has control of the time on a point of order.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Day after day when gentlemen on the floor stated a motion in language which is palpably inaccurate the Chair has as a matter of practice restated it in proper form, and it is obvious to everybody who listened that the intent was to state it in the proper form. We had emerged from the Committee of the Whole House and it was only to that committee we could return. It is obvious that was the intention of the motion, and because of a palpable error in the statement of my motion I understood the Chair quickly to recognize that fact, and being aware of it put it in its proper form. Now, I did not suppose I had lost rights under a practice which is common in this House and which simply depends upon somebody taking a technical advantage of what was a palpable error. It is very manifest I could not make the motion that I am reported to have made; it would be of no avail, and yet the House accepted it and has been acting under it all this time with intervening business of roll calls.

Everybody in the House had an exact notice of the motion as it was intended, but at this eleventh hour somebody comes in and states the palpable error in the original motion. The point of order comes too late.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CRAMTON. Have I recognition, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. CRAMTON. All the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] urges has been passed upon by the Speaker. He has ruled that the former motion to go into committee was a nullity and that the former motion was so complete a nullity that it would not sustain the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] or the motion that I have made. Being a nullity, the latter motion to limit debate, a motion that could only be made with a proper motion to go into committee pending, the motion then to limit debate also was a nullity. And now the gentleman, with the consent of the House or otherwise, starts all over again. He makes his new motion now to go into committee in proper form, and if he desires he can move to limit debate, and the House can pass upon the question.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. May I ask, if the gentleman please, if he means to be understood that during the last hour and a half the House has misunderstandingly acted on a nullity?

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUSTED. Is it not always, Mr. Speaker, within the province of the Chair to correct a palpable error which is one of form only, and, if that is so, is not that situation applicable to the motion of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE]? The gentleman from Vermont moved to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. It is perfectly plain that such a motion would not lie; that that was not the motion intended by the gentleman from Vermont, because the House in Committee of the Whole House had already been considering the bill in the Committee of the Whole House. And it seems to me that is really a matter of form only, a mere technical error, which the Chair could correct of his own motion.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend that after the House has acted upon some subsidiary or incidental motions, it is then within the power of the Speaker to correct what the gentleman who made the motion admits was an error?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already ruled upon that.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I move we adjourn. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I withdraw that motion, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The facts are these: The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE], it is admitted, instead of moving, as he intended, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, moved that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The Chair certainly did not notice that, and presumes very few persons did notice it; but it has been admitted, and the Chair has already ruled that that was invalid, and the gentleman has withdrawn the motion and offered a new motion, on which he has moved the previous question. Now, the point is raised: Is the motion which the gentleman made, that debate upon this bill be closed, also invalid, because it was predicated upon the previous inaccurate motion? Everyone will admit that there was no deceit upon the House; that the House was not misled; and that nobody lost any rights by the mistake of the gentleman which probably very few noticed, and which certainly influenced no one's vote.

The Chair thinks that the motion to close debate which was made and voted upon by the House was not so dependent upon the original erroneous statement that he made as to be invalid because the original one was a mistake. And the Chair holds that the House has voted to close debate on this bill. Now, the gentleman moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, and on that he moves the previous question.

Mr. WALSH. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] is not in order, he having previously made a motion upon which a point of order was made, and it has been sustained, and that it is not now in order for him to renew a motion for the further consideration of this bill, notwithstanding the fact that the House has, pending action upon the original motion, voted to fix debate; that he can not now, after the House has voted to fix debate, make another motion to consider the bill in another manner, under a separate motion from the original motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules that point of order. It is a custom to move to close debate pending a motion to go into Committee of the Whole, but the Chair does not see that one is so dependent on the other that an error in one invalidates the other.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the Speaker permit?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the Speaker is still willing to hear just a suggestion as to the status, I wish to say that the gentleman from Vermont made a motion to go into committee, and then pending that made a motion which he could not have made except a motion to go into committee was pending. That was to limit debate. The House voted to limit debate. Now supposing, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Where does the gentleman get his authority for saying that he could not have made the motion unless the other was pending?

Mr. CRAMTON. That is my understanding.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not so understand it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Supposing that the House then voted down the motion to go into Committee of the Whole; would that limitation of debate carry over to some time in the distant future?

The SPEAKER. That is a question to be decided when the case arises. The Chair sees no reason why it should not.

Mr. CRAMTON. I was urging this: Logically the motion to limit debate could only be made while a motion was pending to go into committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not aware of that.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the motion to go into committee is lost, then the closing of debate would fall with it, and the situation is the same when the motion to go into committee fails for any other reason.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. In the event that a motion is unintentionally misstated, but in language sufficient to convey to the House the obvious meaning and intent, and the situation itself obviously suggesting it, and a roll call takes place afterwards, is it in order to make a point of order on the original motion, or has the Member lost his day in court?

The SPEAKER. That has already been ruled on.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Vermont having made a motion for the previous question, is there not 20 minutes' debate on a side?

The SPEAKER. There is not. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] that the previous question be ordered.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CRAMTON. A division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. On this votes the ayes are 107——

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont moves that the House do now adjourn. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, pursuant to the order previously made, until tomorrow, Saturday, February 19, 1921, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV,

417. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination and survey of Turtle Bayou, Tex. (H. Doc. No. 1010), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed, with map.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. BARKLEY, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14492) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to release the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway Co. from reconstructing its highway and approaches across its bridge at Memphis, Tenn., reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1337), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. WHITE of Kansas, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15861) to confirm private claim 61, in the township of Ecorse, Wayne County, Mich., reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1335), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

The SPEAKER (by request): Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, favoring legislation to require marking of percentages of wool in fabrics; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GALLIVAN: Memorial of the Legislature of Massachusetts, favoring the creation or designation of some agency of the Federal Government with full power to ascertain facts and disseminate information and to regulate and control the production, sorting, grading, transportation, and distribution of coal to the several States to secure so far as possible a sufficient supply of coal of good quality at reasonable prices to the consumers in the several States; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. McARTHUR: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, urging Congress to pass laws that will require every manufacturer or handler or seller of woolen fabrics and woolen garments to place a tag thereon stating the exact percentage of virgin wool and also how much and what other materials enter into such cloth; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, urging a survey of the port of Port Orford with a view of building a breakwater or jetty for said port; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. TOWNER: Memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of Porto Rico, urging the extension and development of their present system of government under democratic principles; to the Committee on the Territories.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DALE: A bill (H. R. 16123) granting a pension to Charles Frizzell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DARROW: A bill (H. R. 16124) for the relief of Gilbert Smith Galbraith, a commander on the active list of the United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. EAGAN: A bill (H. R. 16125) to provide for the payment of taxes to the city of Hoboken, N. J., on certain property acquired by the President, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GREENE of Vermont: A bill (H. R. 16126) granting a pension to Joseph Lambert; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

5872. By Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania: Petition of citizens of Hanover, Pa., urging the passage of the Sheppard-Towner bill, H. H. 10925; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

5873. By Mr. CLEARY: Petition of the Kings Highway Board of Trade and certain citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y., protesting against the passage of the Smith-Towner bill; to the Committee on Education.

5874. By Mr. CRAMTON: Resolution of St. Clair Lodge, No. 14, International Shipmasters' Association, St. Clair, Mich., protesting against the passage of that part of Senate bill 4542 which provides for the transfer of the Hydrographic Office from the Navy Department to the Department of Commerce; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

5875. Also, resolution of the Commercial Club, Lapeer, Mich., protesting against the recent ruling of Attorney General Palmer classifying butter as adulterated, and thereby subject to a 10-cent-per-pound revenue tax, if churned from cream the acidity of which has been partially neutralized with limewater to make efficient pasteurization possible; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5876. Also, resolution of the board of delegates of the Michigan State Farm Bureau, protesting against the placing of a tariff on Canadian timber or lumber imported from Canada; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5877. Also, protest of the members of Branch 403, Ladies' Catholic Benevolent Association, Port Huron, Mich., against the passage of the Smith-Towner bill; to the Committee on Education.

5878. Also, protest of the League of Catholic Women, of Mount Clemens, Mich., against the passage of the Smith-Towner bill; to the Committee on Education.

5879. By Mr. FESS: Petition of sundry citizens of Urbana, Ohio, urging the freedom of Ireland; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

5880. By Mr. FULLER: Petition of 96 citizens of Mendota, Ill., protesting against the passage of the Smith-Towner bill; to the Committee on Education.

5881. Also, petition of Hon. J. N. Francis and sundry other citizens of Morris, Ill., protesting against the passage of the Fess-Capper bills, S. 3950 and H. R. 12652; to the Committee on Education.

5882. Also, petition of the Merchants' Association of New York, opposing the $10,000,000 appropriation for the Muscle Shoals project; to the Committee on Agriculture.

5883. Also, petition of McNeil & Higgins Co., of Chicago, Ill., protesting against the passage of the cold-storage bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

5884. Also, petition of the Chicago (Ill.) Railway Equipment Co., opposing the passage of the Federal live-stock and the Federal coal bills, S. 3944 and S. 4828; to the Committee on Agriculture.

5885. Also, petition of the Massachusetts Civic Alliance, of Boston, Mass., opposing the passage of the Sheppard-Towner bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

5886. Also, petition of the Travelers' Protective Association of America, favoring an amendment of the income-tax laws to permit deduction of cost of meals and lodging, when traveling, from gross income; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5887. By Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts: Petitions of 600 members of the Holy Name Society, 500 members of the Catholic Women's Club, 800 members of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, the Fall River Cathedral Holy Name Society, 600 members of the St. Peter and St. Paul Holy Name Society, 2,000 members of the Fall River Council, No. 86, Knights of Columbus, members of the Isabella Assumption Circle, No. 74, Rev. Francis Bradley, Cathedral Rectory, all of Fall River, Mass.; the Mansfield Council, No. 420, Knights of Columbus, of Mansfield, Mass.; and Monsignor James Coyle, pastor of St. Mary's parish, of Taunton, Mass., protesting against the passage of the Smith-Towner bill; to the Committee on Education.

5888. By Mr. HULINGS: Petition of St. Joseph's Society, residents of St. Marys, Pa., protesting against the passage of the Smith-Towner bill; to the Committee on Education.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 19, 1921.

(Legislative day of Monday, February 14, 1921.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

CREDENTIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a certificate of the governor of New York certifying to the election of JAMES W. WADSWORTH, Jr., as a United States Senator for the term beginning March 4, 1921, which was read and ordered to be filed, as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that on the 2d of November, 1920, JAMES W. WADSWORTH, Jr., was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of New York a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 1921.

Witness: Nathan L. Miller, governor, and the great seal hereto affixed at Albany, this 14th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1921.

NATHAN L. MILLER, Governor.
[SEAL.] JOHN J. LYONS,
Secretary of State.

SUPPLY OF COMMERCIAL FERTILIZER (S. DOC. NO. 410).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture in response to Senate resolution 435, January 26, 1921, transmitting a statement on the fertilizer situation prepared by Prof. Milton Whitney, Chief of the Bureau of Soils, etc., which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FLETCHER subsequently said: The Secretary of Agriculture has submitted his report in response to Senate resolution 435, which I offered regarding fertilizer and the fertilizer situation. I ask that it may be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Culberson	Frelinghuysen	Heflin
Ball	Curtis	Gay	Henderson
Brandegee	Dial	Gerry	Jones, N. Mex.
Calder	Dillingham	Gooding	Jones, Wash.
Capper	Fernald	Gronna	Kellogg

Lodge	Phipps	Smoot	Wadsworth
McCumber	Pittman	Spencer	Williams
McKellar	Pomerene	Sterling	Willis
McLean	Ransdell	Sutherland
McNary	Sheppard	Swanson

Mr. BALL. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] are in attendance upon a hearing before the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

REFERENCE OF MILITARY NOMINATIONS.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the President of the United States has sent to the Senate nominations of a number of officers in the Army for transfer from one branch of the service to another. It affects no one above the grade of colonel and it involves no promotion; it merely permits officers to transfer from one branch to another. I ask unanimous consent that, as in open executive session, the nominations be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

FEDERAL LAND BANK IN PORTO RICO.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, House bill 8038 provides for the establishment of a branch Federal land bank in the island of Porto Rico and ought to be acted upon by the Senate and returned to the House at a very early date. The delay in the Senate has been due to the fact that the constitutionality of the Federal farm loan act is now being tested in the courts and the case is pending in the Supreme Court of the United States. Whether the act is held constitutional or not the bill should receive the approval of Congress in order that some relief may be granted to the people of Porto Rico in the event the validity of the act is sustained. Of course, if the act is held to be unconstitutional then no harm is done. There is no opposition to the bill that I know of. It has already passed the House, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8038) to amend section 4 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act, extending its provisions to Porto Rico, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with amendments.

The amendments were, on page 2, in line 5, to strike out the word "the" and insert the word "such"; in the same line, to strike out "of Springfield, Mass." and insert "as may be designated by the Federal Farm Loan Board"; in line 8, to strike out the word "designate" and insert the word "direct"; in line 10, to strike out the words "of the Federal land bank of Springfield" and insert the word "bank"; in line 14, to strike out the word "that" and insert the words "subject to such regulations as the Federal Farm Loan Board may prescribe"; in line 18, to strike out the words "of Springfield" and insert the words "with which such branch bank is connected"; in line 23, to strike out the words "of Springfield" and insert the words "with which it is connected"; on page 3, line 1, to strike out the word "the" and insert the word "such"; and, in the same line, to strike out the words "of Springfield," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph 2 of section 4 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act, be amended to read as follows:

"The Federal Farm Loan Board shall establish in each Federal land bank district a Federal land bank, with its principal office located in such city within the district as said board shall designate. Each Federal land bank shall include in its title the name of the city in which it is located. Subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, any Federal land bank may establish branches within the land bank district. Subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board and under such conditions as it may prescribe, the provisions of this act are extended to the island of Porto Rico; and such Federal land bank as may be designated by the Federal Farm Loan Board is hereby authorized to establish a branch bank at such point as the Federal Farm Loan Board may direct on the island of Porto Rico. Loans made by such branch bank, when so established, shall not exceed the sum of $5,000 to any one borrower and shall be subject to the restrictions and provisions of this act, except that such branch bank may loan direct to borrowers, and subject to such regulations as the Federal Farm Loan Board may prescribe the rate charged borrowers may be 1½ per cent in excess of the rate borne by the last preceding issue of farm loan bonds of the Federal land bank with which such branch bank is connected: Provided, however, That no loans shall be made in the island of Porto Rico to run for a longer term than 20 years.

"Each borrower through such branch bank shall subscribe and pay for stock in the Federal land bank with which it is connected in the sum of $5 for each $100 or fraction thereof borrowed; such stock shall be held by such Federal land bank as collateral security for the loan of the borrower; shall participate in all dividends; and upon full payment of the loan shall be canceled at par and proceeds paid to borrower, or the borrower may apply the same to the final payments on his loan."

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the committee if this will make any change in the law relating to the Federal Farm Loan Board?

Mr. McLEAN. It merely applies to the establishment of a branch bank in Porto Rico under regulations which may be prescribed by the Federal Farm Loan Board.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HENDERSON presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Assembly joint resolution memorializing the Senate of the United States for the passage of the bill to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, to provide revenue therefor, and for other purposes, commonly known and cited as the "World War adjusted compensation act," now designated as H. R. 14157, now pending before the Senate of the United States of America.

Whereas there is now before the Senate of the United States of America an act entitled "H. R. 14157," which is an act "to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, to provide revenue therefor, and for other purposes"; and

Whereas this act has passed the House of Representatives of the United States of America by large vote; and

Whereas this act is an endeavor to render to the veterans of the World War such belated compensation as may be rendered them for their devotion and sacrifices in the cause of democracy: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly of the State of Nevada (the Senate concurring), That we respectfully petition the Senate of the United States and the President of the United States of America to give this act, an act entitled "H. R. 14157," their immediate approval; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution, duly authenticated, be transmitted forthwith by the secretary of state to the President of the United States and to each of our United States Senators.

MAURICE J. SULLIVAN,
President of the Senate.
T. R. HOFER,
Secretary of the Senate.
CHAS. S. CHANDLER,
Speaker of the Assembly.
DANIEL E. MORTON,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

STATE OF NEVADA,
Department of State, ss:

I, George Brodigan, the duly elected, qualified, and acting secretary of state of the State of Nevada, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true, full, and correct copy of the original assembly joint resolution No. 1, memorializing the Senate of the United States for the passage of the bill to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, to provide revenue therefor, and for other purposes, commonly known and cited as the "World War adjusted compensation act," now designated as H. R. 14157, now pending before the Senate of the United States of America, now on file and of record in this office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of State, at my office in Carson City, Nev., this 1st day of February, A. D. 1921.

[SEAL.]

GEORGE BRODIGAN,
Secretary of State.
By R. B. BURRIS,
Deputy.

Mr. HENDERSON presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Nevada, which was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Assembly joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America for the passage of the bills authorizing appropriations to provide the proper care and services for the disabled veterans of the World War as hereafter designated.

Whereas there are now pending before the Congress of the United States the following bills: France bill (S. 4357) and the Langley bill (H. R. 14315) providing for the proper hospitalization facilities for the care of the disabled veterans of the World War; and

Whereas there is pending before the Congress of the United States the Stevenson bill (H. R. 10385) providing for the retirement of disabled emergency or Reserve Corps officers on the same basis as that granted to officers of the Regular Army; and

Whereas there is pending before the Congress of the United States the Wason bill (H. R. 13558) designated "An act for the purpose of improving the facilities and service of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and of further amending and modifying the war-risk insurance act as amended"; and

Whereas there is pending before the Congress of the United States the Rogers bill (H. R. 14961) to establish in the Interior Department a bureau of veteran reestablishment, and for other purposes; and

Whereas all of the above bills aim to provide for the proper care and service of the disabled veterans of the World War; and

Whereas for that reason they are of paramount importance and their immediate passage is necessary to relieve the unfortunate condition of the disabled veterans: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Assembly of the State of Nevada (the Senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, memorialized and requested to take immediate action on said bills; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution, duly authenticated, be forthwith transmitted by the secretary of state to the President of the United States, to each of our United States Senators, and to our Representative in Congress.

MAURICE J. SULLIVAN,
President of the Senate.
T. R. HOFER,
Secretary of the Senate.
CHAS. S. CHANDLER,
Speaker of the Assembly.
DANIEL E. MORTON,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

STATE OF NEVADA,
Department of State, ss:

I, George Brodigan, the duly elected, qualified, and acting secretary of state of the State of Nevada, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true, full, and correct copy of the original assembly joint resolution No. 2, memorializing the Congress of the United States of America for the passage of the bills authorizing appropriations to provide the proper care and services for the disabled veterans of the World War as hereafter designated, now on file and of record in this office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State at my office in Carson City, Nev., this 1st day of February, A. D. 1921.

[SEAL.]

GEORGE BRODIGAN,
Secretary of State.
By R. P. BURRIS, Deputy.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of the Women's Educational Club, of Rockland, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. KNOX presented a petition of sundry citizens of Chester and Delaware Counties, Pa., praying for a reduction in appropriations for military and naval purposes to a fractional part of the amounts asked for by the War and Navy Departments, and also for the passage of the so-called Borah resolution for a naval holiday, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented memorials of Philip J. Scholl, president of the Men's Conference of St. Augustine Parish, of Pittsburgh; sundry members of St. Joseph's Holy Name Society, of Downingtown; sundry members of St. Joseph's Sodality, of Downingtown; sundry citizens of St. Marys; Branch No. 177, Knights of St. George, of Philadelphia; sundry citizens of Wyomissing and West Reading; sundry members of St. Marys Borough and Benzinger Township; of St. Joseph's Society, of St. Marys; and sundry citizens of Pittsburgh, all in the State of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution of the city council of the city of Philadelphia, Pa., urging that the President and Congress of the United States be requested to select Independence Square, Philadelphia, as the place of burial of one of America's unknown dead who made the supreme sacrifice during the World War, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAPPER presented resolutions of Farmers' Union No. 3642, of Marmaduke, Ark., and stockholders of the Equity Supply Co., of Kalispell, Mont., favoring legislation prohibiting gambling in grain products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a memorial of St. Joseph Reading Society, of Victoria, Kans., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. WILLIS presented memorials of the Stonelick Catholic Men's Society and the Stonelick Catholic Women's Society, of Batavia, and sundry members of St. John's Men Society of St. Catherine's Parish, of Cincinnati, both in the State of Ohio, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution of the Six United Presbyterian Congregations of Cleveland, Ohio, protesting against recognition of the Irish republic, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported with amendments the bill (H. R. 16100) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, and submitted a report (No. 806) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 5027) for the relief of E. O. Brown; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 5028) for the relief of Thomas A. Price; and

A bill (S. 5029) to amend an act entitled "An act to give indemnity for damages caused by American forces abroad," approved April 18, 1918; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

COLORADO RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. PITTMAN introduced a bill (S. 5026) to promote the utilization and disposition of the waters of the Colorado River for irrigation and power uses, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I request that the bill introduced by me and also the report of the Nevada Commission on Colorado River Development may be printed in the RECORD, so that they may be read, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. This bill is introduced by me on behalf of Senators from the Western States who are interested in the Colorado River development.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and it and the accompanying report were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a joint commission, to be composed of representatives of the States of Arizona, California, Colorado, Nevada, New Mexico, Utah, and Wyoming, and of the United States Reclamation Service and Federal Power Commission, is hereby authorized and constituted for the purpose of negotiating and entering into an arrangement or agreement between the said States, and between said States and the United States, respecting the further utilization and disposition of the waters of the Colorado River and streams tributary thereto, in fixing and determining the rights of said States and of the United States in and to the use, benefit, and disposition of the waters of said stream: Provided, That any arrangement or agreement so entered into by the representatives of said States and of the United States shall not be binding or obligatory upon any of the parties thereto unless and until the same shall have been ratified and approved by the legislature of each of said States and by the Congress of the United States.

REPORT OF NEVADA COMMISSION ON COLORADO RIVER DEVELOPMENT.

HON. EMMET D. BOYLE,
Governor, Carson City, Nev.

DEAR SIR: Your commission, appointed to study questions relating to the development of the Colorado River, beg leave to report as follows:

We have held two meetings in Las Vegas, called by Col. J. G. Scrugham, chairman of the commission. At the first meeting, held November 9, 1920, the commission organized as follows: Col. J. G. Scrugham, chairman; Ed. W. Clark, vice chairman; Charles P. Squires, secretary.

A program of work to be undertaken was adopted as follows:

1. To collect information on the various plans under consideration for the storage of water and the development of electrical energy in Boulder Canyon, or such other suitable sites as may be found.
2. To report to the governor on such matters of legislation as may be deemed necessary in relation to such projects.
3. To formulate such measures for legislative action as may be deemed necessary to secure to the people of Nevada all possible benefits from such enterprises.
4. To give the moral support and assistance of the State, by any means deemed wise, to the Reclamation Service of the United States, or to any other public or private enterprise which may desire to undertake development projects in Nevada along the Colorado River.
5. To cooperate with other States lying within or partly within the Colorado River basin in arriving at an agreement as to the use of the waters of the Colorado River for irrigation and power development purposes.

REPORT ON BENEFITS TO NEVADA.

A. IRRIGATION OF LANDS AND FLOOD PROTECTION.

It is estimated that there are several thousand acres of rich land lying along the bottoms of the Colorado River basin within the State of Nevada, which, if protected from floods, would be valuable for the growing of alfalfa, cotton, fruits, and other products suited to a semitropic climate. The development of such lands would add substantially to the taxable property of Clark County.

B. DEVELOPMENT OF POWER.

The development of a great amount of electrical energy on the Colorado River would result in the following permanent benefits:

1. Electrification of the Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad, requiring the practical reconstruction of the road and the employment through several years of a large number of men. Such reconstruction for electrical operation would give the railroad a largely increased valuation for taxation.
2. Cheap electricity for public and private uses in southern Nevada, with the resultant encouragement of all enterprises requiring power. In this subject we may mention the development of agriculture in the Las Vegas Valley through cheap power for pumping the surface waters for irrigation.
3. Cheap power for the mines of southern and eastern Nevada, which would result in the development and operation of many properties which now lie dormant because of the prohibitive cost of power. Power from Boulder Canyon would be available for the operation of mines at Ely, Pioche, Searchlight, Eldorado Canyon, Goodsprings, and other camps.

C. INCIDENTAL BENEFITS OF CONSTRUCTION OPERATIONS.

The building of great works on the Colorado River, electrifying the railroad, and the building of power lines would bring the employment of many men for several years to Clark County. It is believed that the population of Clark County would be multiplied several times by such activity, that the city of Las Vegas would become an important business center, and that the entire State would profit through the greater amount of taxable property which would be created, as well as by the permanent manufacturing and business enterprises which would result.

SECOND MEETING OF COMMISSION.

At the second meeting of the commission, held December 9, 1920, an act was outlined to give official standing to the commission, provide for its necessary expenses, and enable it to protect the interests of the State of Nevada, and to secure to the people of the State the greatest possible benefits from any contemplated development. A copy of such proposed act is herewith submitted for your consideration.

The impelling motive for the construction of the proposed Boulder Canyon project, the cost of which has been roughly estimated at $50,000,000, is furnished by the needs of southern California, and the financing will in all probability come from that source. It may be said that Nevada will benefit only incidentally by reason of the fact that the proposed site is within the State. Nevertheless, there will accrue to Nevada large benefits and a greatly increased prosperity if her natural right to share in the benefits of such development made within her borders is properly safeguarded. It appears absolutely essential that the State of Nevada shall be represented by a commission having definite duties and powers in this matter.

Respectfully submitted.

NEVADA COMMISSION ON COLORADO RIVER DEVELOPMENT.
By CHARLES P. SQUIRES, Secretary.

An act creating a commission to be known as the Colorado River Development Commission of Nevada, defining its powers and duties, and making an appropriation for the expense thereof.

The people of the State of Nevada, represented in senate and assembly, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. A commission is hereby created to be known as the Colorado River Development Commission of Nevada, to consist of the State engineer of the State of Nevada and six other members, to be appointed by the governor. A majority of the said commissioners shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. Within 30 days after the passage and approval of this act the governor shall appoint said commissioners, and they shall hold office for a term of four years, or until their successors are appointed and qualified. Any vacancy shall be filled by appointment by the governor.

SEC. 2. The said commissioners shall have the following qualifications: They shall each be citizens of the State of Nevada, have a general knowledge of the development of the Colorado River and its tributaries within the State of Nevada, but at no time shall there be more than four of said commissioners members of the same political party.

SEC. 3. The governor may at any time remove any commissioner for neglect of duty or malfeasance in office.

SEC. 4. The members of said commission shall receive as compensation $10 for each day actually employed on the work of said commission and their actual and necessary expenses incurred in the performance of their duties.

SEC. 5. Within a reasonable time after the appointment of the members of said commission they shall meet upon the call of the governor and effect an organization by electing one of their members chairman and one of their members secretary. The commission shall audit all bills for expenses and per diem of its members, and when the same shall have been certified to by the chairman and secretary, the secretary shall file the same with the State board of examiners for approval, and the same shall be paid out of any moneys appropriated for that purpose.

SEC. 6. The commissioners shall meet at such times and at such places as may be designated by the chairman.

SEC. 7. The duties of said commission shall be to collect and arrange all data and information connected with the Colorado River and its tributaries which may affect or be of interest to the State of Nevada; to present the same to the governor for his information; to represent the State of Nevada in such interstate or other conferences or conventions as may be called for the consideration of the development of reclamation projects connected with the Colorado River or its tributaries; to tender the friendly cooperation of the State of Nevada to such constructive enterprises as look to the conservation of the waters of the Colorado River and its tributaries and the development of power thereon; to negotiate with the representatives of other States in endeavoring to equitably settle and define the rights of the States in the waters of the Colorado River and its tributaries; to report to the governor such measures for legislative action as may be deemed necessary to secure to the people of Nevada all possible benefits from such enterprises, especially in the development and use of electrical power.

SEC. 8. Said commission shall have the power to hold hearings, require the attendance of witnesses, and take testimony whenever it shall deem it necessary in carrying out the provisions of this act. Any commissioner may administer oaths to any witness called to testify in any hearing or proceeding before the commission.

SEC. 9. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the treasury not otherwise appropriated.

AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OWEN submitted an amendment providing that $3,000 may be used for the purpose of building additional sheds, stalls, and pens for the protection of animals at the live-stock department of the proposed Woodward (Okla.) field station, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by W. H. Overhue, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15275) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, to provide revenue, and for other purposes; had agreed to the conference requested by the Senate; and that Mr. FORDNEY, Mr. GREEN of Iowa, Mr. LONGWORTH, Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY, and Mr. HULL of Tennessee were appointed managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15441) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes; had agreed to the conference requested by the Senate; and that Mr. MADDEN, Mr. OGDEN, and Mr. HOLLAND were appointed managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15872) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922; had agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate; and that Mr. ROGERS, Mr. ELSTON, and Mr. SMALL were appointed managers of the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 4582. An act to declare Bayou Cocodrie nonnavigable from its source to its junction with Bayou Chicot; and

H. R. 15130. An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14461) to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Committee on Immigration will be stated.

The READING CLERK. The amendment proposed by the Committee on Immigration is to strike out all after the enacting clause, in the following words:

That as used in this act—

The term "United States" means the United States and any waters, Territory, or other place subject to the jurisdiction thereof except the Isthmian Canal Zone and the Philippine Islands; but if any alien, or any alien seaman, leaves the Canal Zone or any insular possession of the United States and attempts to enter any other place under the jurisdiction of the United States nothing contained in this act shall be construed as permitting him to enter under any other conditions than those applicable to all aliens, or to all alien seamen, respectively;

The term "immigration act" means the act of February 5, 1917, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States"; and the term "immigration laws" includes such act and all laws, conventions, and treaties of the United States relating to the immigration, exclusion, or expulsion of aliens; and

The word "alien" includes any person not a native-born or naturalized citizen of the United States, but this definition shall not be held to include Indians of the United States not taxed nor citizens of the islands under the jurisdiction of the United States.

SEC. 2. Except as otherwise provided in this act, from 60 days after the passage of this act, and until the expiration of 14 months next after its passage, the immigration of aliens to the United States is prohibited, and during such time it shall not be lawful for any alien to enter the United States from any foreign port or place, or, having so entered, to remain within the United States.

SEC. 3. (a) Section 2 shall not apply to otherwise admissible aliens lawfully resident in the United States, nor to otherwise admissible aliens of the following status or occupations, when complying with the requirements of this section and with all other provisions of the immigration laws:

(1) Government officials, their families, attendants, servants, and employees;

(2) Travelers or temporary sojourners for pleasure or business who may enter the United States during the time of suspension of immigration for a period not exceeding six months each, which period may be extended in individual cases by the Secretary of State;

(3) Bona fide students who may enter the United States solely for the purpose of study at educational institutions particularly designated by them; and upon graduation, completion, or discontinuance of studies they shall not be entitled to remain in the United States;

(4) Ministers of any religious denomination.

(b) An alien belonging to one of the classes or persons enumerated in subdivision (a) shall be permitted to enter the United States only upon presentation of a valid passport or other official document in the nature of a passport (hereinafter referred to as a passport) satisfactorily establishing his identity, nationality, and to which of the classes so enumerated he belongs, together with a signed and certified photograph of the bearer attached. A wife, or a female child under 21 years of age, or a male child under 16 years of age, may be included in the passport of a husband or parent, but a photograph of each must be attached to the passport. Each male child 16 years of age or over must carry a separate passport.

(c) Each such passport must be visèed by an American consulate, or a diplomatic mission if specially authorized in the country from which the holder starts on his trip to the United States, and if such country is not the country to which he owes allegiance the passport must also be visèed by a diplomatic or consular officer therein of his own country. In all cases the passport must also be visèed by an American consulate, or the diplomatic mission if specially authorized in the country from which the alien embarks for the United States, or if he comes by land, the country by which he enters the United States.

(d) Each alien coming within the provisions of this section, except a duly accredited Government official, must furnish to the American diplomatic or consular officer who visées the passport in the foreign country from which he starts on his trip to the United States, and to the American authorities at the port of entry or elsewhere in the United States, a written declaration setting forth: (1) The date and place of the bearer's birth; (2) the nationality and race of his father and mother; (3) the place of the bearer's last foreign residence and the other places, if any, where he has resided within the past five years, and what has been his occupation during that period; (4) if he has ever been in this country, the dates and objects of his visits and the places and addresses where he resided or sojourned; (5) the date set for his departure for the United States, the port of embarkation, and the name of the ship on which he is to sail, if he goes by water; (6) names and addresses of persons acquainted with the applicant in the country from which he starts and in the United States, if any; (7) the expected duration and object of his proposed visit to this country, the documentary or other proofs of such objects submitted, and the place or places in the United States where he expects to sojourn or reside; (8) that the bearer knows and understands the provisions of the immigration laws, excluding certain classes of aliens from the United States, and is certain that he does not fall within any of such classes; (9) that the bearer understands that if, on arrival at a port of the United States, he is found to be a member of a class excluded by the immigration laws, he will be deported if practicable, or, if for any reason deportation should be found to be impracticable, will be held in detention in an immigration station or other place of confinement, and that he is, with full understanding thereof, assuming all risks involved in a possible return trip in consequence of being rejected under such law.

(e) A wife or minor child who does not expect to reside with the husband or father in the United States must carry a separate declaration.

(f) Each declaration must be affirmed or sworn to before a consular officer, or a diplomatic officer of the United States if specially authorized, and signed in triplicate, and a photograph of the declarant must be attached to each copy with an impression of the official seal. The declaration must be made at least two weeks before the date of intended departure, except in cases of extraordinary emergency. One copy of the declaration must be filed in the embassy, legation, or consulate by which the passport is first visèd, one copy forwarded immediately to the Commissioner of Immigration or inspector in charge at the port of entry by which the declarant expects to enter the United States, and one copy fastened to the passport of the declarant in such a way that it may be removed upon his departure from the United States. The copy last mentioned must be presented with the passport to the official at the port of entry into this country who examines passports, and to the immigration official who inspects the holder, and to such other officials in the United States as may be authorized to inspect such documents.

SEC. 4. (a) A citizen of the United States 21 years of age or over, who is a resident of the United States, may, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Labor, apply to him for permission to bring into the United States or send for an otherwise admissible wife, parent, grandparent, unmarried son or brother under 21 years of age, unmarried or widowed daughter, or sister, grandson under 16 years of age whose father is dead, or unmarried or widowed granddaughter whose father is dead; and any alien who has declared, in the manner provided by law, his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and who is a resident of the United States, may make like application in reference to an otherwise admissible husband or wife, unmarried son under 21 years of age, or unmarried or widowed daughter; but no application may be made under this paragraph in the case of any relative by adoption.

(b) If the Secretary of Labor is satisfied that the entry into the United States of such relative would not be in violation of the immigration laws, and that such relative is likely to prove a desirable resident of the United States, he may issue a permit to the applicant, under such regulations as he may prescribe, which shall authorize the immigration officers at the port of entry to examine such relative upon arrival at such port. Thereafter the right of such relative to admission shall be as provided by the immigration laws, except that it shall not be subject to the act entitled "An act to prevent in time of war departure from and entry into the United States, contrary to the public safety, approved May 22, 1918," or to the provisions of any proclamation, order, rule, or regulation made thereunder, and except that the literacy test may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, be waived in the case of such relative.

SEC. 5. Nothing in section 2 shall be held to prevent the importation of skilled labor under the conditions prescribed in the fourth proviso to section 3 of the immigration act, nor to the importation of persons employed as domestic servants.

SEC. 6. The joint resolution approved October 19, 1918, entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the readmission to the United States of certain aliens who have been conscripted or who have volunteered for service with the military forces of the United States or cobelligerent forces," is hereby amended by adding thereto a proviso reading as follows: "Provided, That if any such alien shall on arrival at a port of the United States be found to be afflicted with a loathsome or contagious disease such alien shall not be readmitted until he shall have been treated in hospital and the disease reduced to a noncontagious stage."

SEC. 7. During the period of suspension provided for in section 2 otherwise admissible aliens who have resided continuously in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, or the Republic of Mexico for at least one year may be temporarily admitted, for a period not exceeding six months, from such countries, under such rules governing entry, inspection, temporary stay, and departure as may be prescribed by the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor.

SEC. 8. Any alien who at any time after entering the United States is found to have been at the time of entry not entitled under this act to enter the United States, or to have remained therein for a longer time than permitted under section 3 or section 7, shall be taken into custody and deported in the manner provided for in sections 19 and 20 of the immigration act.

SEC. 9. The provisions of sections 18 and 20 of the immigration act assessing a penalty for failure or refusal to accept, to detain, or guard safely, to return, and to transport to foreign destination aliens excluded or expelled from the United States, or to pay maintenance and deportation expenses of aliens, or for making any charge for the return of excluded or expelled aliens, or for taking any security for the payment of such charge, or for taking any consideration from aliens to be returned in case of landing, or for bringing to the United States any deported aliens within a year from date of deportation without the consent of the Secretary of Labor, shall apply to and be enforced in connection with the provisions of this act relating to the exclusion or expulsion of aliens.

SEC. 10. Willfully to give false evidence or swear to any false statement in connection with the enforcement of this act shall constitute perjury as such offense is defined in section 16 of the immigration act; and the provisions of sections 16 and 17 of the immigration act, prescribing methods of procuring evidence concerning aliens, and defining offenses and prescribing punishments therefore, shall apply to and be enforced in connection with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 11. Any person who substitutes any name for the name written in any document herein required, or any photograph for the photograph attached to any such document, or forges or in any manner alters any such document, or falsely personates any person named in any such document, or issues or utters any forged or fraudulent document, or presents to an immigrant inspector or other Government official any forged or fraudulent document, and any person other than the one to whom there has been duly issued any document prescribed by this act who presents to an immigrant inspector or other Government official any such document, shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof shall in cases where no other penalty is required by law be fined in a sum not exceeding $1,000 or be imprisoned for a term of not more than five years, or both.

SEC. 12. The Commissioner General of Immigration shall, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, issue such regulations, not inconsistent with law, as may be deemed necessary and appropriate to place this act in full force and operation (except that regulations for the viséing of passports under section 3 shall be made by the Secretary of State). Such regulations shall include special rules for the application of this act to the cases of aliens coming to the United States from or through contiguous foreign territory, and to the cases of aliens entering across the land boundaries for temporary stay or at frequent intervals; also special rules to insure that the provisions of this act, of the immigration act, or of any law, convention, or treaty relating to immigration shall not be violated by aliens arriving at ports of the United States employed on vessels as seamen, and that, at the same time, the enforcement of such laws shall not interfere with the operation of the act approved March 4, 1915, entitled "An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States, to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion, and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto and to promote safety at sea."

SEC. 13. The provisions of this act are in addition to and not in substitution for the provisions of the immigration laws.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That as used in this act—

The term "United States" means the United States and any waters, Territory, or other place subject to the jurisdiction thereof except the Isthmian Canal and the Philippine Islands; but if any alien, or any alien seaman, leaves the Canal Zone or any insular possession of the United States and attempts to enter any other place under the jurisdiction of the United States nothing contained in this act shall be construed as permitting him to enter under any other conditions than those applicable to all aliens, or to all alien seamen, respectively.

The word "alien" includes any person not a native-born or naturalized citizen of the United States, but this definition shall not be held to include Indians of the United States not taxed nor citizens of the islands under the jurisdiction of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted under existing statutes to the United States in any fiscal year shall be limited to 5 per cent of the number of foreign-born persons of such nationality resident in the United States as determined by the United States census. This provision shall not apply to Government officials, their families, attendants, servants, and employees, nor to aliens in continuous transit through the United States, nor to aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who shall later go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory, nor to aliens visiting the United States as tourists or temporarily for business or pleasure, nor to aliens coming from countries immigration from which is now regulated in accordance with treaties or agreements, nor to aliens coming from the so-called Asiatic barred zone, as described in section 3 of the immigration act of February 5, 1917, nor to aliens who are native-born or naturalized citizens of the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, the Republic of Mexico, countries of Central and South America, and adjacent islands. For the purposes of this act nationality shall be determined by country of birth, but the term "country" shall not be held to include colonies or dependencies, which colonies or dependencies shall be considered as separate countries.

The Secretary of State, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor, jointly, shall as soon as feasible after the passage of this act, prepare a statement showing the number of persons of the various nationalities resident in the United States as determined by the United States census of 1910, which statement shall be the population basis for the purposes of this act, but whenever such population basis is not applicable by reason of changes in political boundaries in foreign countries occurring subsequent to 1910 and resulting in the creation of new countries, the Governments of which are recognized by the United States, or otherwise in the transference of territory from one country to another, such transference being officially recognized by the United States, then the said officials, jointly, shall estimate the number of persons resident in the United States in 1910, who were born within the area now included in such new and other countries, and in the case of such countries such estimate shall be the population basis for the purposes of this act.

When the maximum number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted in any fiscal year under this act shall have been admitted all other aliens of such nationality, except as otherwise provided in this act, who may apply for admission during the same fiscal year shall be excluded: Provided, That the number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted in any month shall not exceed 20 per cent of the total number who are admissible in that year: Provided further, That aliens returning from a temporary visit abroad, aliens who are professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, nurses, ministers of any religious denominations, professors for colleges or seminaries, persons belonging to any recognized learned profession, or persons employed as domestic servants may be admitted notwithstanding the maximum number of aliens of like nationality admissible in the same fiscal year shall have entered the United States: And provided further, That in addition to the foregoing the Secretary of Labor may in individual cases admit aliens in excess of the maximum number when, in his opinion, such action is justifiable as a measure of humanity.

SEC. 3. That the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, shall prescribe rules and regulations necessary to carry the provisions of this act into effect. He shall, as soon as feasible, publish a statement showing the number of aliens of the various nationalities who may be admitted to the United States between the date when this act goes into effect and the end of the current fiscal year, and on June 30 thereafter he shall publish a statement showing the number of aliens of the various nationalities who may be admitted during the ensuing fiscal year. He shall also publish monthly statements during the time this act remains in force showing the number of aliens of each nationality already admitted during the current fiscal year and the number who may be admitted under the provisions of this act during the remainder of such year, but when 75 per cent of the maximum number of any nationality admissible during any year shall have been admitted such statements shall be issued weekly thereafter. All statements shall be made available for general publication and shall be mailed to all transportation companies bringing aliens to the United States who shall request the same and shall file with the Department of Labor the address to which such statements shall be sent. The Secretary of Labor shall also submit such statements to the Secretary of State, who shall transmit the information contained therein to the proper diplomatic and consular officials of the United States, which officials shall make the same available to persons intending to emigrate to the United States and to others who may apply.

SEC. 4. This act shall not be construed as amending, repealing, or modifying any law or agreement now existing which forbids the admission of any aliens of any nationality or by geographical boundary. Nor shall it be construed to admit any of the individuals or classes now excluded by section 3 of the act of February 5, 1917, an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to the United States," etc.

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect and be enforced on and after April 1, 1921, and shall continue in force until June 30, 1922, and the number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted during the remaining three months of the current fiscal year shall be limited to one-fourth of the number who are admissible annually as provided in section 2 of this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if I understand the parliamentary procedure on the pending measure, the vote will come on the adoption of the Senate substitute for the House bill; but if we should desire to perfect or change the text of the House bill, amendments would be first offered to the House text.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is right.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to offer an amendment to the House text, to be acted upon before the vote is taken on whether or not the Senate desires to substitute the Senate proposition for the House proposition. I wish to move to strike out of the House bill all of section 4 appearing on pages 6, 7, and 8.

I might say that section 4 embraces the dependency feature under which relatives and dependents of resident citizens and aliens may come in under the bill. I am against allowing exception to be made.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Before we vote on substituting the Senate amendment for the House bill, the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is that, as far as we may see fit, we shall perfect the House provisions, and then the vote will come on the Senate substitute. Am I correct in that?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill as reported comes within the rule of the Senate, being practically a motion to strike out the House bill and insert the Senate amendment. Under the rules of the Senate each bill is perfectible by amendment, the amendments to the House bill to be first considered, and then amendments to the Senate committee substitute. When both the House bill and the Senate amendment have been perfected to the satisfaction of the Senate the motion comes on the substitution of the Senate amendment as perfected for the House bill as perfected.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. So that both the House bill and the Senate substitute are now open to amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Except that under the rule the amendments to the House bill are first to be considered.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Very well.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am very anxious to reach a vote upon this bill as soon as possible, but before it is taken I want to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to what seems a weakness or defect in the proposed substitute. I refer to that part of section 2 which excepts from the provisions of the act—aliens who are native-born or naturalized citizens of the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, the Republic of Mexico, countries of Central and South America, and adjacent islands.

Experience has taught us that every exception or loophole in our immigration laws is eagerly seized upon and utilized to overcome or avoid their more stringent provisions.

I shall vote for the substitute; there is no question but it is far better than existing legislation upon the subject; but I can easily understand under this exception how a citizen factory or a number of them can be set up in Mexico or one or more little principalities of Central or South America and utilized for the naturalization of undesirable classes of immigrants from Europe who can not otherwise come into this country. It is highly probable that before this proposed law shall have been in effect six months we will have a stream of naturalized citizen immigration from Mexico and probably from countries farther south. However that may be, as I have said, this bill, if enacted, will constitute a great improvement upon the legislation now on the statute books.

I may be overpessimistic, but I regard the inundation of this country by immigrants of all sorts, classes, and conditions from the older countries of the world as one of the most serious and sinister menaces which the new administration will confront, a menace politically, socially, economically, and morally. I believe, too, that the proposed substitute will, if enacted, prove to be of greater benefit to the industries and to our citizenship now suffering from the depressed conditions than any other form of legislation which the Congress can enact before its adjournment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, before the vote is taken on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] I desire to state that I certainly shall oppose any such amendment as that offered by him. It can not be that we are going to say that an American citizen, or one who has declared his intention of becoming such, shall not have the right to send for his wife to come into this country during the life of this bill, or that he shall not send for his grandparents, or an unmarried son or brother under 21 years of age, or an unmarried or widowed daughter or sister, or a grandson under 16 years of age whose father is dead.

Mr. President, it seems to me to be going beyond all reason to prevent a man who has come to this country, established a home, and endeavored to save up enough money to send for his wife or for his small son, from doing so. We say by this bill, if the House provision should prevail and the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi should be agreed to, that no such people can come into the United States. To allow such would not interfere with labor. It is well guarded to take care of the labor situation. The trouble in the United States, as far as it affects labor, is with men coming to this country between the ages of 18 and 50. It does not come through a man having a right, after saving enough money to enable him to do so, to send for his wife or children under 21 years of age. Therefore I sincerely trust that when the vote is taken on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi the Senate will not stand for any such proposition.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, perhaps a word of explanation will clear up this matter.

The real objection to the House bill that has been offered by many is to those provisions of section 4 which permit such a large number of relatives to come and join every person in this country. I do not know that I can express the matter better than by referring to the bill itself, because it is important that that should be understood.

Section 4 provides that—

A citizen of the United States 21 years of age or over, who is a resident of the United States, may, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Labor, apply to him for permission to bring into the United States or send for an otherwise admissible wife, parent, grandparent, unmarried son or brother under 21 years of age, unmarried or widowed daughter, or sister, grandson under 16 years of age whose father is dead, or unmarried or widowed granddaughter whose father is dead; and any alien who has declared, in the manner provided by law, his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and who is a resident of the United States, may make like application in reference to an otherwise admissible husband or wife, unmarried son under 21 years of age, or unmarried or widowed daughter; but no application may be made under this paragraph in the case of any relative by adoption.

The immigration against which the country is attempting to guard itself is now coming almost wholly from eastern and southern Europe. The number coming from that section of Europe in the last 10 or 15 years has been excessive, and has grown out of the vast expansion of the manufacturing interests of the country. The Immigration Commission of 1910 found that a great majority of all the employees in 37 of the great industries of the country that were investigated by the commission were made up of men and their sons who had come from eastern and southern Europe. There are probably over 5,000,000 of that class in the country to-day. Under this clause of the House bill, nobody knows what immigration would come from Europe as a result of it. Supposing that even one-third of those now in the country are naturalized, or have filed their first papers, nobody can estimate what the increase in population from that section of Europe will be if they are permitted to come in under this clause. For that reason I have been opposed to the provision of the House bill and in favor of the substitute which the Senate Committee has offered, which simply places the immigration from all nations on the percentage basis, and would allow only a given number to come from southern and eastern Europe, and would in no way affect western Europe.

The operation of the bill as passed by the House would be that, although we have in this country a large body that have come from northern and western Europe of the most desirable class, who have come with their families and have settled here and have made their homes here and have grown-up families who are represented here in Congress, yet if they have relatives who want to come over they would be cut off should the present law be repealed; nobody whatever could come in. The only safety, as I see it, for the protection of all is to adopt the substitute which the Senate committee has recommended.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the Senator entirely; but my objections to the House provision being stricken from the bill were that if it does and should become the law, nobody could come to this country. We might just as well put a wall around America and say: "Henceforth nobody shall come in here during the life of this bill."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think the Senator is right about that.

Mr. SMOOT. And I do not think the American people would stand for that. It is not only the man from the eastern part of Europe to whom this would apply, but the man from England, or the man from France, or the man from any other great nation of the world. He may have come over here two or three or four years ago with the avowed purpose of becoming a citizen, and no doubt may have gone just as far as he could to attain that haven, and if the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi prevails he can not bring his wife over here; he can not bring over here his sons under 21 years of age. Under the bill, even as it is drawn by the House, if his son is over 21 years he can not come in; but what harm could be had by allowing a daughter 10 or 12 years old, with her mother, to come here to join the father and make their home here? It is not going to interfere at all with labor conditions in the United States; and it is for that reason that I am perfectly satisfied with the Senate committee amendment, and I think it goes far enough, and I think it will accomplish everything that it is desired to accomplish in the United States. Therefore I could not possibly agree to striking out those provisions.

Let me say to the Senator from North Dakota, suppose a man came here from Norway or Sweden, or any other country, and in the meantime has secured land in any of the States of the Union, has built himself a little home, and has not yet had time to become a citizen, and he is ready and has saved enough to send for his wife and daughter, if this amendment should be agreed to, we would say to him, "No; you can not do that; we will not allow them to come to this country."

Mr. GRONNA. I am in sympathy with the position taken by the Senator from Utah; but does the Senator believe that the provisions of the amendment offered by the committee will safeguard the proposition?

Mr. SMOOT. They certainly will safeguard it as to the percentages, and, of course, when that percentage is reached, then the same thing will apply that would apply if the House bill were in operation, and I am perfectly willing, under the conditions existing, that that may take place for the life of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question, if the Senator from Utah will allow me?

I do not see any provision in the bill giving a preference to such cases as have been pointed out by the Senator from Mississippi and now referred to by the Senator from Utah in connection with the 5 per cent that would be admissible. That is to say, there is no provision in the bill that the relatives of those resident here shall be given preference in that 5 per cent. It seems that if you limit it to 5 per cent from any one of these countries, or to any per cent, that may be exhausted, and under this provision those who have gotten citizenship and desire their families to come will be debarred by the exhaustion of the percentage, and therefore no remedy could be given in that respect.

It is my opinion that if we are going to allow a percentage from these different countries to come, there ought to be provision made in the bill by which it may be known to the citizens here and abroad that preference will be given in just such cases as were pointed out by the Senator from Utah, or you might have a condition in some case where a rush of immigrants here would exhaust the 5 per cent, and those who really ought to be permitted to come in from the standpoint of humanity and right would be debarred even under that limitation.

I ask the Senator in charge of the bill, is any provision whatever made to give any preference at all to such cases?

Mr. COLT. May I answer the Senator? There is an exception permitted on the grounds of humanity, so that in any special case an exception might be made. There is, however, no general rule on this subject in the provisions of the Johnson bill or in the substitute reported by the committee relative to the matter.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I notice section 2, in the paragraph concluding on page 15 of the Senate committee substitute, provides—

> That in addition to the foregoing the Secretary of Labor may in individual cases admit aliens in excess of the maximum number when, in his opinion, such action is justifiable as a measure of humanity.

I desired to call the attention of the Senate to that provision, because, unless some limitation is placed upon the Secretary of Labor if he were so disposed he could let everybody in and base his action upon the ground of humanity. It seems to me even that needs certain modification, because he may have such a kindly heart that he may think conditions in Europe are so desperate that it would be an act of humanity to admit at least a greater percentage than we contemplate when we pass this act. There are other influences. Political influences may be brought to bear, and we ought not to leave an agent open to the exercise of responsibility that is imposed by this section. It is too great.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator will agree with me that it would be inhuman not to allow a man's wife or children to come here when he is here and has enough money now to send for his wife and children and bring them here.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator from Utah is getting at the very point I am making, that if we are going to allow the relatives of those who have become citizens to be admitted under such circumstances as he points out, we should clearly provide for it in this law, and not leave the possible meeting of that exigency to an officer who may admit them when humanitarian reasons actuate it. This does not confine it to the relatives or the cases which have been pointed out, but leaves it so that he, for the United States, can exercise his opinion in so important a matter. It seems to me that should be modified or stricken from this bill, and if the Senate thinks these relatives ought to be admitted we should incorporate an amendment in the bill providing, if it is the opinion of the Senate, that it shall be restricted to 5 per cent, that within that 5 per cent preference shall be given to the relatives of those who are already citizens.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, I might say to the Senator from South Carolina that it is very difficult to lay down any rule when you consider the complexity of the subject and the large number of cases arising under the immigration laws. If we do not have this exception in the bill, an alien might possibly arrive and his wife be taken very ill and have to be taken to a hospital on shore, in which case the Secretary of Labor would have the right to admit the alien as a measure of humanity.

There are various cases that might arise involving questions of humanity. I do not think that provision generally is too broad if we put in the words "as a measure of humanity." Of course, it is to be presumed in all legislation that those who enforce the law will enforce it in a reasonable manner, and if we make any other assumption there is no use legislating, because we can not put into the form of words any provision that might not be subject to abuse. We have to start upon the presumption that the heads of the departments will perform their duties in a reasonable way.

But, Mr. President, the motion of the Senator from Mississippi, now before the Senate, is to strike out the provision in the Johnson bill admitting dependents. I hope the Senate will remember in this connection that the danger which the country fears of a flood of immigration arises from immigration from southern and eastern Europe. That is not based upon conjecture; that is based upon figures. For the four years from 1910 to 1914 the average annual arrivals from southern and eastern Europe was something like 750,000. The apprehension is that that number will be largely increased, and we have an intimation in that direction from the number of arrivals in the past six months.

That is the danger we want to guard against. We do not need to guard against the danger of admitting immigrants from northern and western Europe. They come here in comparatively small numbers. In the last 10 years, or during the prewar period, they did not average annually more than 182,000. We do not want to exclude those from the country. They go largely to the farms. They help to develop the country in a different sense from the immigrants from southern and eastern Europe, who flock to the cities and to the industrial centers.

It is a fact, proven beyond dispute during the hearings, that there is a demand for common labor upon the farms to-day, so that if we are to raise the maximum amount of crops, or nearly that, we must have additional farm labor.

This amendment to the bill, to strike out this language, would operate as a complete suspension of immigration. I do not see how any Senator who has reflected upon the immigration question in all its bearings can reach such a conclusion. Considering the fact that 30,000,000 aliens and the descendants of aliens now live in this country; considering also the fact that we want to develop our foreign trade with other nations and want to be on good terms with them; considering also the fact that there is an absolute demand now for agricultural labor, it is difficult to see how anyone can arrive at the conclusion that the United States of America should shut the bars down and totally suspend all immigration. I believe it would work to the injury of the country. Nor do I think that such suspension is necessary to meet the fears which the people now have with regard to the flood of immigration. They can be met absolutely by fixing a low maximum number that can arrive within 15 months. We would thereby quiet the fears of those who are afraid of a flood of immigration and at the same time permit to come into the country a small maximum number and thus help to supply the wants of the country.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator has referred to the scarcity of labor on the farms, and there is no doubt that there is such a scarcity. I think we all recognize the fact that the laborers who came into this country from northern and western Europe made first-class farm laborers. But if we are to admit those from southern Europe and from eastern Europe, can the Senator tell us what portion of them would likely go to the farms and can he tell us the character of farm labor we have been getting from those sections of Europe? I ask the question, not out of idle curiosity but because I have had some letters from farmers in Ohio, who have ridiculed the thought of placing southern or eastern European immigrants on the farms, and they do so because they regard them as lacking in the necessary qualifications for that kind of work.

Mr. COLT. I can only answer the Senator in a general way. Therefore I might say, generally, that a comparatively small percentage of the immigrants from southern and eastern Europe, a very small percentage, go upon the farms, according to the best knowledge I have.

Mr. POMERENE. That being so, would not such immigrants as we have from the southern part of Europe and eastern Europe go to the industrial centers, the very places where now they have their problems of unemployment?

Mr. COLT. The probability is that they would. But has the Senator considered the number of those from southern and eastern Europe who would be admitted under this 5 per cent limitation? Let me state, in a word; perhaps I might relieve the Senator's mind. In round numbers there would be 250,000—to be exact, 255,000.

But you must remember what is not always thought of by those who consider this problem—the departures. If you have a number going home equal to the number who arrive, you have no increase in your population. Upon the lowest figure, out of 250,000, more than 40 per cent would return.

To illustrate: Of the immigration from southern and eastern Europe which came to this country during the year ending the 1st of last July, 122 went home to every 100 who arrived, and during the month of July, the last month for which we have the full figures from the department, 66 per cent went home to those who arrived. Therefore it is fair to say—it is within reason to say—that this present bill will not admit more than 150,000 immigrants net from southern and eastern Europe during the year.

What are 150,000 to a population of 105,000,000? Broadly speaking, the effect of this immigration upon the social welfare or even upon the labor of this country, when you consider the comparatively small numbers that arrive, is, to my mind, grossly exaggerated.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator has referred to the large number of foreign-born men who have returned to Europe. If they were intending to remain there, that might signify something to the Senate; but the information I have is that the most of the men who have returned to Europe expect to come back within a short time. Many of them have taken out their first papers. Many of them have become naturalized citizens here, and I can understand their interest and their desire to go back to Europe. But it seems to me that if you are going to try and set off those who are returning as against those who are coming in the result of your reasoning will be misleading.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, in view of what has been said by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], I would like to make an explanation.

We were receiving, just prior to the World War, a very large number of immigrants, over a million a year, and from southeastern Europe we were receiving, upon an average during the last three years preceding the war, about 735,000. They were induced to come by reason of the remarkable expansion there had been in the manufactures of the United States. The movement presented a problem even at that time which alarmed a great many people.

When the war broke out that immigration stopped. On the other hand, the manufactures of America were stimulated by the orders which they received from abroad and from our own Government, and they were driven to the very highest point of production. In order to secure labor they were compelled to offer extraordinary wages and appeal to American labor to come in and fill their shops.

As I was saying, we secured substantially no European immigration during the war, because there were more who returned to southeastern Europe during the period of the war than were received from that source. So while for four or five years we were doing a larger business in manufactures than we had ever done before, and without any aid from Europe, which had contributed nearly a million of aliens a year previous to that time, the shortage in employees had to be made up by the American boys who had not been called to the ranks, and the result was that they responded from every rural community and entered into the shops of industry. In my own State I had occasion to notice it. The manufacturers told me that they were paying 50 cents an hour to every boy, fresh from the farm, who could stand before a lathe.

The result has been that all this young element moved to the cities and became connected with the various industries and there is a marked indisposition on their part to return to the country. The same indisposition to return to the country exists largely among those who have returned from Europe since the war. The result is that while there may be a congestion in the cities at the present time, a surplus of labor there in the manufactures, nevertheless those employees will not return to the country. They have no disposition to do so. There is the problem that we as a Nation are facing to-day.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, that is greatly accentuated by the fact that farm products have fallen greatly in price and farm labor likewise.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It is undoubtedly accentuated by that fact, and the one that is suggested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] is a very potent one, because the immigration that comes from southeastern Europe has been stimulated by the manufactures of America. If Senators will look at the figures in the report, on pages 3 and 4, they will find that the old immigration which has been lauded so much, and rightfully lauded, between the years 1882 and 1889 came in to the number of over 3,000,000. The new immigration coming from southern and eastern Europe numbered only about 708,000. That was the height of the old immigration which had been coming many years and which so largely settled in the West, opened up the farms, and constructed our great systems of railroads, and eventually became estimable American citizens. They brought their families; they came here to make the United States their home.

If Senators will further consider the 7-year period from 1890 to 1896, inclusive, they will see that the old immigration only amounted to 1,562,000, while the new immigration had grown, as the old had diminished, to 1,194,000. The increase of the new type was because of the increase of our manufactures, which had a most remarkable growth during that time. Then, if Senators will turn to the next page, they will find that in the 18 years between 1897 and 1914, inclusive, we received only 2,983,000 of the old immigration, but we received 10,057,000 of the new immigration.

What was this new immigration? That is something that we must understand if we solve this question intelligently. The new immigration, coming almost wholly from eastern and southern Europe, differed in character from the old immigration in that substantially 70 per cent of it, as a whole, consisted of males, and substantially 86 per cent of the males were living single lives, being unmarried or having left their wives in Europe.

They came to the United States, not so much for the purpose of remaining here and making homes as to seek profitable employment at the seats of our great basic industries. As a class they were strong, healthy, able-bodied men, industrious and frugal in their habits. Substantially 95 per cent were under 45 years of age; right in the very prime of life. The investigation of the Immigration Commission showed that a great majority of the employees in the great industries in the United States investigated by that commission were of this class.

This class have moved in racial and family groups. Wherever a company from any section of Europe has gone in the first instance those from the same section later on have gone. So they have moved in racial groups; they have lived in racial groups; and they have congregated, as the Senator from Ohio has well said, at the seats of the great industries of the country. There is the problem, with our rural and agricultural communities denuded of labor, which we have to solve. There never was a more difficult problem presented to the Congress of the United States than the problem that is before us.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Has the Senator any table showing, with reference to aliens coming into the country, their occupations and the occupations in which they entered after coming here? I think it would be very instructive to the Senate to know what percentage of the alien population coming into the country have gone to the farms or are engaged in agriculture.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Of those who have gone to the farms there is a negligible number of what we call the new immigration—that which has been coming since 1880.

Mr. COLT. May I answer the question of the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. COLT. On page 41 of the last report of the Commissioner of Immigration it is shown that out of 430,000 immigrants there was the following classification in round numbers: Professional, 12,000; skilled, 69,000; farm labor, 15,000; farmers, 12,000; laborers, 81,000; servants, 37,000; other occupations, 28,000; no occupations, including women and children, 173,000. That is out of a total of 430,000.

Mr. POMERENE. Following up the question suggested by the Senator from South Carolina, I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont specifically this question: Assuming that the Senate committee amendment is agreed to, how is that going to help to solve the problem of farm labor?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. That is just what I was coming to, if the Senator please. During the last six months we have seen indications of a renewal of the new immigration; that is, it was suspended during the war, but during the first six months of the present fiscal year it has increased in such numbers that we may well believe it will reach perhaps the prewar-time figures. There is a feeling in the country that this labor is not demanded, particularly as it moves to the centers of population rather than to the rural and agricultural sections of the country.

The great problem that we have to solve is, first, the problem of selection, whether we can devise some means by which we can admit aliens who will go to the rural communities and to the agricultural communities. Whether or not we can do that remains an open question, but we certainly can not do it at this session of the Congress. Our second duty is to devise some measure that will provide a better distribution, one that will offer inducements to aliens coming from the old countries to seek the farms and rural communities and so help balance up the conditions which now exist throughout the country. That can not be done at this time, but during the next session of Congress we hope, taking the combined wisdom of Senators who have studied the question, to devise such a scheme.

Canada, for instance, while she may require the possession of $350 by the person seeking admission who is going to a city, has made the offer that if such person will go to the farm he will be admitted with smaller means. I do not know whether that is a feasible plan or not. I only mention it as an illustration of the fact that Canada is studying the problem and endeavoring to devise means by which immigration can be directed to the farms. We must do something of the kind here.

Mr. POMERENE. But they have a different condition from that which we have.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I know that. They have 10,000,000 people and we have 105,000,000.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; and they have millions of acres of arable land where we have a negligible quantity.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Precisely. That only emphasizes the difficulty of meeting the problem that we have to solve.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I may say, with reference to the statement of the Senator from Vermont that employment is difficult to obtain in the cities, there being no demand for employment in the cities, if the immigrants come here and are unable to get employment there they will be more likely to go to the country than heretofore.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. We have a distributing agency provided for in the law now, which was enacted in 1907, I think. The scheme was very much mutilated before becoming a law, but a branch of the Bureau of Immigration is in existence for that purpose at the present time. I am sorry to say that it has not worked as I had hoped it would. We must in the future go over the whole subject, and devise some way by which communication can be had between the communities demanding labor and the communities where labor abounds.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Under present conditions, being unable to get employment in the cities, they should be directed to the farms by such bureaus.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. There is a very great indisposition on the part of immigrants from eastern and southern Europe to leave the racial group and distribute themselves throughout the country. That is a great difficulty hard to overcome.

In reply to another suggestion of the Senator from Ohio, who has given thought to the subject, I wish to say that in recommending legislation to meet the present situation the committee have attempted to remove the widely prevailing fear of a great influx of southern and eastern European immigration during the present year until we can devise a permanent system of immigration that will be beneficial to the country. The bill as it passed the House, as we have seen, is a bill of prohibition, with an exception in favor of admitting certain relatives of foreign-born persons resident in the United States. I do not wish to take any time in a discussion of that feature of the bill. Figures relative to it have been given by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. The passage of the House bill would discriminate during the present year in favor of southeastern Europe, instead of northwestern Europe, whose immigrants when they come distribute themselves over the country. It is an immigration which we should very much like to see increased.

It would discriminate against them for the reason that the people in northwestern Europe are not dependent upon those who have preceded them to this country. Those who are in this country brought, in most cases, their families with them. Therefore the provision admitting relatives is largely inapplicable to northwestern European immigration, and it is probable that such immigration would be almost entirely debarred, even though it be the very best element of immigration we have ever received.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. I believe the Senator from Vermont is mistaken in his last statement. I have been in the West for a great many years, and I believe the people who came from northern and western Europe into the Northwest came, to the extent of probably 90 per cent of them, without their families. They were all too poor to be able to bring their families with them.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. But they came with the intention of remaining and sending for their families.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; they did remain, and they did send for their families.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Exactly. If the House provision is passed, the State which my friend represents in part would be unable to send to the Scandinavian countries and bring in men to buy farms in his State, even if they were to bring their families.

Mr. GRONNA. The great trouble is that they are going back the other way just now. But that is not the question. What I believe ought to be amended in the Senate committee is this: I have no objection to the restriction of 5 per cent, but I believe preference ought to be given to the alien who has come to this country lawfully; that he may have his family come into the country. That is the only suggestion I have to make.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will allow me on that point, I wish to suggest that I understand we are now dealing with the House provision, but in case that provision does not prevail I shall at the proper time move to provide, on page 12, line 25, after the word "census," that preference shall be given to the wives and children of citizens or aliens now in this country who have applied for citizenship, so that if the 5 per cent be allowed to come in from any one country we shall give preference to those who are now citizens and who desire to bring their relatives and members of their families. Then I think I shall move to strike out the additional proviso at the end of section 2, in the following words:

And provided further, That, in addition to the foregoing, the Secretary of Labor may in individual cases admit aliens in excess of the maximum number when, in his opinion, such action is justifiable as a measure of humanity.

In case the first amendment is adopted it will take care of the matter, but I presume that what the committee had in mind when they inserted that proviso was that there then would be discretion on the part of the Immigration Commissioner out of the 5 per cent admissible to give preference to those who are related to immigrants who have already come to this country.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, as the Senator from South Carolina has called attention to an amendment which he has offered, I am a little anxious to understand just what restriction the Senate substitute provides. If we note the first sentence of section 2, it reads:

SEC. 2. That the number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted under existing statutes to the United States in any fiscal year shall be limited to 5 per cent of the number of foreign-born persons of such nationality resident in the United States as determined by the United States census.

Now, let us analyze that and see what it means. That means that if we limit the number who may come to the United States from a given country to 5 per cent of the number who are already residents of the United States, then, if we only include those who have come to this country in 20 years, we shall be admitting on the average the same number that we have admitted during the last 20 years. If we take into consideration those who have come in for 40 years, I think we would, under this amendment, be admitting more than the average during the last 40 years. I do not see how it would be any limitation at all.

Mr. STERLING. Does not the Senator from Vermont mean on the basis of the census of 1910?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I supposed I had so stated. The immigration is limited to 5 per cent of the number who were shown to be in the United States by the census of 1910. That is the provision of the bill. I thought I had stated that.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] read the provision of the bill correctly; but the bill should be amended so as to provide in terms that admissions shall be 5 per cent on the basis of the census of 1910.

Mr. POMERENE. I did not hear the comment of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. I say the Senator from Ohio read the bill correctly. The language is "in the United States as determined by the United States census," without saying what census or the census of any particular year. I presume the Senator from Vermont intended that it should be the census of 1910.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I understand that is in the bill. It should be, for the census of 1910 is the last complete census we have on which we may base the percentage.

Mr. HARRISON. Further on in the bill it provides that the census of 1910 shall be the basis.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; further on the bill provides that the percentage shall be reckoned according to the census of 1910.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], I will say the plan regarding the new immigration, that coming from southern and eastern Europe would work out in this manner: According to the census of 1910, there were in this country 5,108,312 people who had come from Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria, Serbia, Montenegro, Greece, Italy, Portugal, Rumania, Russia, Spain, Turkey in Europe, and Turkey in Asia. Under the 5 per cent plan the bill would admit of those nationalities during the next fiscal year in round numbers 255,000. As a matter of fact, during the five prewar years the average number admitted was 738,000; in other words, the operation of the 5 per cent plan would reduce the immigration from southern and eastern Europe two-thirds in volume from what it was at the breaking out of the European war. It seemed to the committee that that would be all the reduction that would be necessary to protect our country under the most extreme circumstances.

On the other hand, it would not affect the immigration coming from northern and western Europe, for the reason that the population in the United States in 1910 coming from Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, and the United Kingdom was 6,740,000. Under the 5 per cent basis there would be permitted to come in 347,000 during the year, but as a matter of fact these people do not want to come in such numbers as that. Attention is called to the fact that while under the provisions of the proposed amendment the number permitted to enter the United States in any fiscal year of the older immigration class from northern and western Europe would be, as I have said, 337,000, when as a matter of fact the normal flow of this immigration annually from 1910 to 1914 was only 132,000. The people of northern and western Europe do not want to come here in large numbers. While they would have a right to come in larger numbers annually, we would not in any event get more than 130,000 a year; and we should be very glad to have them come.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator from Vermont a question?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. Do I understand that immigrants coming into Canada have to pay a head tax of $350?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. No; I do not wish to be understood in that way. The Canadians through their Governor General and council change from time to time their regulations regarding the entrance of aliens. Recently, I am told—I have not the paper before me and can not quote it accurately—they have made a broad distinction, as broad, perhaps, as that which I have mentioned, between immigrants who wish to go to the cities and those who are willing to go to the agricultural sections.

Mr. OVERMAN. But immigrants coming into Canada have to pay a heavy head tax?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Whereas our head tax is $7.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. But the Canadians have an elastic system. Under it the governor of the Dominion, with his council, can suit conditions to the times in which they live and to changing conditions in the country.

Mr. OVERMAN. What has been the amount of immigration into Canada? Does the Sentor from Vermont know how many immigrants have landed in Canada?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not recall; but Canada needs immigrants.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know it does, and that is the reason why I am asking the question.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not remember how many immigrants she has received, but Canada is selecting very carefully the class of immigrants who shall come in.

However, the fact which I wish to emphasize before concluding is that this bill is emergency legislation. It covers only the next fiscal year, and is offered as the best plan we can devise for the purpose of giving Congress time thoroughly to study the question and to reach some definite conclusion as to the solution of the problem.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Vermont will permit me to interrupt him, I desire to say, in reply to the Senator from North Carolina, that according to my understanding of the Canadian law a head tax is not imposed, but every immigrant arriving must have in his or her possession either $250 or $350. In case, however, the immigrant is bound for a farm, or in case the immigrant is bound for domestic service, he is not obliged to have any money in his possession at all. So the Canadian requirement is not in the nature of a head tax.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I was hazy in my recollection about the Canadian provision. I knew, however, they were making a distinction to encourage the immigrant who was willing to work on the farm.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. I should like to have the Senator's opinion of the provision to which his attention was directed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I refer to the proviso on page 15, which reads:

That in addition to the foregoing the Secretary of Labor may in individual cases admit aliens in excess of the maximum number when in his opinion such action is justifiable as a measure of humanity.

What does the Senator think about the probable working of that clause? How would it be interpreted?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. If it shall be interpreted as the clause in the act of 1917 was intended to be interpreted, it would be interpreted as it reads, as a measure of humanity. It would not permit the admission of 60,000 Mexicans to pick cotton. That provision was put in because of two or three cases which were brought to the attention of the committee where a real hardship would be imposed on an individual who wished to enter this country for some special purpose, but would be unable to do so under the general law.

Mr. WILLIS. Does not the Senator think that such a provision as this will really invite a repetition of an undesirable situation? It seems to me that the language is too broad; that it can make the proposed law meaningless.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not know; I am perfectly willing to have it modified if the Senate so desires.

Mr. WILLIS. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to ask him another question. The popular notion about this bill is that it restricts immigration on the 5 per cent basis. If I caught the Senator's statement correctly, under the proposed legislation almost 600,000 immigrants could come into this country next year under the provisions of the Senate amendment. Am I correct in that?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. To be accurate, 255,416 could come in from southern and eastern Europe, and from western Europe 337,000 might be admitted; but I have called attention to the fact that the normal flow from western Europe is only about 130,000.

Mr. WILLIS. The figures given by the Senator make a total of 592,000, or approximately 600,000.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the Senator state what the immigration was in the last normal year before the war? It was about 1,200,000, was it not?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes, sir; just about that.

Mr. WILLIS. Then, as a matter of fact, the limitation will not be 5 per cent, as is the impression in the popular mind, but 50 per cent.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. In 1914, 1,518,000 immigrants came from all countries in Europe alone.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand. So that, practically speaking, the number that would come in might be 50 per cent rather than 5 per cent, as is generally understood by the public?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Between 40 and 50 per cent of previous immigration as a whole; yes. But this measure will relieve the anxiety as to the problem that was presented by the prewar conditions, when almost the whole immigration was coming from southeastern Europe, and the indications are that future immigration will also come from that section of Europe. The 5 per cent plan is really a selective plan, limiting the immigration from the nations in that portion of Europe to 5 per cent of the number from such nations now resident in the United States.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, it is always a difficult matter to legislate as we should upon the subject of immigration. Whenever a committee having to do with the subject opens its hearings the friends of those who wish to bring in their friends and relatives from foreign countries besiege the committee, and frequently Members are told that if certain restrictive provisions are put in the bill those back home in their districts who want immigration unrestricted will resent it and vote against them in the next election. I submit that it is high time for those who love America and her institutions to assert themselves, and exercise the greatest caution in the matter of admitting at this time certain foreigners into this country.

We are told in various periodicals that within the next two or three years some of the foreign countries are preparing to dump upon America ten, twelve, or fifteen million people. We know that there is much unrest in the Old World; we know that the bolsheviki are rampant in Europe; we know, for the newspapers have advised us, that Lenin and Trotski are carrying on a propaganda in this country; that scores of their agents are seeking admission here in order to carry on their devilish work in America.

I prefer the House measure, Mr. President, and I expect to vote for the amendment to the House bill offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. It seems that somehow these measures always have loopholes in them through which undesirable immigrants find their way into our country. The provision which would permit certain foreigners to come in and after a little while send for their relatives and bring them in, without regard to their fitness, is a dangerous provision. If we permit 1,000,000 to come into the United States and then allow that 1,000,000 to bring over 3,000,000 relatives, we will have 4,000,000 foreigners dumped upon the country under such a provision.

I am in favor of shutting the immigration gate for a period of at least one year. This is a critical time in the history of the world. It is time for America to examine conditions in her own household. We are told in debate here this morning that there are 30,000,000 aliens and their descendants in the United States. Shall 30,000,000 dictate to 70,000,000 what our policy shall be on this all-important question? Shall the law makers of our country truckle to the vote that threatens to punish those who would restrict immigration? I call upon the other seventy and odd million Americans to guard the gate and stop undesirables from pouring into our country. It makes no difference whose political fortune is involved, the welfare of the country should be placed above the political fortunes of any man.

Two millions and more already in the United States are without employment the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] told us a day or two ago. If 2,000,000 Americans are walking the streets with nothing to do, with many industries shut down, and with agriculture in dire distress, with disturbed conditions all around us, why not shut the immigration gate for one year and keep seven or eight hundred thousand more people from pouring in upon our shores?

Mr. President, but a small percentage of those who come to this country go to the farm; in this bill, however, they have provided that those who go to the city, who take their places in the workshops there, shall pay $7 per head and have about $300 in money, but that those who are to be sent out into the rural communities of the country need not have a dollar. I submit that this is a consideration that our farmers will not greatly appreciate.

Mr. President, I am in favor of having a commission of true and tried Americans on both sides of the ocean to handle this immigration question. This is the most vital question that touches our national life. I repeat we can not be too careful in the matter of guarding our country against the admission of undesirable foreigners. Blackhanders, kidnapers, and red anarchists have found their way into our country. We have tried to guard against them, but they have come; and now, when the world is in a state of turmoil, following the terrible war, and so many foreign people are restless, seeking some place to go, they cry, "On to America," and the steamship companies encourage the cry. The question is, What are we going to do to protect our country from a poisonous influx of unfit and undesirable foreigners?

A few years ago Hon. John L. Burnett, of Alabama, then chairman of the Immigration Committee in the House, went to Italy, and while there he inquired as to what had become of the band of outlaws that had murdered so many people and spread terror over a considerable portion of Italy, and they told him that they had all gone to America.

Mr. President, I recall that a few years ago the King of Denmark pardoned 700 convicted criminals, with the distinct understanding that they would all leave for America, and straightaway they came to America. I was in the city of New York during the recent World War, and as I was coming from a banquet where I had spoken in the interest of the Liberty bond campaign I saw 200 people or more standing around a wild-looking foreigner, a soap-box orator, and he was speaking in a language that I did not understand, but an interpreter said that he was assailing the flag and saying that if he had it in his power he would overthrow this Government; and yet he was permitted to pour out his poison against the greatest and freest Government in the world and nobody disturbed him. We sent an army of more than 2,000,000 men across the sea to defeat a foreign foe and prevent a foreign army from invading America, and yet we permit the enemy through loopholes in immigration laws to come right into the American household. If our boys fought to keep the enemy out, surely we can vote for a law that will keep out the dangerous and deadly enemies of the country.

But, Mr. President, some tell us that we can permit a few hundred thousand foreigners to come in and that if the cities become congested we will send them to the farms. The distressing conditions that now obtain, as a result of the war and other things, in the South and West, the great farming sections of the country, our farmers could not afford to pay them wages enough to live. At the present low and unprofitable price of cotton the farmer in the South is not able to pay them a living wage. At the present low and unprofitable price of corn, the grain grower of the West is not able to pay them a living wage. But we are told that there are 10,000,000 ready to be dumped in upon our shores, and those who oppose restricted immigration in any form tell us that one year is too long for any foreigner to have to wait before we permit him to come over and enjoy the blessings and benefits of our great country.

Citizenship here is worth years of work and striving. Let them learn to appreciate its value.

Why, Mr. President, Jacob had to work and wait 7 years for Rachel, and when he found that they had fooled him and given him Leah he worked and waited 7 years more for Rachel—14 years in all; but when we seek to impress upon all those who aspire to citizenship in this superb land of liberty, when we desire to close the doors at this critical time lest thousands and hundreds of thousands of dangerous and undesirables come in before we can determine thoroughly the policy we will adopt upon this question of immigration, they tell us that we are unreasonable and that one year is too long to have to wait.

Why, Senators on the other side yesterday postponed the great road-building program of 43 States in the Union, and this was done, they told us, in order to give them time to get their bearings and work out a permanent program. They stopped that great and important work, but it is too much to ask the Senate to shut the gate for one year in the face of thousands who seek to come here and poison the very life of the Nation. It is time for this Nation to stop, look, and listen. We must work out very carefully an immigration policy to meet the new and changed conditions in world affairs. One thing that all loyal Americans can and will agree upon, and that is that no enemy shall enter.

Mr. President, I am opposed to permitting any man or woman to remain in this country who questions the integrity or challenges the authority of the Stars and Stripes, the loved flag of our country. If we can not control those who would tear it down and hoist the red flag in its place, I would send them out of the country—men and women, all of them. This question that we are considering to-day is the most vital question that will come before this Congress—the question of protecting all that we hold dear from the dangers that threaten through foreign immigration. This is no longer a question now of desire on the part of the immigrants to come to America; oh, no, Mr. President! It has become a matter of commercial traffic and barter. The steamship companies are making their millions out of hauling foreigners to America. The able and distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], one of the ablest and best Members of this body, talks about the old days, when the old immigrants came. Ah, how different it was then. Then they wanted to come to this country to enjoy its liberty, to better their condition, and contribute to the strength and glory of this Republic, and thousands of them did so. But what of the situation to-day? Agents are abroad in Europe saying: "The steamship sails on a certain day; only a small amount of money is necessary to take you out of this country and land you in America." Why, they gather them up like cattle. In my State the cattle buyer used to go out in the communities and buy a yearling here and a yearling yonder until he got a carload to send to the marketplace. So immigration has become a great money-making business. The steamship companies are making a vast deal of money out of hauling all kinds of foreigners into the United States.

I appeal to Senators here and to the people of this Nation to wake up and stop this evil that strikes at the very vitals of our country. Whenever one of our committees sits down in a room and opens hearings, agents and interests come in, and they say: "This provision and that ought to be stricken out"; and they whisper around: "If you vote for that provision there are enough of this and that element in your district to defeat you for reelection."

I submit to the Senate that no man's political life is comparable in importance to guarding this Nation against the dangers that are involved in loose or unrestricted immigration. We ought to rise above such considerations when it comes to this question, and say to them: "When you threaten me with defeat unless I vote to permit the doors to remain open, you are asking me to barter the highest and best interests of my country for a seat in Congress. That is what you are asking me to do. You are asking me to turn my back upon the interests of my children and their children's children. You are asking me to prove unfaithful to the Government that I love." That is what they are doing when they ask us to throw the doors open to all sorts of immigrants from foreign countries.

So, Mr. President, I shall cheerfully vote for the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and I shall also vote to substitute the House bill, if amended, for the Senate committee bill. I want to close the door for the present. One year is not long. The children of Israel were required to wander 40 years in the wilderness before they were permitted to enjoy the blessings of the promised land. Here is the best Government on the globe, and the greatest land in all the world, and yet they tell us that the time is too long when we shut the door for 12 months in order to provide for the keeping out of our country vast hordes of unfit and undesirable foreigners.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, in dealing with this subject of immigration and our attitude toward the alien, I think it well to state the situation from an economic standpoint; and I quote the following from an address by Commissioner Wallis:

> Immigrant workmen contribute 85 per cent of all the labor in the meat-packing industries; seven-tenths of the coal mining; 78 per cent in the woolen mills; contribute nine-tenths of all labor in the cotton mills; make nine-twentieths of all the clothing; manufacture more than half of the shoes; build four-fifths of all the furniture; make one-half of the collars, cuffs, and shirts; turn out four-fifths of the leather; make half of the gloves; refine nine-twentieths of the sugar; make half of the tobacco and cigars.

I read from another summary by another author, Miss Keller, as follows:

> Immigrant workmen mine three-quarters of the output of iron and coal. They constitute the bulk of labor in the lumber camps. They are used almost exclusively to build our tracks and roads and to keep them in repair. In all forms of construction immigrant labor predominates. The building of houses, delayed first by the war and then by the high price of materials, now finds itself seriously handicapped by the shortage of immigrant labor. Immigrants bake one-half of the bread in America, refine one-half of the sugar, prepare four-fifths of all the leather, make 50 per cent of the gloves, shoes, and silk; and make 95 per cent of all our clothing. Sixty per cent of all packing-house employees are foreign born.

That is the contribution of alien labor to American industries, mines, and agriculture.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, does the Senator know what percentage of that labor has been naturalized?

Mr. COLT. I am unable to answer the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. Has the Senator considered, if those figures are true, the little amount of work that is left to native born in this country?

Mr. COLT. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that I simply give the figures upon the authority of those who wrote them. But I might further say, and I ask the Senator from Vermont to correct me if I am mistaken, that in the report of the Immigration Commission, of which he was the head, figures were introduced as to the percentage of alien labor in the various industries of the country. I will not say that those figures exactly correspond with these. I heard him read some of them at a meeting of the Immigration Committee. But I will say that they were along those lines.

Mr. SIMMONS. The point I was making was that if those figures are true this immigrant population has absolutely crowded out the native born from our factories, leaving very little of that character of work to be performed by American-born citizens. I do not know what some of the figures given by the Senator mean. In one of the estimates it is said these immigrants make 50 per cent of the bread of this country. I do not know whether that means that they make the materials out of which the bread is produced, or whether they make the bread out of the materials.

Mr. COLT. I think it means they are the bakers.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think it must mean that.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. In answer to the inquiry of the Senator from North Carolina, I think the figures he was inquiring about were to this effect: The Immigration Commission of 1910 investigated 37 of the leading industries of the United States. In that way they came in contact with about 700,000 of the employees in the 37 industries. Those were located at 200 different places in the United States. Among the employees they found that 60 per cent were foreign born and 15 per cent were of the second generation. I do not know of any other figures upon that subject which can be given.

Mr. COLT. With regard to the immigration problem at the present day, the only information we have which is positive and accurate is as to the number of arrivals. It is two years and three months since the armistice, and yet in the year ending the 1st of July, 1920, there were only 430,000 admitted; and if you should undertake to get the net number of those who departed, you would find the net increase in our alien population during the year ending the 1st of July, 1920, was 141,000.

Those figures do not indicate any danger of a flood, so far as the arrivals are concerned. Since the 1st of July there has been some increase, an increase which runs up for the six months to 411,000. But at the same time we witnessed the phenomenon of the large departure of these aliens from the United States. So that when we get the net number we shall have reduced that 411,000 to 250,000 at least.

It is rather a remarkable thing, in speaking about how all Europe wants to come to America, to notice one or two figures with regard to the month of July, which is the only month as to which we have the immigrants classified by races. This is official. In the month of July there were 34,228 arrivals from southern and eastern Europe and 22,534 departures. Of the Magyars there were 128 arrivals and 2,631 departures; of the Bulgarians, the Serbians, and the Montenegrins there were 333 arrivals and 3,158 departures.

That was a year and a half after the armistice. What I am saying is this, that when it is said there are 15,000,000 who want to come to this country, all we know, as a matter of fact, is that a number want to come. We also know, as a matter of fact, that if the immigration arrives during the next five or six months in proportion to the last six months it will approach the antewar period. We further know that, so far as the flood from Europe is concerned, there are two sides to the question. The question of a flood is a disputed question. It is based largely upon general impression. It may be true. There is, however, sufficient truth in it so that the country demands at this time that we should fix a maximum, and that is all you can say with regard to that question.

I could argue the question of checks and balances to show that in all probability no more will arrive during the next six months than arrived during the past six months, and that the number of departures will be equally great. I might cite as a check that the primary factor in immigration is the economic condition of the country, and that whenever the economic condition of the country is bad immigration automatically decreases. That is a law, that is a barometer, independent of any statute.

After the panic of 1907 immigration fell off in 1908 more than half a million. After the business reaction of 1893–94 immigration fell off one-half. After the business reaction of 1873, 1874, and 1875 immigration was reduced to one-third. After the business depression of 1856–57 immigration was reduced to one-third. It is significant that during the month of January of the present year immigration has fallen off very materially from what it was in December, and it was a little less in December than it was in November. This great economic law is automatically adjusting immigration to-day. It is a check. It may be overcome by other conditions, but it is working, and we had testimony that ships arriving from Spain with steerage passengers on board brought only half their carrying capacity.

I have in my hand a letter from the Secretary of State saying that the department has received a communication from the American consul at Valetta, Malta, reading in part as follows:

The emigration committee has issued the following notice:
"Information having been received that there may be a slackness in the demand for labor during the winter months, intending emigrants to America are warned that no passports to the United States of America will be issued until further notice."

Then follows a provision that there may be exceptions in case of families.

I also have a communication, under date of January 3, from the Secretary of State, to the effect that the Italian Government had suspended the issuance of passports. It reads:

The chargé d'affaires of Italy presents his compliments to his excellency the Acting Secretary of State and has the honor to inform him that, according to a communication just received from the ministry of foreign affairs, the Royal Italian Government has suspended the issue of passports to subjects emigrating to the United States and will refrain from issuing such passports until informed as to the classes of immigrants desired in this country.

Thus Italy has suspended the issuance of passports. Let me say that in studying the immigration question during the past year, I found that a very considerable percentage came from Italy. That is another check upon immigration.

Further, the Governments of Europe are regulating emigration to a greater extent than ever before. They are guarding their nationals; they are trying to hold them, especially the new republics that have been created. Further than that, the nationals themselves feel in duty bound to remain at home to help upbuild their countries, and many of them find it their duty to migrate from this country back to their own countries to help in the reconstruction of their countries. Mention has been made of the expense of transportation and transportation facilities. The situation in regard to shipping and transportation facilites, as shown by the testimony at the hearings, is this, that the transportation facilities could not possibly bring over millions, but that the ships could bring in excess of a million, or a number far in excess of what arrived during the war. To my mind there was no question but that if that number of immigrants wanted to come transportation facilities would be furnished. Therefore the transportation problem, in the minds of the committee, so far as I interpret it, did not enter into this question at all.

I was only saying that so far as I am concerned I think that we ought to say that the coming of 15,000,000 from Europe is a matter of conjecture, that we overestimate the effect of war conditions abroad. War conditions, as a matter of history, have little or no effect upon immigration. The statistics of the past century prove this. I am not going to assert positively that the present war conditions and political conditions and economic conditions in Europe may not produce a great influx. I do not think they will, but there is enough doubt about it, and the country feels so strongly about it, that I wish to put an absolute check against that danger. This bill does that. Let me say in this connection that we can not admit immigrants entirely from western and northern Europe and not admit any from southern and eastern Europe. The committee have made the best and the most reasonable disposition of the question that, to my mind, was possible under the circumstances, unless we are going to say to the country, "The United States is absolutely going to suspend immigration for a year," and that proposition I do not think can be defended.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. COLT. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. I have not had the opportunity to read the testimony which was taken before the committee, but the papers reported the commissioner of immigration, which I think is his title, at the port of New York as having said that there were, my recollection is, 15,000,000 in Europe awaiting transportation to this country, and that the only limitation, as I now recall his statement, upon their coming to this country was the lack of transportation. What was his estimate in that behalf?

Mr. COLT. The general statements of Commissioner Wallis were substantially as the Senator has stated, but they were confined to general statements. He might have said 20,000,000. The Senator can see at once, from the nature of the inquiry, that no one can tell definitely as to numbers.

Mr. POMERENE. I quite agree with that.

Mr. COLT. With regard to transportation, there seem to be transportation facilities to bring over in a reasonable time all who wish to come.

Mr. POMERENE. I realize that any statement of that kind is more or less of a conjecture, but I saw a statement to the effect that he bases his conclusions upon statements which were made to him by the presidents or general managers of a large number of steamship companies.

Mr. COLT. I do not think that statement will bear analysis. I think the answer to the 15,000,000 proposition is that the same condition exists to-day, and yet we see only a comparatively small increase in immigration. As to transportation facilities, the testimony was that they are good, and that the companies were about to put into the service some additional ships.

Mr. POMERENE. Can the Senator tell me this? As I remember, Commissioner Caminetti was in Europe, having gone over there particularly, as I understood, to study the immigration problem to some extent, perhaps among other duties.

Mr. COLT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. POMERENE. What was his view of the situation?

Mr. COLT. His view was that there was a flood of impending immigration. I can not answer the question better than that. Commissioner Wallis's view was that there was a flood of impending immigration.

May I say to the Senator from Ohio, as a personal matter, that where I find a disputed question of fact, where arguments may be made upon both sides, and valid arguments, and I find four or five men are against my conclusions, I am very apt to think that I am wrong. I do not like the dogmatic temperament, and therefore whatever general conclusions I may have reached with regard to the so-called flood from Europe, I yield to the opinion of my colleagues and to the settled conviction of the country; and I recognize the fact that, whatever conclusion I might reach, there is still that same fear that exists that I can not answer and that the conditions do warrant.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I offered the amendment, and have not said anything because I am very anxious that the bill be voted on to-day in some form or another. The proposition that I have advanced is to strike from the House bill the dependent features of the bill. I think that the bill would be very much improved if the exception should be stricken out, for the reason that the hearings before the Senate committee disclosed the fact that a great many immigrants would come in under that provision.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to those facts, as it is upon them that I have offered the suggestion that I wish to have incorporated into the law in the form of a provision that will eliminate or exclude from the act all those relatives who might want to come in, and if we permit them to come in we will not reduce immigration materially from that which is now coming in.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIS. Before the Senator proceeds will he state briefly the substance of his amendment? I have been absent from the Chamber temporarily.

Mr. HARRISON. The substance of the first amendment that I am offering is one which I, as a member of the Committee on Immigration, favor over the substitute offered by the committee. In the bill that passed the House, known as the Johnson bill, there is an exception, so far as suspension is concerned, with reference to certain relatives who might come in. It is found on page 7, as follows:

Wife, parent, grandparent, unmarried son or brother under 21 years of age, unmarried or widowed daughter or sister, grandson under 16 years of age whose father is dead, or unmarried or widowed granddaughter whose father is dead.

The facts are these—and this is in the testimony of Mr. Husband, who appeared before the committee, and who, in my opinion, knows more about the immigration proposition almost than any man in the United States. At page 525 of the hearings he said, in speaking of this provision of the House bill:

These figures of the percentage of certain peoples who came to join relatives in 1920 will illustrate what I mean: Of the Dutch and Flemish, 74 per cent were going to join relatives.

Of the Dutch and Flemish in 1920 who entered here 74 per cent were going to join relatives. In other words, they would come in under the provision of the House bill which I have moved to strike out.

He then said that of the Irish, 75 per cent of those who came in 1920 came because they said they had relatives; of the Scandinavians, 63 per cent; of the Scotch, 67 per cent.

Then he went on further and said:

And you can, I think, very readily surmise that those people were not going to join relatives in the sense that they were dependent on those relatives. They were merely going where relatives were, for northern and western Europe immigration is very independent. It does not come until it knows what it is doing, and knows where it is going, and it comes to become a permanent part of the country.

Referring to Greeks that came in in 1920, do Senators have any idea of the percentage who came to the United States in that year claiming the right to enter because they said they had relatives here? Eighty-one per cent! Do Senators know how many Hebrews came into this country in 1920 because they said they had relatives here? Eighty-nine per cent! Do Senators know how many Italians came into the United States because they said they had relatives here? Ninety-four per cent!

So it is because of these facts and for these reasons that I have moved to strike from the House bill the dependent feature. I am for a real suspension for a definite period.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator speaks now of the per cent coming in who had relatives. Within what degree did they have such relatives?

Mr. HARRISON. The testimony of Mr. Husband did not show the degree, but under the House bill they take in almost every kind of a relative, six or seven different kinds. The information that the Senator desires was not given to us; we could not get it. If we want real suspension, and that is what I favor, I think, with all the reorganization going on over in Europe and with the abnormal conditions that now prevail throughout the world, we ought to suspend immigration for a definite period. If my amendment is agreed to as proposed to the House bill, and we can then vote down the substitute that is proposed by the Senate committee, we will get real suspension for the next 12 months.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course, the figures which the Senator has given include all relatives. That is pretty broad. That would let in an enormous quantity, as the Senator has shown by the figures given. But confining additions to the relatives within the degrees specified in the bill, it is even then very clear that the House bill would admit a very large number.

Mr. HARRISON. That is true.

Mr. SIMMONS. But not the percentages given by the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, no; but this is the best evidence I could give to the Senate on the proposition. The number would, however, be large.

Mr. SIMMONS. But it would probably admit a larger number than the amendment of the Senate committee would admit.

Mr. HARRISON. It might do that. It would probably admit a larger number from southern and eastern Europe than the amendment proposed as a substitute by the Senate committee.

We can afford, it seems to me, to apply a rule of suspension for a definite period. Senators have read of the typhus that came in one of the ships, where there were some 1,300 immigrants landed the other day in New York. I noticed in the New York Times of this morning that three of the typhus patients were found away up in Cortland, N. Y., which I think is some 100 miles out of New York City, though I do not know the exact distance. Those three came on the boat where all the other typhus cases were found.

It would seem to me at this time, due to so many different reasons, that we ought really to suspend immigration, and in the meanwhile we can work out some plan such as is suggested by the Senator from Vermont and incorporated in his substitute, or some other plan that might be wise and just and restrictive.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. On the question of typhus I have grown rather tired of newspaper comments placing the responsibility upon the Congress of the United States for the condition of which they are now complaining with respect to that disease. I wish to call attention to the fact that there is a statute now upon the books, which reads as follows:

That whenever it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the President that by reason of the existence of cholera or other infectious or contagious disease in a foreign country there is a serious danger of the introduction of the same into the United States and that notwithstanding the quarantine defense this danger is so increased by the introduction of persons or property from such country that a suspension of the right to introduce the same is demanded in the interest of the public health, the President shall have the power to prohibit, in whole or in part, the introduction of persons and property from such countries or places as he shall designate and for such period of time as he may deem necessary.

So that with the reports coming from the representatives of our Consular Service abroad, with the information possessed by the Public Health Service, with the information which comes from the Bureau of Labor, the whole responsibility is upon the President and the power is in his hands instantly to stop the immigration from the country where infectious diseases prevail.

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad the Senator has incorporated that statement in the RECORD, because the method of dealing with the typhus infection that is coming into the port of New York and restricting and preventing others who might have it is a most important question. I shall not take up the time of the Senate. I am very anxious that some legislation be passed by this Congress relative to this matter. If we can pass the bill as it came from the other House with the amendment I have proposed, or, if that amendment shall not be considered wise, in the opinion of the Senate, we can pass the original bill as it came from the other House, it can immediately go to the President and action will be insured at this time.

I desire to say as to the substitute reported by the Senate committee, although I did not vote for it, but only favored it as a last resort, there were four members of the committee out of nine, I think, who favored the Johnson bill, and if amended as I have suggested it would be a very wise measure.

I think if the Senate should adopt the Dillingham plan the percentage of admissions of immigrants as provided for is too high. We should reduce the percentage from 5 per cent to 1 per cent or 2 per cent, or at any rate make it not more than 3 per cent, thereby restricting immigration still further. However, when we reach that matter I expect, as I have suggested, to offer an amendment to make the basis of admission 1 per cent, and if that is not agreed to, to make it 2 per cent; and if that proposition is rejected, to make it 3 per cent, so that we may reduce immigration to that extent. I should prefer also that the percentage be based not upon the number of aliens who lived in this country according to the census of 1910, but upon the percentage of those persons who live here and who have become naturalized citizens of the United States.

So I shall also offer an amendment to carry out that idea. I hope we may get some legislation on this subject passed to-day, and I believe we can.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] suggested that it would be a hardship if, after we had admitted a foreigner to our shores, he should not be able to send for his wife, his children, or his grandfather, or his grandmother, or his grandchildren, and other relatives. I know it looks hard on those individuals, but when they come here they come for better or worse. They could have brought those relatives with them. They did not. If the alien is so anxious to be with his wife and his grandchildren and other relatives, he is still at liberty to go back to his native country. That is the way I feel about it. The Senator from Utah smiles. He disagrees with me. I am for restricting immigration; for its suspension absolutely and entirely for at least 10 months.

In yesterday's newspaper I read an item to the effect that Mr. Vierick, of the German-American Alliance, visited the President elect in Florida. Of course, Mr. Vierick and his crowd said that he visited the President elect at the invitation of President elect Harding. I do not believe the President elect and his advisers ever issued such an invitation, but it was given out that it was at the invitation of the incoming President. However, Vierick visited the President elect and made some 13 demands of him. Here they are:

1. That Americans of German birth should participate equally with their fellow citizens in the government of "our country."
2. Immediate peace with Germany and the rejection of the "infamous" peace of Versailles.
3. A protest against the French annexation of the "ancient German Provinces of Alsace-Lorraine."
4. Immediate withdrawal of the American forces from the occupied portions of Germany.
5. Condemnation of British action in Ireland as "in violation of the principles for which American blood was shed and American treasure lavished in defense of the British Empire during the World War."
6. Condemnation of the "attempt to embroil this country in a war with Japan for the benefit of Great Britain."
7. Repeal of the Panama Canal toll bill.
8. Opposition to entangling alliances, "especially any alliance with Great Britain."
9. Investigation of the Government handling of alien property is demanded.
10. The immediate release of Eugene V. Debs.
11. Attacks against citizens of German descent should be resented.
12. Prohibition is condemned as "a breeder of death, corruption, and contempt for the law."
13. A study of immigration "in a liberal spirit" was urged.

It is said that he wanted a German-American to be in the Cabinet of the incoming administration. I want to see in this country not German-Americans or Irish-Americans or Italian-Americans but plain Americans.

Mr. SMOOT. And everybody agrees with the Senator from Mississippi in that.

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad the Senator from Utah agrees with me.

It is stated in this newspaper article that in the conference of the President elect with Mr. Vierick a study of immigration in a liberal spirit was urged by Mr. Vierick, and attention was called to the fact by him that 6,000,000 German-Americans stood by him in the recent election. That is a bad situation to exist. We should deal with this question and let subjects of foreign nations know that when they come to this country they shall be Americans and not sympathize with other countries in disputes which may arise between America and other nations.

The hearings disclosed the fact, may I say to the Senator from Utah and other Senators, that certain countries in Europe, Germany and Rumania, for instance, are preparing a scheme to allow all former citizens of those countries who have emigrated to the United States to vote on great questions which may arise in Germany or Rumania. They want them to take part in questions which arise there.

I know, Mr. President, that the larger per cent of our foreign population is patriotic. They gave their sons in the late war to fight for our cause, and in every way they aided the country of their adoption. But, sirs, there were some who gave us trouble, and from the beginning to the end, and even now, are more interested in the country from which they came than in the land of their adoption.

It is an unhealthy political condition when any alien so far forgets himself to side with his mother country rather than to defend the cause of the country of his adoption.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I was of the opinion that the time had come when American citizens had ceased to participate in or to attempt to run the affairs of European Governments. During the last few years under the present administration we have had considerable experience with questions involving interference in the affairs of foreign Governments. I wish to call to the attention of the Senator from Mississippi, in all kindliness, of course, a fact that he seems not to realize, that some, if not all, of the foreign-born American citizens are just as loyal and just as patriotic as he and other Senators and other citizens are.

This is a great, broad question. In the entire western section of the country, Mr. President, there are millions of American citizens who would not, if they could, be anything but American citizens; but they have the right to cherish a friendly feeling for the people of the countries from whence their ancestors came. At the time when this Nation was in danger of being separated and made into two Governments, the citizens of foreign-born extraction never for a moment hesitated, but took the position that the United States is one undivided, indivisible union or country.

The Senator from Mississippi has referred to percentages, but those percentages do not mean very much. Of course, those who come to this country from foreign lands have relatives abroad, and if the Senator had stated that 100 per cent of those who come here from foreign lands left relatives behind, it would not have meant much nor would it have been very wide of the mark. In this connection I am reminded of a comparison by percentages made here a few years ago by the distinguished colleague of the Senator from Mississippi. In speaking of percentages, the distinguished senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], always interesting and always logical, stated that the increase in the Republican Party in Mississippi was about 1,000 per cent, but the junior Senator from Mississippi knows that that percentage did not mean a very large increase of the Republicans in Mississippi.

So, in the case of the immigration to which he has referred, the percentages mentioned by him may mean very little.

Mr. President, I was born on American soil, but my parents came from a foreign land, and I want to say to the Senator from Mississippi and to other Senators that no man has a right to challenge the patriotism and the loyalty of any American citizen because his ancestors came from a foreign land.

I am not here to defend all German-Americans, but I am here to defend the German-Americans who are citizens of my State. I will say without any fear of contradiction that they were among the first to go out and ask for contributions for purposes necessary to carry on the war; they were among the heaviest contributors themselves to the necessary funds, although, as we all know, the demands for money were many. In my county and in the townships in my county the heads of a great many committees and organizations engaged in that patriotic work were citizens, American citizens, if you please, of German blood. They were the first ones to go over the top.

No American citizen will defend the outrages perpetrated by the autocracy of Germany, but I had hoped, Mr. President, the time had come when American citizens of German parentage or origin who sent their sons, as we all did, across the ocean to fight the Great War are no longer to be humiliated because they are the descendants of Germans. I, for one, resent any attack upon anyone because he is a descendant of people who came from foreign lands.

I am somewhat surprised at the Senator from Mississippi. I know of no Senator who is more anxious to promote free and unlimited commerce and trade between nations than is the Senator from Mississippi; but now he seems to take a different position; he seems to want to lock the gates, to shut the doors, regardless of whether immigrants are of the desirable class or not.

Mr. President, I had not intended to say a word on this bill. I do not know whether or not the measure proposed by the Senate Committee on Immigration is perfect. I believe that it is much better than the House bill; but there is one thing of which I am certain, and that is that I never could vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

The Senator asked—I can not quote him verbatim, but in substance—if an immigrant had any family when he came to this country why did he not bring his family with him? I wish to say for the information of the Senator from Mississippi and other Senators that I can find several million American citizens of foreign birth or ancestry who came here alone. Why? Because they were too poor to bring their families with them; but they came here and worked until they were able to accumulate a sufficient amount of money to bring their families here.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the general practice.

Mr. GRONNA. As the Senator from Utah suggests, as a matter of fact, that is the general practice. I wish further to say that many of the sons and the daughters of those citizens are among the foremost citizens of this Nation. They have no apology to make because their parents or their grandparents at one time lived in a foreign land.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will not prevail, because, in my judgment, it would violate the principle set forth by the committee, that in a case of humanity it shall be left to the Secretary of Labor to say whether or not certain people shall be admitted into this country. I am not pleading for anyone, and especially I am not pleading for the people of the Scandinavian countries. More people are going back to the Scandinavian countries than are coming here, and if the conditions on the farm continue as they are to-day I fear that there will be more; and the reason why they are staying here is that they believe in this Government, and although they are not making profits they want to make their homes in the United States, because they believe in a republican form of government and they love this country and always are ready to defend the American flag.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, ever since I have been in the Senate I have been deeply interested in this question of immigration. Shortly after I came to the Senate, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who has just risen from his seat, knows, when we were considering an immigration bill I offered an amendment to that bill imposing the educational test. That amendment was adopted by the Senate, but was stricken out in conference. Subsequently, however, it was incorporated in the immigration laws of the country. That was shortly after this new immigration, so called, began very greatly to exceed the old type of immigration, when we began to feel that there was a real menace to the country from the influx of immigrants that were then pouring into this country in increasing numbers from south and eastern Europe. That influx had become, undoubtedly, a great menace when the war temporarily stopped this flood of immigration.

I do not believe that in the conditions we have now there is any ground for apprehension that during the next 6 or 8 or probably 12 months we are going to have any very great volume of immigration from Europe; and I say that in the face of the fact that during the first six months after the armistice the volume of immigration was nearly as great as it was before the war. This six months was a period of very great business activity in this country; but during the past few months, since the slowing down of industrial activities, this immigraton has been to a great extent checked. As the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] has stated, that simply follows the rule; and the volume of immigration since the Civil War has depended upon economic conditions here. Whenever business slackens and our industrial activities slow down, reducing wages and causing unemployment, this tide of immigration, especially from southern and eastern Europe, has correspondingly slowed down, which means that most of those who come here from those countries are influenced by economic consideration and in search of employment at better wages than obtain in their native countries, and not with a view of permanent citizenship.

As long as this period of depression through which we are going continues I entertain no serious apprehension of excessive immigration from Europe, especially from southern and eastern Europe. I am confirmed in this conclusion by the fact that the Italian Government, recognizing our situation and the public sentiment in this country against additional immigration at this time from that country, has issued a decree suspending further emigration from Italy to this country.

Notwithstanding this check upon European immigration, removing any serious danger of excessive and disastrous influx of this undesirable element from eastern and southern Europe, I am sure many more will come than we want and that good public policy requires stringent restriction and curtailment. I do not agree, however, to the contention that this drastic curtailment and restriction should be indiscriminately applied to all immigration from Europe.

Now, a study of the House bill and the Senate committee's substitute shows but little difference between them. In principle they are practically the same. They apply the same principle of exclusion, though the methods differ. I think that about as many immigrants will be entitled to admission under the House bill as under the Senate substitute.

The statistics that have been furnished us as to the number that will be entitled to come in under the Senate amendment and the number that will be entitled to come in under the House bill would be about the same; at least, the principle governing the matter is practically the same in the one bill as in the other—one based on percentage of nationals in this country and the other the relations of these nationals resident in the countries of emigration.

Mr. President, it has been disclosed in the discussions, and the statistics of the Government show it to be true, that approximately 60 per cent of our European immigration when they come here seek, and in normal times find, employment in the manufacturing industries of the country. I think the Senator from Vermont said a little while ago that certain investigations and surveys made under governmental direction showed that about 60 per cent of those employed in the manufacturing industries of this country are alien born.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. That, as I stated before, if the Senator please, relates to what the commission found in 37 of the largest industries of the country which they investigated.

Mr. SIMMONS. That includes both the old and the new immigration?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. In the case of the new immigration the percentage is much larger, is it not?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Very much larger.

Mr. SIMMONS. So I think it would be fair to say that if 60 per cent of all the employees in these factories are alien born, at least 75 per cent of the new immigration to this country seek and find employment in these industries.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think all the statistics show for a number of years that substantially 75 per cent of all that come into this country go to the cities or to the seats of the large industries.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; so we may expect 75 per cent of all the new immigration that comes to this country from eastern and southern Europe will either seek employment in these industries or settle in the already overcrowded cities of the country.

Mr. President, during the war, when immigration from Europe was practically suspended, when the demands of our own and of foreign Governments upon the mills and factories of this country necessitated a tremendous expansion in our manufacturing activities, in order to secure labor to compensate for the loss occasioned by this temporarily suspended European immigration and of their employees enlisted in the military or naval service, it became necessary to recruit from the rural districts of the country the large additional force needed to meet and successfully supply the great demands made upon them during the war period.

And it is further in evidence that these young men, the very flower of the rural sections of this country, having acquired a taste of city life and become accustomed to the work of the factory, show a decided indisposition to return to the farm. The sudden stagnation which has come upon our industries has thrown a large number of these young men out of employment. There is no present employment open to them in these industries. Now it is evident in these conditions that any additional immigration coming to this country for the purpose of obtaining employment in these industries can only get employment by further depriving those young men of employment.

Mr. President, it is clear in these conditions we do not need additional immigration of this class, and we are warranted, in my judgment, in going very far in the direction of excluding them, at least temporarily.

I think it would do no good, but that it might work great harm, to admit even the limited number of these undesirables that may come in either under the House bill or may come in under the Senate committee substitute.

But, Mr. President, there is another side to the question. While our industries are overstocked with men, while many of the boys who acquired places during the war which they now desire to keep must be discharged under the best conditions, there is a situation with reference to agriculture, created very largely by the fact that those boys left the farms and will not go back, to which I want to refer, and I want to call the attention of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] to what I am about to say. There is a situation upon the farms of this country that is pregnant with untold harm and disaster to the whole country unless it is remedied. There is a scarcity of labor on the farms.

It is said that no immigrants are coming here for the purpose of engaging in agriculture, because that is so unprofitable at this time.

Mr. President, the fact that agriculture was unprofitable last year because of the excessive prices we had to pay for labor and materials and the low prices we received for our products, does not at all argue that it will be unprofitable in the future, when those conditions no longer obtain. I believe we are rapidly adjusting ourselves to new conditions; that it will not be long before we are again upon a basis of prosperity. It will not come all at once, but it will undoubtedly soon begin, and the movement toward prosperous agricultural conditions will gradually grow, and be accelerated as time passes.

There is no reason to take a gloomy outlook as to the profits of agriculture in the future, in my judgment. I expect better than prewar prices and profits in agriculture, and I expect them to come with the next crop. I do not believe that the opposition to certain classes of immigration should militate against an immigrant who has the agricultural instinct, who has been trained upon the farm, and exclude one who otherwise would come to this country for the purpose of engaging in agriculture.

Mr. President, we have to get this additional farm labor from somewhere. If we can not get the labor to cultivate the land and crops, we will have not only a shortage of foodstuffs in the United States but our factories will be confronted with a shortage of raw materials, because after you have eliminated all the raw materials we imported from abroad, the factories of the United States in the last analysis must rely upon the farms, the forests, and the mines of America for the bulk of their raw material.

We are in great need of that labor upon the farms. As I said, we are not going to get it from the return to the farms of the boys who left them during the war and found employment in the cities and in the factories, which employment has proven more desirable and more attractive to them than their former employment upon the farms. These boys are not going back, and the question is, Where will we get the farm labor?

I think, Mr. President, that any policy with reference to immigration which would keep out the farming element represented in the old class of immigration which has heretofore come to us, and which will now come to us unless we close the gate against it, would be unwise and shortsighted. We need that class of immigrants, both as farmers and farm laborers.

Even in southern and eastern Europe there is a class of citizens, some of whom have in the past emigrated to this country every year, who make good farmers and farm laborers. For example, there is not a finer class of farmers anywhere than those from that section of northern Italy known as Lombardy. They make fine farmers and good citizens. The Italian farmer of southern Italy can not be said to be an undesirable citizen, because he is well trained, intelligent, and thrifty as a rule. The undesirable element I have been speaking about is composed of the riffraff of the city, that class of Italian labor that is nomadic, which distribute themselves over the earth wherever they can find the most lucrative employment and are as gregarious as the animals.

They are the element I say we do not want, and conditions here make it undesirable that we should have them.

I do not know how it may be with other Southern States, but while we are opposed to this class of immigration which all of us down there recognize as objectionable and as undesirable, and as people all over this country recognize as undesirable, in my section of the State we are very anxious to get good farmers, if we can, men who will come here for the purpose of engaging in farming, men who have been trained in that business. Whether they come from one section of Europe or another section of Europe, we are anxious to have them down South, and we need them; and unless we get them, Mr. President, it will spell disaster to the landowners and farmers of that section, because a large part of the land in cultivation in the South last year will not, and can not under present conditions, be cultivated this year.

Under all these circumstances, it seems to me the problem which presents itself is not one which can be solved by adoption of the principle involved either in the House bill or in the Senate substitute. Both exclude indiscriminately the desirable as well as the undesirable, except to a limited extent, without differentiation.

Circumstances do not call for that kind of legislation, in my judgment. What I do think the circumstances call for is a very rigid, strict policy of selection. Such a policy will solve the difficulty. It will keep out the undesirable class from southern and eastern Europe, or any other section the residents of which we do not desire as immigrants; and at the same time it will admit the class we need for the purpose of supplementing the requirements and the needs of the American farmer.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have already said in this debate, Mr. President, that I agree entirely with what the Senator says, that the question of selection and the question of distribution are two problems we have to solve within the next year. I am glad to know now that the Senator agrees with me, and I would be glad, if he has thought the matter out, to have him make a suggestion as to how that selection should be brought about.

Mr. SIMMONS. Neither the committee substitute nor the House bill apply the policy of selection at all; they ignore it, and as many of the objectionable elements can come in as of the desirable elements. I suggest the selective principle. The chairman of the committee asks me if I have any suggestions to make about the method. No, Mr. President; I have not, except that the selection ought to be of such a character as would admit the farming element, those who come for the purpose of engaging in farming, and those who actually stay for that purpose—for I would make that a condition—excluding those who come here just for the purpose of getting temporary or even permanent employment in our factories, already overcrowded. I do not know how that could be worked out. It is difficult to work it out, I concede.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The Senator of course will observe that the Senate committee plan in this particular case would operate to reduce the immigration of this class, which goes to the cities, from 735,000 to 235,000 a year; and, on the other hand, will permit all to come in from western Europe who desire to, and they are the class who distribute themselves over the country. To that extent it is selective in character.

Mr. SIMMONS. The suggestion I have to make is this. I have said and I believe it has been admitted both by the chairman of the committee and by the Senator from Vermont—it is admitted by both these distinguished Senators, who are members of the committee, one of them the chairman of the committee, that there is at present no real or very serious danger of any great influx of undesirable aliens during the next few months, for the reasons they have given, namely, the deterring economic conditions of this country and the action of the Italian Government in suspending immigration. Most of these undesirables are from Italy. Why, then, the necessity of forcing action upon this, as I think, ill-considered legislation, legislation that does not adjust itself to the real situation, that does not remedy the real evil, and fails to open the gate to the extent of admitting those whom we need at this time in order to supplement inadequate labor upon our farms. Both of the Senators admit that we need additional labor upon the farms.

We are going to have an extra session within less than a month. Why not let the matter remain over until then, rather than to enact something that is unsuited and unfitted and inappropriate to the conditions and the purpose in view, and if we await the extra session before acting we can then work out a bill based upon scientific principles, with a view of excluding the undesirable and at the same time admitting the desirable element. Why not do that? Of course, if the immigrants were coming in here in dangerously large numbers every day, then I would say that such emergency might justify and call for speedy action, but both of the distinguished Senators have admitted that such an emergency does not confront us.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, just a word in reply to the Senator from North Carolina. The question of new and constructive legislation resolves itself into the proposition that it will take time; it may take three months, it may take six months, and it may take a year. The imminent immigration problem is that there is a grave fear of a large influx of immigrants from Europe during the next six or nine months or during the next year. The country is impressed with the idea, there is no question about that, and it receives support from Mr. Caminetti, from the commissioner of immigration, Mr. Wallis, and from others who have visited Europe.

As I said this morning, when I look at the figures of those who have already come here, I do not share in those grave fears, although I say I am liable to be mistaken, but the country is entitled, until we can frame new legislation, to a large suspension of immigration. This is not for all time; it is a pure emergency bill.

With regard to selection, I wish to say to the Senator that it may not be a very difficult problem to solve. Selection must largely be at the source. It may be a matter of diplomatic regulation through the consuls and the immigration commissions of foreign countries. It may be a matter of immigration treaty. Where we come to the selective system and the system of distribution the whole problem practically resolves itself into the field of treaty legislation. Of course, we could say we might do it under the visé system. We could admit immigrants here conditionally under the visé system. We might say to Poland that we will admit 5,000 Poles, provided they will go to Kansas farms, but that is pretty difficult to enforce.

The whole problem of fundamental selection at the source and distribution here becomes one of cooperation between the United States and the nations of Europe, taking up each nation separately and letting each country supply the needs here. But that takes time. It is possible there may be diplomatic objections that might be thrown in the way.

We know the field upon which we are entering with regard to immigration, we know what we want to accomplish, and the only thing we have to do is to devise practical means. That can be done, but it will take time, and it will not relieve the present situation. I respect the public opinion of the country when I believe it to be a sound and sane public opinion. I say that war conditions in Europe, together with certain episodes at Ellis Island, have created the profound belief that immigration during the next year must be drastically restricted. Having reached that conclusion, whatever view I might entertain myself upon the question of facts as to the proof of flood, I agree entirely with those who support and indorse the present bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I favor restriction of immigration. I think either one of the bills proposed will accomplish the present purpose, provided the one reported by the Senate committee is amended with reference to the percentage and that percentage reduced. I would cheerfully vote for the House bill restricting immigration for 14 months, and I would also be very glad, indeed, to vote for the Senate substitute, provided the percentage provision is reduced to 3 per cent.

I think the whole country demands that there should be a restriction of immigration. I have thought so for many years. I voted, while a Member of the House, to pass an immigration bill a number of years ago over President Taft's veto, and afterwards over President Wilson's veto. I believe that we should not only further restrict immigration, but we should control immigration for a certain period after it comes into this country.

Mr. President, before the World War the tide of immigration from European countries, principally from Austria, Russia, and Italy, broke all records. Of course, during the war and for some months afterwards immigration was practically suspended, but in July of the present year it began in far greater numbers than ever before, and, while we have not the complete figures, the last half of 1920 will doubtless break all records. Our advices are that there are now all the way from two to eight million Poles ready and anxious to come, and are making a very desperate effort to get transportation over here. One report states that if a ship large enough to carry 3,000,000 people could be found, that that many Poles would take that first boat. Czechoslovakia and Italy are close behind in the numbers that are wild to come, and so, in a lesser degree, from every country in Europe, except Germany and Russia, with whom we have no diplomatic relations.

America has been greatly advertised in Europe during the past few years. Her feat in entering the war at the psychological moment and winning it, her prodigious loans of money, her prodigious expenditures in aid of the war, her furnishing of inconceivable supplies, both of foods and munitions, have gained for our country a reputation in Europe that makes everybody over there who can come want to come. They regard us as a land overflowing with riches, where all men are millionaires, where money grows on trees, where gold is to be found in the street and belongs to him who picks it up, where silver is as common as dirt, where wages are highest and where work is so light that it is not considered work, and where every man or woman is a law unto himself or herself. Of course, the war has done much to advertise us in this way, but agents of steamship companies since the war have done more to advertise us. Relatives in this country have also added fuel to the flames by their letters, and more especially by sending money to their relatives back home. It has been shown that practically all of the business of some of the banks in Poland is the contribution of American money to relatives sent by members of the family now in this country. Such banks are so overcrowded with those who come for the money that they are actually insanitary. The joint distribution committee, an American committee doing relief work among the Hebrews in Poland, distributes more than $1,000,000 per month of American money in that country alone. It is also shown that $100,000,000 a year is a conservative estimate of money sent to Poland from America through the mails, through the banks, and through the relief societies. This golden stream pouring into Poland from America makes practically every Pole wildly desirous of going to the country from which such marvelous wealth comes. Practically the same conditions exist in Czechoslovakia, in Italy, in Greece, and in a lesser degree all over Europe, except Germany and Russia, and would exist in Germany and Russia but for suspension of our diplomatic relations with those two countries.

In July there landed at Ellis Island, in New York, 55,000 immigrants; in August, 57,874; September, 70,052; October, 74,665. Those landing at other ports will increase the total 15 or 20 per cent. If this rate is kept up, those coming next year will amount to more than one million and a half. But they are increasing each month. It is true that nearly half that number each month goes back, but the number remaining is enormous. The agents of the steamship companies are very active. It is a most lucrative business for them. Agents of 17 companies told immigration officials in New York recently that they could bring 10,000,000 immigrants in one year's time. Of course, none of these statements take into consideration immigrants from Germany or Russia. No Germans or Russians are now coming in, because technically we are still at war with Germany; but should peace be declared, no doubt the number coming from war-ridden Germany and red-ridden Russia would be enormous.

Mr. President, there are a number of reasons why this stream of immigration should be stopped presently or restricted greatly in the future. I will name some of the most important.

First, because we have already a greater number of such foreigners in our country than we can assimilate and Americanize.

Second, because these immigrants congregate in the great centers of population, form their own colonies there, continue to speak their language there, hold on to their own manners and customs there, keep to their own standards of living there, which standards of living are very inferior to ours, cling to their Old World ideas, refuse to become Americanized or educated, and therefore they constitute alien groups in this country, separate and apart from our people, separate and apart from our institutions, separate and apart from our ideals, separate and apart from our language, habits, and thoughts and manner of living.

Third, because they will not have their children educated in American schools, if they can prevent it, or taught the English language, if they can prevent it.

Fourth, because when they come in such large numbers they bring in and retain many anarchistic, bolshevistic, and socialistic views, which constitute a constant menace to our Republic.

Fifth, because we already have probably 15,000,000 of these alien foreigners in our country. We should Americanize these before we should permit others in great numbers to be added to the total.

Sixth, because we already have a large number of unemployed in this country, and each additional immigrant will add directly or indirectly to that number.

Seventh, because practically very few of these people are tillers of the soil, and will not add to our productive resources.

Eighth, because unless we stop this tremendous influx of foreigners we place our own country in jeopardy to the same troubles of race and language and of social disorganization which has been the curse of Europe for so long.

Mr. President, just a little over a year ago the Committee on Education and Labor, of which I happen to be a member, was sent to western Pennsylvania, in and around Pittsburgh, to investigate the steel strike. What we saw there was an object lesson to many of us on the subject of immigration. My recollection is of one little town of western Pennsylvania which has 23,000 people. Two thousand of these can speak the English language; the other 21,000 are unable to speak the English language, and speak some twenty-odd different languages. These foreigners nearly all come from middle Europe. They have their own churches and schools—such as they had—but the English language is not taught or spoken in them. Large numbers of them can not read or write any language. I am told that many of them are good workmen; I am told that they are honest. They work principally in the steel mills, and it seems that they give satisfaction. They certainly receive, relatively speaking, very large wages, and but for the strike would, no doubt, have been satisfied and happy, relatively speaking. What was found at Monessen was found in a more or less degree—generally less degree, however—in each of the other towns we visited in that district. I believe each member of your committee returned to Washington feeling that steps should be immediately taken to Americanize these people, and we believe the best method to do this is to educate them and have them taught the English language. Until this is done we should greatly restrict our immigration. Unless we do, there is danger ahead for our institutions and our Government.

Mr. President, the question of restricting immigration is a difficult one. My sympathy goes out to the foreigner who is suffering from a tyrannical government or from a lack of government, or who is suffering from enormous burdens of taxation, or who is suffering from social or racial tyranny. It seems a pity that such a one could not come to America and enjoy the benefits of a real free Government. My sympathy also goes out to the foreigner who has already come to this country and become a citizen here, and who wants to send for his wife, or daughter, or mother, or father, or son, or near relative. It seems to be a tremendous hardship on a man not to permit these relatives to come in after he has become an American citizen, and yet, with the figures before us, I do not see how those of us who wish to perpetuate our Government and its institutions can do otherwise than to vote to place greater restrictions upon immigration. Mr. President, the Congress should at an early date prepare and pass a measure that will not only restrict immigration to a greater degree but that will permit us to choose the kind of immigrants that we will accept, thus securing a better class of people than we have been in the habit of getting.

Limitations should be made as to distribution. In other words, these immigrants should not be permitted to congregate in the great centers of population as they have been doing heretofore. They should be distributed in the various States and among all kinds of industries, including farming. I take it, we could well assimilate many good farmers from the old country, but we do not get them. Very few of the immigrants who come here ever become farmers. The most of them are merchants or workers in mills or factories. We should retain some kind of control over them for a period of years. We should certainly control their distribution and their avocations for a limited time before granting them rights of citizenship. We should also require them to learn our language, and we should have much severer tests about social and governmental beliefs than we now have. We should have greater educational qualifications. We might well require that they should have so much money or property before coming. In other words, we should make prospective citizenship in America the leading idea in our immigration laws.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, the question of immigration is a most important one and it is becoming increasingly difficult under the disturbed conditions of the world. I do not believe, however, that immigration should be absolutely prohibited, and I shall not vote for any sort of legislation looking to that end. I think immigration ought to be carefully restricted. It is much better that we should exercise more care about the selection of immigrants than that we should expend our time and money apprehending and deporting those whom we regard as undesirable. I have studied somewhat the amendment to the bill proposed by the Senate committee, and I think it well considered, its provisions are carefully drawn; it seems to be a scientific measure, and I am going to support it if there is made an amendment to reduce the proposed percentage of immigrants who may be allowed to come in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], which is to strike out section 4 of the House text of the bill.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I now wish to offer two amendments to the amendment, of which I previously gave notice. The first amendment is on page 12, line 22, before the words "per centum," to strike out the numeral "5" and to insert "1."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRISON. On page 12, in line 22, before the words "per centum," I now move to strike out "5" and insert "3."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I think the Senate should understand what will be the result of the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi. If the percentage of admission of immigrants were made 3 per cent, it would admit from southeastern Europe 153,000. Whether that is enough to add to the supply of labor for our building trades and to the common pick-and-shovel labor in this country the Senate must be the judge.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But the Senator must not lose sight of the fact that this provision is for only 12 months. As I understand the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, it is to reduce the percentage of admission from 5 per cent to 3 per cent.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. I now desire to offer another amendment to the amendment. On line 23, page 12, after the word "nationality" and before the word "resident," I move to insert the words "who are naturalized citizens of and."

Briefly, I will state that the amendment seeks to change the percentage by taking into consideration the question of naturalization. It bases the computation of the percentage on those who have become naturalized citizens of the United States according to the census of 1910.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I hope that amendment to the amendment will not be adopted, because, especially among those immigrants who come from eastern and southern Europe, those who become naturalized constitute only about 21 per cent, and one can see how few would be permitted to come in under the Senator's amendment. It would entirely destroy the provisions of the bill. For instance, from southern Europe it would permit only 27,000 to come in, instead of 150,000, which we have already agreed upon as being the proper number to come in. I am not sure that what the Senator proposes is not the basis that should be adopted in permanent legislation, but I think it would be fatal to the pending bill to adopt it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment reported by the committee.

The READING CLERK. In line 23, page 12, after the word "nationality," it is proposed to insert "who are naturalized citizens of and," so that if amended it will read "the number of foreign-born persons of such nationality who are naturalized citizens of and"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, immigration is a subject to which I have given some attention, with a view, I think, solely of arriving at a right conclusion in my own mind. Every Senator here recognizes the fact that this proposed legislation is temporary in character.

My distinguished friend from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] read a very beautiful statement which pointed out the debt which we owe to the foreign population of this country, and I indorse every word that he said in that behalf. I recognize that most of us do not have to go back very many generations to find that our own ancestors were foreign born. I can only go back on one side in my family four generations and on the other side of the family somewhat further.

This legislation is not brought forward in any spirit of prejudice against foreigners at all, but, as I conceive the situation, our duty is to America first.

The Department of Labor has pointed out that there are perhaps three and a half million men unemployed in the United States to-day. My guess is that if we could secure a complete survey of the situation in Europe we would find that, with those countries needing rehabilitation, as they do need it, the European Governments will be encouraging their best class of citizens to stay at home and they will be encouraging others to go abroad. When immigrants seek to enter our country we want the best that will come; we want those who will legally become American citizens; we want those who can be American citizens in spirit. My friend, the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], referred to the loyalty of American citizens of foreign extraction, and I indorse what he said in that behalf, so far as the very large majority of them is concerned.

Mr. President, thinking perhaps that I might get a little light on this subject I sent out a questionnaire to the chambers of commerce and to the central labor unions in every city in my State having a population of 10,000 or over, there being 50 such cities. With but perhaps one or two exceptions—I do not think there were more than that—nearly every one of these bodies insisted that there should be some restriction of foreign immigration at this time. Why? Largely because of the unemployment conditions that exist.

I have some of these figures as to unemployment before me, and, if the Senate will indulge me for just a few moments, I wish to call attention to a few of them. In the city of Akron, with a population probably of from 225,000 to 250,000, according to the Akron Merchants' Association, there were 20,000 unemployed in that city. In my home city of Canton, with a population of about 90,000 people, according to the Central Labor Union in that city, there were from 15,000 to 18,000 unemployed. The chamber of commerce estimated the number at 10,000 and the Ad-Craft Club of that city at 20,000.

In the city of Cincinnati the unemployed were estimated to number 35,000, and in the great metropolitan city of Cleveland, according to the Cleveland Association of Credit Men and the Cleveland Real Estate Board, there are 80,000 unemployed.

In the city of Columbus, according to the Columbus Federation of Labor, there are 15,000 unemployed; in the city of Dayton 25,000, according to the same source of information; in the city of Hamilton, from 2,500 to 3,500; in Lorain the estimates run from 600 to 2,400; in the city of Mansfield, according to the chamber of commerce, there were 4,000 unemployed; in the little city of Massillon there were 2,600 unemployed; in the city of Marietta, 1,500; in the little city of New Philadelphia the unemployed were estimated to be from 25 to 35 per cent; and in Niles the Central Labor Union estimates the percentage of unemployed to be from 40 to 50 per cent. In Piqua, according to the chamber of commerce, 1,000 are unemployed, or 30 per cent; in the city of Portsmouth, 5,000; in the city of Toledo the estimates furnished me were from 20,000 to 25,000; in the city of Youngstown the estimate was 24,000.

Mr. President, how is an American Congress to look at this question? Are we to think only of the past and take counsel of what has been our theory of government during the last century or shall we cast theories aside for the moment and take counsel of present industrial conditions?

I think I am humane enough to extend my sympathy to the unemployed and the wretched in all climes and of all races and of all nationalities; but, while my sympathy extends to the unfortunate everywhere, I can not lose sight of my duty to the great army of unemployed in this country. The only question in my mind has been what, if any, exceptions we should write into the pending bill.

I realize the seriousness of the situation. I realize what it means to keep members of a family separate the one from the other; but, Senators, we can not pass any legislation on any subject that will not perhaps be unjust to a small minority, and the best we can do is to approximate the truth and the right, and do what is going to be for the best interests of our country at large.

For that reason I have felt impelled to support legislation which has for its purpose the temporary restriction of immigration. Whether I shall vote for the House bill or for the Senate bill will depend largely upon the final form which these two bills shall assume before the final vote is cast.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, on page 15, line 1, I move to strike out the proviso, including all the balance of that paragraph. It is the proviso which permits the admission of aliens at the discretion of the Secretary of Labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 15, line 1, after the words "United States," it is proposed to strike out the colon and the following words:

And provided further, That in addition to the foregoing the Secretary of Labor may in individual cases admit aliens in excess of the maximum number when, in his opinion, such action is justifiable as a measure of humanity.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If this amendment is agreed to, as I hope it will be, to take care of what those who have brought in this bill claim is their object, I shall move to amend, on page 12, line 25, after the word "census," by inserting:

Provided, That preference shall be given to the wives and children of citizens or aliens now in this country who have applied for citizenship.

So that out of the per cent that we allow to come in the preference shall be given to the wives and children.

I hope that the Senator in charge of the bill will accept that amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, when that limited number had been admitted, what would become of the wives and children of the rest of the immigrants who were permitted to come in during that period before the maximum number was reached?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. They could not come; but I am quite sure the per cent to be allowed would take care of all that could come in under that provision; and if you leave it to the discretion of the Secretary of Labor you might as well write no bill at all, because an individual case spells nothing. Every immigrant that comes here is an individual case, and you leave it wide open to him to exercise his judgment in reference to every case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I believe the Senator ought to add the word "parents" to that, so that it will read, "wives, children, and parents."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Well, this really does not amount to anything. The amendment that I propose is really the present law.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, the committee accepts that amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I can not understand what the two amendments are. Evidently I got the wrong page. I got the first amendment, on page 15; but what was the second?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. On page 12, line 25, after the word "census," I propose to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That preference shall be given to the wives and children of citizens or aliens now in this country who have applied for citizenship.

Mr. BORAH. I understand it now.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, in the interest of certainty, and before the question is put, should not that be amended so as to make it specifically state "the census of 1910"?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That language occurs in the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. It does occur later; but I think, just from reading the first part of this, that it leaves it a little bit uncertain, and then the Senator's amendment follows.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; I think that would add to the clarity of it, and I am sure those in charge of the bill would not object to repeating the figures "1910" after the word "census," and I move that in conjunction with the amendment I have now offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Now, Mr. President, the second amendment is to insert, on page 12, line 25, after the word "census," the words "of 1910," and then the proviso that I have heretofore stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 12, line 25, after the word "census" and before the period, it is proposed to insert the words "of 1910" and the following proviso:

Provided, That preference shall be given to the wives and children of citizens or aliens now in this country who have applied for citizenship.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Now, the question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. This is the substitute, is it?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, are we voting now upon the substitute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We are considering the substitute, the amendment as amended.

Mr. LODGE. Has the substitution been made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been made.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not understand that we were voting on the committee substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We are voting on the committee substitute.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then I ask that the vote be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments have been made to the committee substitute.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask, then, has there been any change in the per cent?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; from five to three.

Mr. KING. May I inquire whether or not the Chair calls the committee report the substitute for the House bill, and whether these amendments have been tendered to the committee's substitute for the House bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; those amendments have been tendered to the substitute, and adopted as amendments to the substitute.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I was going to ask if there would be an opportunity yet to vote on the proposition to strike out all of the House bill. I want an opportunity to vote against the recommendation of the committee that the House text be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Washington that the question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is the committee amendment? The question will be, then, on agreeing to the committee amendment to strike out all of the House bill and substitute the other?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. And that will be divisible. I ask for a division of the question.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I take it that the Senator from Washington wants an opportunity to vote on the House bill as a substitute for the Senate bill. Is that it?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to vote for the House bill. I want to vote against the proposition of the Senate committee to strike out all of the House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hold in that event that the Senator should vote against the amendment, which will be the next vote.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want a vote squarely on the proposition of striking out all of the House bill, because if that is lost then I am going to vote for the committee substitute.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me it is very clear.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I simply ask for a division. I take it that the committee amendment is divisible. One part of it is to strike out all of the House bill, and the other part is to substitute. Now, I ask for a division of the amendment, so that we can have an opportunity to vote against the recommendation to strike out.

Mr. KELLOGG. We voted on that once.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not know that we had.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the question is not divisible. It is a motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There are certainly two propositions there.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will not the question come up in this way? Should not those who are in favor of substituting the Senate amendment vote "yea" and should not those who are against it and for the House bill vote "nay"?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put that question. The question now is on the Senate amendment or substitute as amended.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I desire to submit an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment of the Senator from California.

The reading clerk read as follows:

It is hereby declared that the act to amend the naturalization laws of the United States approved May 9, 1918, was intended to relate only to aliens eligible to citizenship under the then existing law.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, the amendment I have offered is a matter of extreme simplicity, and is couched in such language that it may not be misunderstood.

On April 12, 1918, the Senator from Georgia, Mr. Hardwick, reported from the Committee on Immigration a bill for the purpose of facilitating or hastening the naturalization of aliens who had enlisted in the Army of the United States. There was a brief debate. During the debate he said:

It is impossible, or at least it is unfair, to send these soldiers to the battle line in Europe until they have been naturalized and made citizens of this country, so that they will not be subjected to charges of treason against the Governments and princes of whom they were formerly subjects. The War Department is not willing to subject these men to that sort of danger. It is not fair to them and it is not just to the country. They are scattered practically through every command in the Army, or in the new draft Army, and it can not be moved as it ought to be moved until these soldiers can be put in a position where this difficulty will be eliminated.

The bill finally passed and was approved the following month, May 9, 1918, and the object for which it was presented has been subserved—that in every Army camp there were bureaus for the naturalization of these alien soldiers who were going to the front. Now, a rather extraordinary thing occurred. Certain orientals in the Hawaiian Territory under this act applied for citizenship, and Judge Vaughan, of the Federal court there, nobody objecting, granted, I am told, no less than 800 applications.

In certain other jurisdictions applications for naturalization have been granted to orientals who, under existing law, being neither free white persons nor persons of African descent, are ineligible for citizenship, so that what was merely intended by Congress as a means to facilitate the naturalization of aliens who were going to war to fight for this country has been turned by this easy process into an amplification or expansion of our naturalization laws so as to include those who are ineligible.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. PHELAN. Certainly.

Mr. KING. If the Government conceived that the opinion of Judge Vaughan was incorrect, and that the law did not permit the naturalization of the orientals referred to, why did it not appeal? I am just interested in knowing the facts. It seems to me the amendment of the Senator, if I understand it, calls upon Congress to perform a sort of judicial function, rather than to commit to the courts, which have the authority to pass upon these laws, the determination of the meaning to be ascribed to the law.

Mr. PHELAN. I would like to ask the Senator, who is a learned lawyer, how he would appeal from a decision by a Federal court granting naturalization?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think there is such a question involved here that it would be reviewable by a higher court, if the Government felt that the decision of the court was wrong; that it is subject to review.

Mr. PHELAN. Possibly the question might be raised; but I think an appeal might be had, and I am so advised, on the refusal of the court to grant such naturalization; and the district attorney, if so instructed, might take an appeal from the order denying it. However, that is purely technical.

We who are interested in the enforcement of this law are anxious to have a determination, but no case has been brought before the Supreme Court, and as the process is slow, I want Congress to restate its evident intent. I have communicated with the Department of Justice, and the Department of Justice, very much like the Department of State, proceeds with extreme caution in some matters, and this is one of the matters in which they have proceeded with extreme caution, not interpreting the act, but on February 8 last the Secretary of Labor, the Hon. W. B. Wilson, wrote me as follows, assuming very properly that noneligible aliens were not contemplated by the act:

"Your letter of the 1st instant to the Commissioner of Naturalization, with reference to the naturalization of subjects of Japan under the act of May 9, 1918, has been considered by the officer named and has been called to my personal attention by him.

"I note that you state that Judge Bledscoe had told you that one of the naturalization examiners requested favorable action on the case of the Japanese, and that the same thing happened in San Francisco and Honolulu. A report has this day been made of the chief naturalization examiner of San Francisco concerning this matter, and instructions have been given which will leave him in no doubt that it is the administrative view that Congress has made no provision for the naturalization of other than free white persons and persons of African nativity and descent, with the exception of the Filipinos referred to in the seventh subdivision of section 4 of the act of June 29, 1906, as amended by the act of May 9, 1918."

So the Department of Labor and its Bureau of Naturalization have agreed with this interpretation which my amendment would put upon the act, that the law was intended only for those who are eligible to citizenship and who had enlisted in the service of the United States, and the main purpose was to prevent them from being adjudged traitors should they be captured on the other side when fighting the battles of our country.

The evil that has grown from this is that a large number of Japanese, taking citizenship in this way, which is clearly irregular, and I believe will be declared of no validity should it ever reach the Supreme Court, granted this class of privilege of citizenship under an act where there is no real authority to grant it, came to the State of California, and have organized corporations, which, under our land law, may be organized only by citizens of the United States. They have organized those corporations for the purpose of acquiring our agricultural lands, although we have passed every known form of law to bar them. We have limited our corporations formed for the purchase of land to citizens of the United States, knowing that under the existing law it would be impossible for orientals to claim citizenship. But those thrifty people have, under a war measure of the United States, taken citizenship, and are organizing corporations to acquire land in violation of the letter and the spirit surely of the land laws of the State of California.

If my amendment is accepted by the gentlemen on the other side, it will cure this defect, and put an end to a practice of evading laws passed for the benefit of communities, by a resort to a mistaken interpretation of a Federal statute.

I desire to submit at the same time these letters, and the transcript of the record on this subject, for printing in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February, 1921.

Hon. JAMES D. PHELAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your letter of the 1st instant, to the Commissioner of Naturalization, with reference to the naturalization of subjects of Japan under the act of May 9, 1918, has been considered by the officer named and has been called to my personal attention by him.

I note that you state that Judge Bledscoe had told you that one of the naturalization examiners requested favorable action in the case of a Japanese, and that the same thing happened in San Francisco and Honolulu. A report has this day been made of the Chief Naturalization Examiner at San Francisco concerning this matter, and instructions have been given which will leave him in no doubt that is the administrative view that Congress has made no provision for the naturalization of other than free white persons and persons of African nativity and descent, with the exception of the Filipinos referred to in the seventh subdivision of section 4 of the act of June 29, 1906, as amended by the act of May 9, 1918.

It is the duty of the Naturalization Service to bring all facts to the attention of the court in any case pending before it, leaving the court, in whom alone is vested the power to authoritatively decide the question of the admissibility of any alien, to determine whether or not Congress has made provision for the naturalization of such an applicant.

Instructions have been given that in view of the conflict in the decisions regarding this subject every effort should be made to have some case carried to the Supreme Court for ultimate decision.

Very truly, yours,

W. B. WILSON, Secretary.

[Excerpt from CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 12, 1918, page 5009.]

NATURALIZATION OF ALIENS IN MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. HARDWICK. From the Committee on Immigration I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 3132) which I send to the desk, and I submit a report (No. 388) thereon. I wish to make a brief statement to the Senate about the bill after the Secretary reads the title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of New Mexico in the chair). The Senator from Georgia submits a report, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. Mr. HARDWICK, from the Committee on Immigration, reports favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 3132) to amend section 2171 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to naturalization.

Mr. HARDWICK. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill reported from the Committee on Immigration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall not object now, but I should like to hear the Senator make his statement before the question is put.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I was about to explain why it is necessary, in my judgment, that the Senate should proceed immediately to consider and pass this proposed legislation. We have in the first draft army of the United States 123,277 alien soldiers, some of whom undoubtedly might have claimed exemption but did not. Of these soldiers, 46,732 hold their first naturalization papers and 76,545 have no naturalization papers whatever.

It is impossible, or at least it is unfair, to send these soldiers to the battle line in Europe until they have been naturalized and made citizens of this country, so that they will not be subjected to charges of treason against the Governments and princes of whom they were formerly subjects. The War Department is not willing to subject these men to that sort of danger. It is not fair to them and it is not just to the country. They are scattered practically through every command in the Army, or in the new draft army, and it can not be moved as it ought to be moved until these soldiers can be put in a position where this difficulty will be eliminated.

Now, it seems to me that more important than any debate on any domestic question, more important than any dispute about labor, or more important than any bill about presidential powers over executive departments is a proposition to get the Army of the United States so that it can move to the battle line. This is the paramount reason why I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of this bill as amended by the Senate committee. It is to give the authorities of the country, the War Department and the Navy Department full power.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do.

Mr. THOMPSON. Are these the men who are already drafted into the service?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; they are soldiers wearing the uniform already.

Mr. THOMPSON. And already trained?

Mr. HARDWICK. There are 123,000 of them already trained, under the flag, and wearing the uniform, who can not justly be sent over to Europe until this legislation is passed.

Mr. THOMPSON. There ought not to be any debate on that question.

Mr. HARDWICK. No; there will not be. Now, in order to be fair, let me state that there is more than that involved in this legislation.

When the United States declared war, on April 6, 1917, of course, aliens who came from Germany—and subsequently, when we declared war against Austria-Hungary, the same thing was true with reference to that country—could no longer become naturalized in this country. They became alien enemies, so that petitions that had already been filed under the naturalized laws and were already pending in court could not be prosecuted to a successful conclusion in court. The House of Representatives, realizing the injustice of this, passed, some days ago, a bill which provided that where naturalization petitions were pending and the first papers had been taken out prior to the declaration of the war with these countries the court could allow these people to become naturalized upon proper showing of loyalty and good citizenship.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will be defeated. This is an immigration bill. It has nothing to do with naturalization. The subject of naturalization is entirely foreign to the purposes of this bill. The bill has one distinct object, to restrict immigration, especially from southern and eastern Europe. If we should attempt to amend this bill by raising in any form the so-called Japanese question, it would only lead to confusion, and might lead to the defeat of this emergency bill. I can only repeat that this amendment is entirely foreign to the purpose of this bill, and I trust it will be defeated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I will not ask for a division at this time. The amendment is opposed by the Senator in charge of the bill, and as the chairman has based his objection to the amendment only on the ground that a naturalization amendment is not germane to an immigration bill, I shall not press for a division.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment proposed by the committee. On page 12, strike out lines 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25, down to and including the word "census," and insert the language which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 12, strike out of the committee amendment lines 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25, and the amendment heretofore agreed to, down to and including the words "who have applied for citizenship," and insert the following:

SEC. 2. That except as otherwise provided in this act, from 60 days after the passage of this act, and until the expiration of the 14 months next after its passage, the immigration of aliens to the United States is prohibited, and during such time it shall not be lawful for any alien to enter the United States from any foreign port or place, or, having so entered, to remain within the United States.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I am favorable to the House provision making the restriction against immigration for the period of 14 months, instead of the proposed amendment of the committee, which permits immigration upon a percentage basis. Therefore I have moved to strike out the provision recommended by the committee, and to insert in lieu thereof the provision of the House bill, making a provision against immigration for 14 months. With the adoption of this amendment there would follow the provisos as recommended by the committee, which make certain exceptions to the general restriction against immigration. I do not think it is advisable at the present time to permit of immigration as suggested by the committee amendment, but that we should have this unqualified restriction, as was proposed by the House, with certain provisos, as suggested by the Senate committee. Therefore I offer this amendment to the amendment, and hope that it will be adopted.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, is it in order to move to strike out an amendment that has already been agreed to as in Committee of the Whole?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was unaware that this had been agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I got the impression from the Clerk's reading that a part of the amendment of the Senator from Florida was to strike out an amendment which had already been agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. It does do that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without a reconsideration of the amendment to the amendment heretofore adopted, this amendment to the amendment is not in order.

Mr. MCKELLAR. In order that we may have a vote on the straight issue of the House bill and the Senate committee bill, I ask unanimous consent that the vote be divided, so that we can vote first on whether or not we shall strike out the House bill; and, second, if it is stricken out, then we will vote on the Senate committee bill. There are some of us who would prefer the House bill, but we do not want to vote against the Senate committee bill unless we can get the House bill. I ask unanimous consent that the vote may be divided.

Mr. LODGE. I suppose the Senator is aware that the rule is absolute, that a motion to strike out and insert can not be divided.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I understand that, and for that reason I am asking unanimous consent.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I object.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Senators would gain time if they would permit the Senate to vote in this way. I do not see how they would lose anything by giving us an opportunity to do that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The question being to strike out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and to insert another bill, if a Senator is in favor of the House bill, why does he not express himself to his satisfaction when he votes against the motion to strike out the House bill and insert another?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Because he does not have an opportunity to express himself. He may want to vote against striking out the House bill, but if that should fail, he would want to vote for the substitute.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. True; but if the Senator votes against the committee recommendation to strike out the House bill and to insert another, and loses on that, then the question is on the passage of the bill as amended by the Senate, and the Senator can vote for that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We could have had a vote by this time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not object to unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know the Senator did not. I can see no reason why any Senator should object to it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, I am not a mind reader. Senators frequently object without giving any reason.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I appreciate that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not understand the proposition of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that we divide the vote to strike out the House bill and amend by inserting the Senate committee bill; that we first vote on whether we shall strike out the House bill, and, of course, if we vote to strike out the House bill, then the question would be on agreeing to the Senate committee amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand the Senator from Vermont will withdraw his objection.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from Vermont will withdraw his objection and allow a straight vote on the House provision.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I wish to say a word on the parliamentary situation. There is no real complexity. It is only an apparent complexity. In other words, there is only one amendment brought in by the committee, and that is to strike out all after the enacting clause in the House bill and to insert the Senate committee bill. As I said, there is no real complexity, but only an apparent complexity.

Mr. LODGE. The only complexity is that the rule forbids it.

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator, of course, to make that statement. I repeat, there is no real but only an apparent complexity in the parliamentary situation. The committee has brought in the House bill with but one amendment, in the nature of a substitute. The proponents of the amendment, before the motion to strike out is put, have the right to perfect the amendment. We must, in the very nature of things—we can not escape it—act upon the question of substituting the Senate committee language for the House language, and it is a parliamentary right which the proponents of the amendment have to perfect it before the motion to strike out can be put.

Mr. LODGE. That has been done.

Mr. ASHURST. I was informed that some Senator has objected to a vote on the motion to strike out.

Mr. LODGE. What is desired is to vote first on the motion to strike out and then on the motion to insert. The only perplexity is that the rule forbids it, and we propose to get rid of it by unanimous consent, to which I have no objection.

Mr. BORAH. What is the condition now of the House bill? Has the admission of dependents been eliminated?

Mr. LODGE. We did not eliminate it.

Mr. BORAH. Then I am ready to vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not going to be responsible for anything that happens. The question now by unanimous consent is, Shall the House bill be stricken out.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to know what we are voting on. I was sitting in the rear of the Chamber and did not clearly understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There has been a very peculiar procedure adopted here, for which the Chair is not responsible and will not guarantee what may happen. The Chair will rule when the time comes. Unanimous consent has been given to vote first on whether the House bill shall or shall not be stricken out.

Mr. CURTIS. Then a vote "yea" would be a vote to strike it out?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would.

Mr. CURTIS. And that would mean the adoption of the Senate substitute?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it does not mean any such thing.

Mr. CURTIS. The vote on that question will come later?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will rule on that when the time comes. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the roll will be called.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. CALDER's name was called). The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "yea" on this question.

Mr. DIAL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS], and I withhold my vote.

Mr. KIRBY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] on this question, but I understand he is opposed to the House bill. Not knowing exactly what the effect of the pending peculiar motion is going to be, I withhold my vote at this time.

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). In the absence of the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], with whom I am paired, I withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], who is absent this afternoon, but I have permission from him to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). Has the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. MOSES. I have a general pair with that Senator. In his absence I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote I would vote "yea."

Mr. POMERENE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. Not knowing how he would vote on this matter, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FERNALD. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair for to-day with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and let my vote stand.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], who has not voted. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]; and

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 19, as follows:

So the motion to strike out the House text was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I understood the idea of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] was not to strike out the entire House bill, but to strike out all after the enacting clause.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Of course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is not the way it was stated.

Mr. LODGE. That is the way it appears in the text.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The committee's recommendation was to strike out all after the enacting clause.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That was not the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. MCKELLAR. It was the usual motion to strike out and insert; that is all.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is quite right about the motion. It was, as is printed on every bill, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the part printed in italics.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not care what is printed on every bill; that was not the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But the Senator from Tennessee asked unanimous consent to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill?

Mr. MCKELLAR. No; to divide the question so as to vote first on striking out all after the enacting clause of the House bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, if the whole House bill is stricken out, there will be nothing for the Senate to act on.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Nobody is making any such request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, it will be understood that this vote is on the question of striking out all after the enacting clause. Then the question will be on the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. TRAMMELL. A parliamentary inquiry. I desire to perfect the amendment which was proposed by me a few moments ago, if it is in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is not now in order without reconsidering the vote by which the amendment was agreed to. The difficulty with the Senator's amendment is that it does not appear to make sense.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I ask unanimous consent for a reconsideration of the vote by virtue of which the amendment was adopted, for the purpose of proposing the amendment which I have heretofore sent to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. What is the request, Mr. President? I could not hear it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Chair may have the bill he will try to explain it. The bill as it now stands, with an amendment, reads as follows:

SEC. 2 That the number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted under existing statutes to the United States in any fiscal year shall be limited to 5 per cent of the number of foreign-born persons of such nationality resident in the United States as determined by the United States census of 1910: Provided, That preference shall be given to the wives and children of citizens or aliens now in this country who have applied for citizenship.

The Senator from Florida desires to strike out down to the word "census," in line 12.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is the bill before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole or is it in the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. What the Senator from Florida desires to do is to strike out down to the word "census," in line 12, so that the provision would then read in this way:

SEC. 2. Except as otherwise provided in this act, from 60 days after the passage of this act and until the expiration of 14 months next after its passage, the immigration of aliens to the United States is prohibited, and during such time it shall not be lawful for any alien to enter the United States from any foreign port or place, or, having so entered, to remain within the United States: Provided, That preference shall be given to the wives and children of citizens or aliens now in this country who have applied for citizenship.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, at the time I offered the amendment I was not aware of the fact that an amendment had been added to the bill including the last clause which has been quoted by the Chair. Of course, I desire to make the amendment cover the entire provision respecting the aliens who shall be permitted under the committee amendment to be admitted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator, then, desires to move to strike out——

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of order that that is an amendment to an amendment which has been amended and agreed to by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has just stated that there will have to be a reconsideration before any amendments may be offered.

Mr. LODGE. I understood the Chair so to state.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida is asking unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

Mr. LODGE. I understood that the Senator was moving to amend the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the Senator is asking unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, in order that he may offer an amendment perfecting it. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I object to that, Mr. President. I want a vote on the entire amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then that is the end of it. Now, the question is on agreeing to the Senate committee substitute as amended for the bill as it came from the other House.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The question is on agreeing to the Senate committee substitute?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the Senate substitute as amended.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIAL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement concerning my pair as on the previous roll call, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). Making the same announcement respecting my pair as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement concerning my pair as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. KIRBY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER]. I understand that, if present, he would vote as I intend to vote on this question. I therefore feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement as to my pair made on the last vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. POMERENE (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], I am advised that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote. I therefore feel privileged to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I am assured that my pair would vote "yea" on this question. As I intend to vote the same way, I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DIAL. I understand that if the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS], with whom I have a pair, were present he would vote "yea." I therefore feel at liberty to vote, as I intend to vote the same way. I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and vote "yea."

Mr. KNOX. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The result was announced—yeas 66, nays 0, as follows:

So the amendment of the committee as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment which is now before the Senate for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 12, it is proposed to strike out lines 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25 down to and including the words "who have applied for citizenship," and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

Except as otherwise provided in this act, from 60 days after the passage of this act, and until the expiration of 14 months next after its passage, the immigration of aliens to the United States is prohibited, and during such time it shall not be lawful for any alien to enter the United States from any foreign port or place, or, having so entered, to remain within the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I realize that the Senate is very anxious to get a vote shortly upon the pending bill, and I shall not therefore occupy more than a few moments.

My amendment proposes to restrict immigration for the period of 14 months, as contemplated by the House bill, subject to the exceptions and the provisos made by the Senate committee in the substitute which has been voted upon.

The question is whether we want to admit 3 per cent or whether we wish to exclude immigration for a period of 14 months. That is the simple, plain question that is raised by my amendment. If the amendment is adopted, immigration will be prohibited for 14 months, subject only to the exceptions suggested by the Senate committee.

I believe that the amendment should be adopted, and I offer it so that this question may be determined by the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am very anxious to cast one intelligent vote on this matter, and know how I am voting. Do I understand that the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Florida is again to substitute the House bill, with simply the exceptions that are placed there by the Senate committee's report?

Mr. TRAMMELL. That would be the effect of the amendment. The effect of the amendment would be to adopt a prohibition against immigration for 14 months, with such exceptions as are provided in the Senate committee report; and it would not permit of 3 per cent, as contemplated under the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I simply want to state my position on this bill.

In my judgment, the Congress is in this matter repeating its often-repeated blunder. It is alarmed by a condition which is not only temporary but greatly exaggerated. Exaggeration and excitement, always characteristic, have recently become violently epidemic. Let an alarm be sounded and newspapers immediately take it up; it goes from pen to pen and from mouth to mouth, increasing with each repetition in virulence and falsity, as does a neighborhood scandal. Soon everybody is swept off his feet. And so in this case the country has been led by excited propagandists to believe that our country is about to be overwhelmed by a countless horde of immigrants afflicted with incurable diseases and innoculated with the most vicious doctrines. Let me take just a moment to say that there has been no stage of American history when that same cry was not heard.

It was made against the Dutch when they came here and began to populate large portions of Pennsylvania; and even so wise a man as Benjamin Franklin, probably the wisest man this country has ever produced, declared, in substance, that the United States would be turned into a foreign province by the invading Dutch, and yet probably no better people ever lived anywhere than the Dutch immigrants and their descendants.

It was again declared when the Irish, in order to escape the intolerable conditions of their own country, fled to this land. They were denounced as ignorant paupers. Many, indeed, were unlettered, for education had been denied them. Their schools had been destroyed and their teachers had been persecuted, so that the schools of Ireland were held in the secret depths of the forest, and thus came to be known as "hedge schools." It was also true that the Irish immigrant was in many instances a pauper in appearance; frequently he had scarce clothing for his back. He cut but a sorry figure at first. He had to accept the most lowly occupations, and he did. Whereupon the hue and cry was raised against the Irish immigrant; against the Irish. Yet, sir, in America the sons and daughters of Ireland have written their names on every brilliant page of American history. The offspring of those who would have barred the Irish from our shores have found it very hard to keep pace with the descendants of the despised Irish immigrant.

Again the cry was raised when the tide of Bohemian immigration set in. There had been persecution and rebellion in Austria. Accordingly, the Slovaks for a time had come in great numbers. They arrived wearing their leather waistcoats and smoking their long pipes, their countenances grizzled with the agony of toil and plowed deep with the furrow of hardship. At once self-appointed custodians of America cried out against these immigrants and prophesied the destruction of our country. The immigrants survived. They adopted American customs. They melted almost insensibly into our civic and political life. The descendants of these Bohemians to-day take their place in the ranks of our citizens and keep pace with the best there is.

Similarly, a cry was raised against the Swedish, the Norwegian, and the Danish immigrants; yet there sit in this Chamber to-day two men, one a Norwegian and one a Dane by birth. They came as immigrants. One of these distinguished public servants told me that when he landed here he possessed but a single dollar. He probably could not have qualified for entrance under the present immigration laws.

Attacks have likewise been made upon the Jewish people who have crowded to our shores. The spirit of intolerance has been especially active as to them. At this hour a man possessed of a mighty fortune, yet so illiterate and ignorant that he does not know the history of our country, is instigating a propaganda against these people; but the Jew who came here, the victim of persecution and poverty, has nevertheless made his way in every avocation of life. At the bar and on the bench, in medicine, in art, in industry, in finance and science he has taken a high and honorable place. Those who would proscribe him are merely the advocates of medieval intolerance.

German immigrants came to this country in great numbers, and the same old cry was raised. Yet even at this hour, when the fogs of prejudice still hang thick in the skies of national opinion I do not hesitate to say that the German immigrants to this country have added a sturdy strain to the American blood.

And so the cry goes on and on and on by those who happen just now to be here: "Behold us, the great and the mighty! See how pure are the currents of our veins! Are they to be contaminated by these foul bloods from abroad?" Yet in their own arteries there flow the commingled bloods of the despised people of Europe—the same bloods you would bar to-day.

The proponents of this bill tell us we are about to be suddenly overwhelmed by a tidal wave of immigrants. A sort of a policy of know-nothingism is sweeping the country. It is the narrowest policy that ever cursed the soul of man. It is the policy of the gentleman who says, "I am the elect of God. I am specially ordained to preserve civilization. I alone have patriotism. Mine is the only soul capable of high aspiration. I have in my keeping the salvation and glory of the race and of the country."

But, sir, that has always been said, and it has always been said by those who fear competition more than those who are confident in their own greatness.

I have before my mind's eye a scene of not long ago. They were marching away, some of them volunteers, some of them drafted. But they were marching away all in the same brown uniform—the son of Ireland, with his blue eyes; the son of Scandinavia, with the flush of health in his cheeks; the son of Italy, whose warm clime had burned his face to a swarthy hue; the son of Scotland, with his clean limbs and his straight back; the son of Austria, with his big bones and double fists; the son of Germany, with his firm muscles and set jaw. Yet, as they marched away they were all Americans. Upon the battle field they bowed their backs and held their bayonets fixed and firm, they charged with indomitable hearts, they fought and died in the same heroic way for their flag and our flag, for their country and our country.

Who wants to keep them out? The man whose own ancestor perhaps landed here under more adverse circumstances; the man whose grandfather or great-grandfather happened to come a little earlier than the immigrant of to-day; some gentleman whose ancestor may have worked his way on a ship or came over a bound servant; the great-grandson, perhaps, of some man who bought his wife with long green tobacco upon the auction block. Who are these royal families of ours? They are the children of the oppressed lands of the earth. Their fathers came here barefooted or wearing wooden shoes, with homespun on their backs, with the weight of twenty centuries of oppression upon their souls. They came in ignorance and superstition. They burned old women as witches in Massachusetts. They drove Roger Williams into the wilderness. They set up the whipping post. They established the laws of Great Britain, with all their brutalities as well as their virtues.

And yet, in this free air, under these benign skies, with the star of hope shining in the zenith, they were shortly transformed into a wonderful people. Within a generation they became superb men and women. The common people of this land are better in blood, better in brawn, better in soul, and better in brain than the titled despots of the world; and yet you fear that a few more shall come!

If you had a reasonable bill, I would not oppose it. If you had a bill that temporarily put the brakes on to a reasonable extent, so that under the excitement of the hour there might not come so many people that we could not absorb them, I would not object; but when you talk of 5 per cent and 3 per cent of the people who are here, what kind of test is that?

If I had my way, I would establish in Europe courts or tribunals where the character of each emigrant could be examined, whereby we could become assured that he was sound in body, sound in mind, and sound in his principles, and then I would let him come. And every such man who came would be another man added to our man power; every soul that came would be a soul added to the aggregate soul of America; every heart that came would beat for our flag, and every hand would strike in its defense. This is a bill of proscription. It is as narrow as the Middle Ages. It is as obsolete as the spirit of the sixteenth century. It belongs to the time of the rack and thumbscrew, when the argument was the scaffold and when philosophy found expression in the torch of persecution. I decline to support such a bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. REED. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIAL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I shall on this question, and I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. KIRBY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], but I understand that he would vote as I intend to vote on the passage of the bill, and I feel privileged to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I made on the last vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], but as he would vote as I am about to vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], but I understand that on this question he would vote as I shall vote, and I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY], and he being absent, I transfer my pair to my colleague [Mr. KEYES] and vote "yea."

Mr. POMERENE (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], I understand that he would vote as I would do. I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HARRISON (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND. Making the same announcement that I made before, I vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] are in conference on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and that they are paired.

I also have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]; and

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

The result was announced—yeas 61, nays 2, not voting 33, as follows:

YEAS—61.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The title of the bill should be amended to read "An act to limit the immigration of aliens."

Mr. REED. I would suggest that the Senator, instead of making the title read "to limit," it should be made to read "to eliminate immigration."

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to limit the immigration of aliens."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. COLT, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. GORE conferees on the part of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HARRIS, Mr. GRONNA, and Mr. TOWNSEND addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield for a moment.

Mr. GRONNA. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 15812, the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HARRIS. For what purpose does the Senator wish to interrupt?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is the Senator addressing me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognized the Senator from Georgia, who yielded to the Senator from North Dakota, who made his motion, and now the Senator from Michigan asks the Senator from Georgia to yield to him.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understand the Chair does not propose to put the motion of the Senator from North Dakota now?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the Senator from Georgia has the floor.

NOMINATIONS OF GENERAL OFFICERS OF THE ARMY.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, since I have been a Member of the Senate I have not made a partisan question of anything pertaining to the Army or the Navy. As long as I remain in this body I shall not do so. I shall address the Senate this afternoon a few moments in behalf of a class of people of this country who have no political influence and who can not vote, but when the country was in danger of invasion these men led our brave boys to battle and were victorious.

Mr. President, a few days ago the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] moved that the Senate go into executive session in order that the nominations of general officers of the Army, made by the President at this session, might be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The other Army nominations from colonels down had been referred to the committee. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the leader of the Republican Party in the Senate, offered objection.

The Senator from Arkansas then appealed to the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and asked if he did not believe these nominations should be referred to his committee and given consideration during this session, to which the Senator from New York replied in the affirmative.

Mr. President, it is most unfortunate for the Senate, the Army, and the country when a Senator, the distinguished leader of the majority, injects the question of politics into the consideration of promotions of the men who have offered their lives and performed superb service for our country in time of war.

Recommendations for the advancement of officers to the grade of general officer are not influenced by their political convictions but are governed solely by their relative efficiency, as shown by their military records. As a matter of fact, the political conviction of any particular officer is rarely known to those who pass upon the matter.

As evidence tending to disprove that politics do enter into this question, it is interesting to note that the officers who have been nominated for appointment to the grade of general officer were appointed, not from any particular section of the United States, but from States scattered throughout the country, some of which are identified as adhering to one of the major political parties, while others as steadfastly follow the fortunes of the other. Thus, of these 47 officers 7 were appointed from Pennsylvania, 2 from Maine, 1 from New Hampshire, 2 from Massachusetts, 2 from New York, 2 from New Jersey, 2 from Virginia, 1 from Vermont, 1 from North Carolina, 1 from South Carolina, 1 from Alabama, 1 from Mississippi, 1 from Louisiana, 1 from Texas, 1 from Tennessee, 2 from Kentucky, 1 from West Virginia, 2 from Ohio, 2 from Indiana, 3 from Michigan, 2 from Wisconsin, 3 from Iowa, 2 from Missouri, 1 from Kansas, 1 from Nebraska, 1 from Oregon, and 1 from Arizona.

Now, with regard to the officers who pass upon these cases.

I doubt very much if the politics of the present Chief of Staff are known even to the Secretary of War. Gen. March was appointed to the United States Military Academy from the State of Pennsylvania. Who's Who in America states that one of his brothers was editor of the Philadelphia Press; another was at one time mayor of Easton, Pa., and I have heard that one of them was a candidate for nomination to Congress on the Republican ticket.

Gen. Wright, executive assistant to the Chief of Staff, was appointed from the State of New Jersey. Gens. Haan, Jervey, and Nolan, his other principal assistants, were appointed, respectively, from Indiana, South Carolina, and New York.

I have heard The Adjutant General state more than once that he does not know the political faith of his principal assistant, Gen. Kerr, or that of any other officer on duty in his office. The Army Register shows that Gen. Kerr was appointed from the State of Ohio, but whether he favored Harding or Cox is not known. Of the officers in charge of divisions of The Adjutant General's office, two were appointed each from the States of Texas and Ohio and one each from New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Florida, West Virginia, and Illinois.

Now, Mr. President, it is interesting to see how these nominations for general officers were made. Section 4 of the act of June 4, 1920, known as the Army reorganization act, says in part:

Provided, That major generals of the line shall be appointed from officers of the grade of brigadier general of the line, and brigadier generals of the line shall be appointed from officers of the grade of colonel of the line whose names are borne on an eligible list prepared annually by a board of not less than five general officers of the line not below the grade of major general: Provided further, That the first board convened after the passage of this act may place upon such eligible list any officer of the line of not less than 22 years' commissioned service.

Under this law the President can nominate for appointment as brigadier generals of the line only officers whose names are borne on an eligible list prepared by a board of general officers after a thorough investigation of the records of all officers in the service legally qualified for such appointment.

This board was composed of the following general officers: Maj. Gen. Hunter Liggett, Maj. Gen. Robert L. Bullard, Maj. Gen. Joseph T. Dickman, Maj. Gen. James G. Harbord, and Maj. Gen. Charles P. Summerall.

The following oath was administered to the members of that board by its president:

You, A. B., do swear (or affirm) that you will well and truly examine into and report on the matter now before you without partiality, favor, affection, prejudice, or hope of reward. So help you God.

The members of this board were among those who had most distinguished themselves in the World War.

Is there a Member of the Senate or any other person who will challenge the suitability of any member of this board?

The Secretary of War, at my request, has furnished me with a brief military record of each member of this board and of each of the general officers whose nominations are now before the Senate.

That was the first time the Secretary of War knew that I was interested in the matter. He does not know to-day that I am making a speech or even thought of making it. I shall not undertake to read them, because I realize that the very limited amount of time remaining to this session should be devoted, so far as is possible, to the consideration of appropriation measures. However, I request unanimous consent to place these data in the RECORD and thus make these records accessible to the Members of this body, who, I trust, will take advantage of the opportunity thus presented to acquaint themselves with the facts of each case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not know anything about these officers. If they are not worthy, and the Committee on Military Affairs will say so, I shall vote against them, but I think the committee ought to consider them.

All but three of the nominees for appointment as general officers of the line saw duty in the theater of war. These three officers were disappointed in their ambition to serve abroad because of the urgent need for their services here. Two of them commanded the two principal ports of embarkation during the greater part of the war period, and the third served as Chief of the Militia Bureau. At the signing of the armistice all three were in command of divisions which they had organized and were ready to sail for France.

It is also to be noted that, with the exception of three, all of the nominees for appointment to the grade of general officer were awarded distinguished service medals for exceptionally meritorious service during the war in positions of great responsibility. Of these three, one commanded successively a brigade, a division, and an army corps in France during the period from June 14, 1917, to October 16, 1918. He is nominated for appointment to the grade of major general of the line. The other two are nominees for appointment as brigadier general of the staff, and while both of them served through the war with great credit to themselves in their respective staff corps, the nature of their duties was, unfortunately, not such as to attract widespread attention.

With the exception of two officers—Maj. Gen. James W. McAndrew, who was Chief of Staff of the American Expeditionary Forces, and Maj. Gen. David C. Shanks, who commanded the port of embarkation of New York—all of the officers who were promoted from the grades of brigadier generals to major generals had been by Gen. Pershing assigned to command of corps on account of their efficient services in command of divisions. No officer of the American Expeditionary Forces who had not been selected by Gen. Pershing for especial distinction is on the list submitted by the President to the Senate.

Under the Constitution the promotion of all officers of the Army must be confirmed by the Senate. Ordinarily when the President sends in such nominations they are referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and this would have been the course followed in the pending nominations had not the senior Senator from Massachusetts, the majority leader, made objection.

Mr. President, let us consider the members of the Military Affairs Committee, to whom these nominations would be referred, and see if they are men who would allow politics or anything except their duty to influence them in their action on those nominations.

The chairman of this committee is the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], a man who has the respect and confidence of every Member of the Senate and of everyone who knows him. He volunteered and served with credit in the Spanish-American War.

So far as I am concerned, I would be willing to let the chairman of that committee say whether these general officers were efficient. I have that confidence in him.

The second member of the committee is the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], the eminent chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and for many years chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs; a gallant Federal soldier and the father-in-law of Gen. Pershing, the great officer who led our forces to victory in the World War.

Another member of the committee is the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], a Spanish-American War veteran and a distinguished leader in public life.

Continuing, the membership includes the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], who for the last few weeks has had the President elect as his guest. He is the fourth member of his family to honor this body as a Senator. Then there is the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], a prominent candidate for the Republican nomination for President, who made a national reputation as governor of the great State of California.

Another member of the majority side is the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], who has twice been a member of the Cabinet and has distinguished himself in these positions.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] was prominently mentioned for the vice presidential nomination on the Republican ticket.

Three other members are the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND], and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], all of whom have been honored time and again by their party and have reflected credit on themselves at all times.

It is interesting to note that among the majority members of the committee can be found the closest personal and political friends of the President elect. I have no doubt that Mr. Harding would seek the counsel of these very men in considering these nominations.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is the ranking Democrat on the committee. He was formerly chairman, and has been known and honored as a fair, broad-minded man, and not a partisan—so much so that he was twice elected to the Senate in a normally Republican State. Other Democratic members of the committee are the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. They are held in the highest esteem by every Member of the Senate regardless of party lines.

There is not a Senator on the other side of the Chamber who will say that the Democratic members are not men who will do their full duty without regard to party in such matters. The Republican members of the committee are certainly strong in allegiance to their party, and most assuredly they could be depended upon to see that no nominations were recommended by the committee for confirmation which are not worthy.

Mr. President, I think it is a reflection on the members of this committee and the Senate, a majority of whom are Republicans, and a reflection on the distinguished officers who made these recommendations or prepared the eligible list, to decline to allow the members of this committee and the Senate to pass on these nominations. Not one of these officers nor any of their friends has mentioned this matter to me, neither have they communicated with me either directly or indirectly. I did not even recall the names of the officers nominated. Not one of them is from the State I have the honor of representing.

I want to say, Mr. President, that I am not afraid of the President elect allowing politics to influence him in the nomination of officers of the Army and Navy, and in this respect I believe he will carry out the policy of President Wilson. I want to remind the Senate that when the nomination of Brig. Gen. Noble was before this body there were Republican Senators who did not join other members of their party in making that a partisan question, and President elect Harding was one of them.

Mr. President, it is well known that during the Civil War there were numerous political appointments made in each of the opposing armies. This was also true in the Spanish-American War, but there is no man who can point to a single political appointment among the commissioned officers of the Army during the last war. There was none.

I think it will be conceded that President Wilson knows the history of this country, which shows that practically every war has produced a military leader who has later become President. President Wilson doubtless realized that the officer appointed commander in chief of the American Expeditionary Forces would become a prominent figure in our national affairs after the war, but he did not consider politics in making his selection of that splendid leader when he nominated Gen. John J. Pershing, a son-in-law of the distinguished Republican Senator from Wyoming, who is one of the broadest minded and best men in public life today. President Wilson thought only of the man whom officers of the Army recommended as best fitted to lead our soldiers to victory in the greatest war the world has ever known. He nominated Gen. Pershing. The wonderful record of the Army made under that great commander shows that the President made no mistake in his selection. I do not believe there is a Senator who would say that the President's selection of Gen. Pershing or any other officer was in any way influenced by politics. So far as I know, officers of the Army have no politics. I personally know that some of the most influential men in the Democratic Party tried to get special consideration for officers in whom they were interested by urging that they be sent to France at the beginning of the war.

All of the officers wanted to be among the first to go, but the President turned a deaf ear to their pleas.

The Senator from Massachusetts gave as a reason for not allowing the Military Affairs Committee to consider the nominations of the President the fact that former President Roosevelt and Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood were not allowed to go to France.

Mr. President, it so happened that the people of my State felt a great interest in both of these splendid Americans, and they would like to have seen them given every possible recognition. President Roosevelt's mother was a Georgian, and her family is honored in our State. Gen. Wood, as a young Army officer, was stationed at Fort McPherson, near Atlanta, Ga., and took a great interest in the Georgia School of Technology, which is a splendid institution and the pride of our State. Gen. Wood is very popular with our people, and there is a hospital at Augusta, Ga., named in his honor. But, Mr. President, Gen. Wood and the late Theodore Roosevelt and their great records of service have nothing whatever to do with the question of fitness of these general officers for the positions to which they have been nominated. I believe if Theodore Roosevelt could speak to-day he would say to the Senate that the names of these men should be considered on their merits; that they had all performed great service in the World War; and that they are entitled to confirmation by this body.

Mr. President, no man was more opposed to President Wilson than was Theodore Roosevelt, but in spite of those differences that brave fighter would not have raised his hand against a man who lay almost at death's door. We know President Wilson's condition since September a year ago, and nothing that the Senator from Massachusetts intimates or any other Senator says or does now, at the closing days of his term of office, will affect the record and administration of President Wilson. It is already made.

I have differed with the President several times since I have been a Member of this body, and it has been a deep regret that I have felt it my duty on some occasions to vote to override his veto. But now, just as the President is concluding his term of office, the insinuation concerning these Army nominations is, I think, unjust. While failure to consider these nominations would not injure the record of President Wilson, I do not believe it would redound to the benefit of his opponents.

Gen. Dawes, who was chief purchasing officer of the American Expeditionary Forces, recently stated in his testimony before the House committee investigating the sale of war material in France that the men who had conducted this war will go down in history as great men, while the men who are criticizing it will be forgotten. So it is with President Wilson. History will, in my judgment, point to our part in the World War as the greatest achievement of this country, and Woodrow Wilson will be remembered, like Washington and Lincoln, as our leader in time of trying battle and glorious victory, while his detractors will be forgotten. His great ability is conceded even by his bitterest political opponent, and I confidently predict that posterity will accord to him a place in the front rank of the world's truly great men not only of this generation but of all time.

Mr. President, it has only been a few years since we heard in this body Senators criticize the great and good McKinley, but as the years go by McKinley is more and more beloved, while those who criticized him have been forgotten. So it will be with President Wilson.

Mr. President, it is recognized by all that there is great unrest, not only in our own country but throughout the entire world. There are great problems to be solved, and this can and should be done without partisan spirit.

The Democratic Members of this body fully realize that soon a Republican administration takes charge. We have no favors to ask, but are here to assist in the reconstruction of the resources of our country, and we hope that our labors will serve to help the majority party in solving the problems which present themselves.

Mr. President, a majority of the people of Georgia did not vote for Warren G. Harding for President. I stated in an interview the day after his election that while he was not my candidate he would be my President, and that I would cooperate with him in every way that I could, a statement which met with the approval of the people of my State.

Aside from the injustice to these general officers, all of whom rendered distinguished service in the World War, the failure of the Senate to confirm any of them will work a hardship on other officers in grades from colonel down to first lieutenant by causing their reduction to lower grades. In this connection, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks an article from the Army and Navy Journal of February 12, 1921, about this matter. I hope Senators will give it consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From the Army and Navy Journal.]

GENERAL OFFICERS' NONCONFIRMATION—ITS EFFECT UPON THE SEVERAL GRADES.

Steps have been taken in the War Department to overcome the situation which would ordinarily ensue in the return to their former grades of the officers of the Army appointed to the rank of general officer in the event of nonconfirmation of their nominations by the Senate. It is conceded that these officers will not be confirmed at the present session, so there was necessity of making vacancies for them in the grades to which they will revert. The appointment of the first officer to be a brigadier general was on July 16, 1920. It is now arranged that officers promoted to the grade of colonel and lieutenant colonel subsequent to that date will be renominated with later date of rank. This will result in the demotion of 21 junior colonels to the grade of lieutenant colonel and of 22 junior lieutenant colonels to the grade of major. The grade of major is not affected for the reason that nominations to fill vacancies as late as July 16, 1920, had not been made. The date of rank of all officers promoted as of July 16, 1920, or subsequent to that date, will be changed by nonconfirmation of the general officers, because the vacancy created by the appointment of a brigadier general exists as of date of acceptance of the appointment and not as of the date of the appointment. The dates of all casual vacancies which occurred on or after July 16, 1920, will be changed to a later date, with the exception of that of one colonel. The vacancy which this colonel will fill occurred on July 16, 1920, but not because of the appointment of a general officer, and therefore was not affected by the general officer appointments.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts has a long record of public service, and I appeal to him to lay aside partisanship for the time being and let us work together over the national problems that confront us.

APPENDIX.

MEMBERS OF THE BOARD OF GENERAL OFFICERS THAT PREPARED THE LIST OF COLONELS ELIGIBLE FOR APPOINTMENT TO THE GRADE OF BRIGADIER GENERAL.

HUNTER LIGGETT.

Born in Pennsylvania. Appointed from Pennsylvania. Cadet, Military Academy, July 1, 1875. Second lieutenant, Fifth Infantry, June 13, 1879. Graduate Army War College, 1910.

General Staff: August 16, 1910, to April 6, 1912.

Campaigns prior to 1917: In Cuban campaign, 1898. In Philippine insurrection, 1899 to 1902.

World War service: Commanding Philippine Department, Manila, P. I., April 6, 1917, to April 15, 1917; en route to and commanding Western Department, San Francisco, Calif., September 11, 1917; en route to France October to December, 1917; special duty commanding First Army Corps to July, 1918; commanding First Army to November 11, 1918.

Awarded distinguished service medal: "For exceptionally meritorious and distinguished services as commander of the First Army of the American Expeditionary Forces. He commanded the First Corps and perfected its organization under difficult conditions of early service in France, engaged in active operations in reduction of the Marne salient and of the St. Mihiel salient, and participated in the actions in the Forest of Argonne. He was in command of the First Army when German resistance was shattered west of the Meuse."

ROBERT L. BULLARD.

Born in Alabama. Appointed from Alabama. Cadet, Military Academy, July 1, 1881. Second lieutenant, Tenth Infantry, June 14, 1885. Graduate Army War College, 1912.

Awarded distinguished service cross: "For extraordinary heroism in action near Ferme de la Madeleine, France, October 14, 1918. Although almost exhausted from 48 hours of continuous duty, without rest of any kind, Gen. Sladen, upon learning that the front line was held up by enemy machine-gun fire, proceeded to the advanced position through 3 kilometers of severe artillery fire. Upon arrival he found that the battalion commander had been killed and the unit badly disorganized and intermingled. He personally reorganized the troops under the terrific machine-gun and shell fire, reconnoitered the enemy's positions, and launched the advance anew."

Awarded distinguished service medal: "For exceptionally meritorious and distinguished services. While commanding the Fifth Infantry Brigade in the Battle of the Marne in July and in the Argonne operations in France in October, 1918, he demonstrated conspicuous qualities of ability and leadership."

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS IN FLORIDA.

Mr. GRONNA rose.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am in favor of taking up the Agricultural appropriation bill, and I now rise simply to ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Florida Metropolis, dealing with the subject of an erroneous publication regarding economic conditions throughout the country, which unjustly reflects upon Florida.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"PRESS OF FLORIDA CAN RENDER REAL SERVICE.

"Protesting against the unwarranted and insidious attack on Florida's economic condition in the latest edition of the Literary Digest, W. B. Powell, secretary of the Lake County Chamber of Commerce, in a letter to the Metropolis states facts that could not be made clearer by any editorial writer in the country.

"The letter follows:

"'The Literary Digest of February 12, 1921, has a lengthy lead article on conditions throughout the United States.

"'The only reference to Florida is in the body of the story, which says "Tampa reports growing amazingly fast."

"'Every State in the Union is represented except Florida.

"'Yet on page 11 the Digest prints a chart from the Chicago Tribune, which hates Florida and the South worse than the devil hates holy water, which shows Florida a black blot, with key to effect "A whole State in black because of extreme depression, etc."

"'This lie should not be allowed to be circulated undisputed.

"'Florida is the one exception in the whole United States of progress and prosperity. Florida never has called upon the rest of the world in time of any calamity—the world has never passed the hat to assist Florida. When clearing-house certificates were issued some years ago Florida never printed any until forced to do so by banking interests, and it is doubtful if $1,000 of this currency ever passed current and none in circulation—a few pieces were bought as souvenirs.

"'Florida shows prosperity in hotels, in boarding houses, in stores, in wholesale houses, on farms and groves, in banks, and there is not a community in the whole State that has cried calamity. On the contrary, we have given work to tens of thousands of laborers and artisans from the North who swooped down upon us in flivvers and silk shirts begging for something to tide them over the winter, as they were thrown out of employment in the North.

"'This last attack on Florida again proves the need of the Florida development board, an organization that alone can combat these insidious attacks, provided the State supports it as a unit.'

"Mr. Powell hit the nail on the head in this statement of facts. He is in a position to know the details of the situation and Florida is as familiar to him as the contents of a popular book. Being aware of this, the Metropolis thought that the use of his letter as an editorial would add emphasis to our protest of Tuesday against this article which was given so much prominence in the Literary Digest.

"The Metropolis is of the opinion that the press of the State can render valuable service in proving the fallacious statements made in this article by the editors throughout the State using their ink to advantage in reviewing conditions in their immediate localities, and a general compilation can be made of these and distributed broadcast, which perhaps can be done best by the various chambers of commerce and boards of trade.

"Florida refuses to be recognized by anything that the Chicago Tribune might say. This, however, is not the point. The Literary Digest is a nationally read publication, and it carries weight in the business circles of the Nation. For this reason it is the duty of those interested in the welfare of this State to see to it that Florida is given credit for her real financial and economic status.

"Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of their State."

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the instructions of the Senate.

Mr. FALL, Mr. KIRBY, and Mr. POINDEXTER entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

PAYMENTS DUE TO RAILROAD COMPANIES.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have been very much in favor of considering the appropriation bills. They will be considered. I tried to secure consideration for them when we were spending days and weeks on the tariff bill, which all of us knew could not become a law at this session of Congress. I realize that there are some matters of legislation which must be attended to at this session, or else irretrievable injury is going to be the result. That injury can not be cured by a resolution carrying the matter over for the session into the next Congress; but there are certain imminent matters which I believe the great majority of the Senate are in favor of considering. One of those, and the one that in my judgment ought to be considered now, is the so-called partial payment bill, authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay on the certificates made by the Interstate Commerce Commission showing certain amounts positively due the railroads under the guaranty of the Government. These amounts aggregate about $600,000,000.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is less the amount of about $250,000,000 that has already been paid.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am talking about what is due now.

Mr. KELLOGG. No; there is about $350,000,000 due now.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am much obliged to the Senator for calling my attention to that. There is about $350,000,000 due now; $250,000,000 has been paid. I stand corrected by the Senator from Minnesota. This amount is due under contract with the Government, under acknowledged liability by the Government and the amount has been appropriated by Congress. The money is in the Treasury and can not be used for any other purpose.

The railroads of the country have been purchasing supplies for the operation of their roads and have naturally accumulated a large debt, which can be paid only when the Government pays what it without dispute owes the carriers.

The Committee on Interstate Commerce have had long hearings on this subject, and we have determined upon an amendment to the transportation act of 1920 which is advocated by the Interstate Commerce Commission and approved by the railroads, and, as I understand, meets with no informed opposition. Under that act we had supposed, at least, that Congress had provided for the payment of the sums due in installments. When it was determined that a certain amount was actually due to the railroads, it was supposed that the Interstate Commerce Commission could make a certificate to that effect and it would be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury. It turned out, however, that the Secretary of the Treasury submitted this question to the Comptroller of the Treasury, and he advised that no payments could be made to the railroads of any amount, except in final settlement. That is the ruling to-day; and many of these settlements, from the very nature of things, can not be completed entirely for possibly several years.

Your committee therefore, as I said a moment ago, reported a bill which authorized and directed the Secretary of the Treasury to pay such amounts as the Interstate Commerce Commission determined were actually due. Now, not only are the railroads embarrassed—indeed, that is hardly the greatest thing that is to be considered here—but the concerns with which the railroads have been doing business can not carry their accounts any longer. Some of them are behind in payments more than five months, and some of these concerns themselves are threatened with bankruptcy. There is certainly but one alternative for them to take, and that is to cease supplying the railroads with coal and other material. That will still more embarrass the railroads. I say to you, Mr. President, in all candor, I believe that many of these railroads, especially the weaker lines, are threatened with bankruptcy unless they can obtain the money due them from the United States and needed for their operation. Their credit has already been extended to the limit.

Your committee believes that there is no question about the obligation of the United States; but we provide that the amounts must be determined as certainly due, and the Interstate Commerce Commission is seeing to it that the full payment is not made to the railroads, but that a certain amount is reserved to meet, under all circumstances, any possible contingencies as to balances in the future.

Mr. President, this is briefly the situation. That it is serious no one who has investigated it can deny, and your committee has provided this bill as an emergency measure. It is emergent. There remain now 13 days in this session, of which two are Sundays; so there are 11 days, counting the 4th of March, in which the Congress can act. I understand that there is to be some opposition to the bill on the floor of the Senate. The senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has offered an amendment to the bill. Two resolutions have been offered, and are now on the table, providing for information, much of which is already being obtained by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and some of which was in the possession of your committee; but if the resolutions should be agreed to, they would be an excuse, at least, for postponing action in the Senate upon a bill which has already passed the House; and, by the way, this bill is identical with the House bill, and if it is not amended it is ready to go to the President as soon as it is passed here.

I repeat that the time is limited. If it should so happen that we could not get a vote on this bill before Tuesday night, or not later than Tuesday night, it could then go to the President, and if he should feel inclined to veto it after he had taken his full time limit, it would then be too late for the Senate to act upon his veto.

No one dislikes more than I do to interfere with an appropriation bill, but I have an illustrious precedent for doing this.

When I was urging, during the time that the tariff bill was being considered, that the Post Office appropriation bill come before the Senate, Senators who are now favoring this bill opposed me and held the tariff bill before the Senate to the exclusion of appropriation bills. I am urging the consideration of the partial payment bill now, however, in order that the one or two Senators who may be opposed to it may have an opportunity to present their opposition and with no possibility of their opposition being able to defeat the bill.

I am very anxious that the Senate shall hold longer sessions. I have been urged not to press this matter to-night. Every time a suggestion of a night session is made a postponement is urged; but I would not feel, under the circumstances, like continuing the session late to-night. I would like, however, to get the bill before the Senate now. Then I will ask unanimous consent to fix a date not later than Tuesday, and hour Tuesday—Tuesday at midnight, if you please; any time—to have a vote upon it. Thus we will dispose of it without undue delay; but I feel that I would be derelict in my duty if I did not urge the importance of this measure upon the attention of the Senate at this moment. Later action may be too late. The Agricultural appropriation bill will be passed this session. No Senator has the disposition to defeat it. The partial payment bill is opposed by one, possibly two or three Senators only, but they can at this stage of the session prevent its passage unless immediate action is taken and the measure brought before the Senate.

I take it that Senators generally are well informed as to the facts about which I am talking. The matter is a serious one. There will be no improper settlements with the railroads. The rights of the Government will be protected. This money which is needed now in the operation of the railroads and without which they will be greatly embarrassed, as well as their creditors, belongs to them and we should take action, and do it now. A vote can not be delayed in the Senate any later than Tuesday if we are expecting to get the bill back to the Senate in case it is necessary for it to come back.

The great majority of the Senate—at least, I have been so informed—are in favor of this proposition. Not to exceed three or four Members of the Senate, if I have been correctly informed, oppose it. The House has passed it overwhelmingly. Am I doing wrong, therefore, in urging its consideration at this time?

It is unfortunate, perhaps, that we can not get a vote directly upon the motion to take it up, but under the rules I can not move to substitute this bill for the one which has been proposed. I know that Senators do not like to vote against taking up the Agricultural appropriation bill; but if it is necessary in order to get consideration of this measure to do so, then they must do so. Their action will not defeat the bill of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. President, I do not care to occupy the time of the Senate with longer discussion of the measure. I am very sorry that we have not a full Senate here to vote upon the Senator's motion, because it is so serious that I think everybody ought to participate. The vote, of course, is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] to take up the Agricultural appropriation bill. If that fails, I shall move to take up the bill I have been discussing.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15812) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time, he said:

Mr. President, if it is the desire of the Senate not to continue the session any longer this evening, with the understanding that I may continue and conclude my remarks on Monday, I have no objection to moving that the Senate take a recess at this time.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

[Mr. GRONNA's speech will be published entire after it shall have been concluded.]

A. A. BRUCE.

Mr. THOMAS. There are two House bills of a private nature on the calendar which are of great concern to those immediately interested in them. They have been on the calendar for some time. I should like to have them considered; and first I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 178) authorizing an exchange of lands by A. A. Bruce, of La Veta, Colo.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the transfer by A. A. Bruce to the United States of title to the following-described lands: Commencing at a point 1,920 feet south and 30 feet west of the northeast corner of the southeast quarter of section 20, township 29 south, range 68 west of the sixth principal meridian; thence west 843 feet; thence south 720 feet; thence east 80½ feet; thence in a northeasterly direction 715 feet, variation 50°; thence northeast 48 feet, variation 10°; thence northeast 309 feet, variation 50°; all in the east half of section 20, township 29 south, range 68 west of the sixth principal meridian, in Huerfano County, Colo., containing approximately 8 acres, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, upon approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, to issue a patent to A. A. Bruce for the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 6; the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter, the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter, and lot 1 of section 7, township 30 south, range 68 west of the sixth principal meridian: Provided, That the patent issued shall reserve to the United States, or its grantees, or lessees, all coal, oil, or other mineral deposits in the land patented as well as the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same: Provided further, That the survey of the tract to be deeded to the United States shall be made at Government expense under the direction of the United States surveyor general.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN MONTEZUMA NATIONAL FOREST, COLO.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8692) authorizing the exchange of lands within the Montezuma National Forest in Colorado.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized in his discretion to accept on behalf of the United States title to any land free and clear of all encumbrances within the Montezuma National Forest, or within section 23, township 37 north, range 14 west, New Mexico principal meridian, within the State of Colorado, which in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture are chiefly valuable for national forest purposes, or for the protection of stream flow, and in exchange therefor may issue patent for not to exceed an equal value of such national forest land, or to exchange timber within the said national forest, as may be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture to be of approximately equal value and acceptable to the owner or owners as fair compensation, considering any reservations which either the grantor or the Government may make of timber, minerals, or easements. Timber given by the Government in such exchanges shall be cut and removed under the direction and supervision and in accordance with the requirements of the Secretary of Agriculture. All lands conveyed by the United States under this act shall, upon acceptance thereof, become a part of the Montezuma National Forest and subject to all laws affecting national forests.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the Senator from North Dakota.

THE RAILROAD SITUATION.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota withhold his motion for a moment longer?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GOODING in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have here quite an able article on the railroad situation by Hon. S. H. Cowan, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

"BASIC FIGURES IN RAILROAD RATE MAKING ATTACKED BY COWAN—POWERS GRANTED INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION IN TRANSPORTATION ACT PASSED BY CONGRESS SHOULD BE REPEALED OR IT WILL RUIN COUNTRY AND RAILROADS, TOO, ARGUES RATE EXPERT.

"To the Texas Legislature:

"This is written in the interest of the public and the railroads, as I verily believe, and because I am sure the subject matter is so complex that it is little understood.

"If the part of the law which I claim should be promptly repealed was by design it was because its proponents, the organized railway investors—really I think a speculators' scheme under that innocent name—and the railway executives, appointed by the big trust companies and banks owning the control of the railroads, elect their directors and hold the power over the corporations called railway companies.

"If it wasn't by their design they stand by it as their child. If Congress conceived it, which it did not in the beginning, it didn't think such results would follow. In either case, who wants to continue it?

"I am not blaming the Interstate Commerce Commission, though. I think it misconstrued the law. What I speak of is a misfortune to the people, the commission, and, I verily believe, the railroads.

"When Congress passed the transportation act returning the railroads to their owners last year it extended up to September 1, 1920, the war-time guaranty of the standard return, which was the three years' average next before June 30, 1917, the highest of any three years' average in their history. At the same time it provided for another form of guaranty after September 1 by a rate-making scheme to force the shippers to continue it as long as the railroads could get the commission to fix a value high enough that 6 per cent average would produce the results when applied to that value. It was not the value of a particular road or system, but the high value of the aggregate of all in a rate-making group, so called, to hide the real meaning. I don't mean that Congress intended to hide anything, but the proponents of the bill who engineered it through did, or if they did not the footprints are artificial.

"VALUE OF ROADS.

"The western district takes in all west of the Mississippi River and part of Illinois northwest of the Illinois River, including Chicago. These roads in the aggregate the commission valued for the purposes of the particular case at $8,100,000,000 for 132,400 miles of road, or about $61,000 per mile average, whereas the Texas average reproduction cost is less than $33,000 per mile. This did not have any relation to a given road at all. Neither did the estimate of earnings present or prospective. It was in the aggregate. The idea argued was that it would give credit to the roads by boosting them so they could sell stocks and in that way help out the weak roads.

"But there was no help provided, except Congress did appropriate $300,000,000 for a revolving fund to loan, but only on good security, which the weak lines did not generally have. That fund would be added to by one-half of the excess which the stronger lines, carrying the principal part of the business, would earn over and above 6 per cent on their respective values. But that value was not attempted to be found or stated and there is no effort yet to do it any ways soon, so the whole of the advanced rate is kept by the roads which may earn it and adds nothing to that fund. The help to the weak lines was the increased rates, but the increase applied likewise to the strong lines, boosting the rates too high on them on 75 per cent of the total business, so the weaker lines might have a little relief carrying one-fourth of the traffic at the expense of the public paying to strong lines, on three times the tonnage, excessive rates; so excessive that the law on its face expressly declares it would be unjust for them to retain, hence allows the Government to sue to recover one half the excess and the roads earning it keep the other half. The one-half per cent on the total aggregate value to make provisions with which to buy or build or make improvements, equipment, and facilities, all chargeable to capital account. Each road keeps it whether it needs it or not, and as it is in the rate charged, goes to the roads in proportion to the traffic, inures to each road until the 6 per cent is exceeded.

"For the western district it is $40,500,000 per annum. The commission had the discretion to add this or not. The State commission had no such discretion, but the Interstate Commission holds in effect that it must be added to State rates as well, though such rates are specifically excluded from the provisions of the act.

"They reach this result by the indirect method of holding that it is a discrimination not to increase State rates the same per cent as the Interstate Commerce Commission did interstate rates in the group, although it is not for a service but for capital. Of course, it is unconstitutional, but 'Jones he pays the freight,' has to pay it, and probably he will be bankrupt or dead, hence not a shipper by the time that is decided.

"CAUSE OF ADVANCE.

"Trace the money from this half per cent and you find its lodgment with the banks and trust companies, who can spend it in procuring these properties with industrial concerns with which they are connected like the railroads. The same thing applies to one-half of the excess above 6 per cent on the strong roads earning it, which should not need it. If in the aggregate these western lines earn the 6 per cent net, then the $190,000,000 is put aside for these roads and the Government, which would be over 40 per cent of the aggregate net return. The one-half per cent added causes 20 to 30 per cent of the advances made.

"Its practical effect as the Interstate Commerce Commission is administering this law (and it must be assumed it is their belief that it must be done) is that the percentage advances which they made are arbitrarily required by law, regardless of their reasonableness or other considerations. Thus the rights of the States are abolished by indirection, but as surely as if Congress had expressly so declared. The shippers' right to reasonable rates and to go before the tribunal provided for to try whether the rates he pays are reasonable is an empty privilege, as it is for a community, district, or State. Congress is thus held up to ridicule for having retained or reenacted all the provisions of the act to protect shippers and the public against any exactions of extortionate and even prohibitory rates and at the same time destroyed those rights by the requirement of 5 per cent return plus the one-half per cent additional allowed by the commission as the arbitrary minimum.

"If this method—this construction of the act—is correct, then when the commission has stated the aggregate value to be used in the computation a schoolboy acquainted with the ordinary rules of arithmetic can do all the balance quite as well to get at the percentage of advance of rates required to produce the arbitrary 6 per cent on that value, assuming the traffic will remain the same, and that must be the assumption as it was, otherwise no figures would be possible to get at the percentage advance required. It has not done so, and it is idle to speculate on how much traffic would have moved on lower rates or was prevented by the enormous advances compared to what it would have been without these advances. Remember, the wartime advances were in effect and the advances were in addition.

"STATE DENIED AUTHORITY.

"Expenditures for betterments charged in operating expenses may be greater or less, according to the policy of the given road. No one knows how much of that has absorbed the earnings which otherwise would have shown the net. In many cases it is admittedly great. There are rules prescribed, but applied to details they are necessarily more easily broken than complied with. Who knows what the roads or any of them are actually making, net? None can answer—not one. If a State determines it and finds the net much greater than reported, still the Interstate Commerce Commission says to it, in effect: 'If you don't advance State rates by as great percentage as the interstate rates in the group, you discriminate against interstate commerce and interfere with the Interstate Commerce Commission rates to produce the aggregate 6 per cent on the aggregate value declared by us to be the basis of rate making.' Thus the State is a dead one.

"Now, all this wonderful scheme is contained in section 15a of the reprint of the act to regulate commerce, added by the act of February 28, 1920, and the only way to avoid it is to repeal it. Since it repeals all other regulation of rates by law, State and interstate, no fair-minded man can defend it. Both committees in Congress declared they did not destroy the powers of the States, but they did if this construction is upheld. They reenacted the provisions to secure the shippers' rights as they had existed theretofore, to have just and reasonable rates, and thought those rights reserved, but under this construction they were not, unless this scheme is ipso facto as a revenue project the establishment of reasonable rates. If all restrictions on rates were removed, the western lines can not make 6 per cent on the value taken as the basis, but they can ruin the stock raiser and farmer and destroy all incentive to development, because they must either ship or let their stuff rot or die or the producer is compelled to ship it and pay so much freight that he gets but a fraction of its value.

"It shocks the conscience of fair-minded men to say that a railroad is entitled to such rates. They say Congress has required it. Surely it did not so intend, but if so construed, then the quickest way is to repeal this iniquity. It all rests upon what is the fair value of railroad property in the aggregate for rate-making purposes, and Congress did not fix that. Value is not defined by the act or any law. It is an open question with absolutely no rule of law aside from the rule of reason. By common knowledge a thing is worth what it will sell for on fair sale. That can not be boosted by claiming an earning power based on unreasonably high and extortionate rates.

"RULING SET ASIDE.

"The rule of the Supreme Court in Smythe v. Ames (169 U. S.), which all profiteers decry, declares railroads are entitled to a fair return on the fair value of what they devoted to public service, and the public is entitled to reasonable rates. So the roads are limited to what they can earn by the standard of reasonableness and fairness and the public subject to the same rule. This rule has been completely destroyed by this arbitrary law as construed. The commission believes it followed what Congress requires as to the per cent, but as to value it seems inconceivable. Fair value for rate making should be estimated if a per cent or other earnings on value basis is used, not on cost, not on investment, not on cost of reproduction or capitalization, or a value ascertained by capitalizing net earnings, but all these and other factors, which fair-minded, well-informed men would consider, taking into consideration the interest both of the carriers and the public. If rates are made merely to profit the railroad, the public interest is ignored, and that is condemned by the Supreme Court (Smythe v. Ames).

"No value was proven of any road or the aggregate for the group. The commission took as the aggregate value for the purpose of the calculation a certain sum to represent the aggregate on which the 6 per cent was arbitrarily to be applied and increased rates by percentage to produce the aggregate, and in stating that value far exceeded the par value of the stocks and bonds and took a little less than aggregate book value which it conceded could not be used and has always held unreliable, and as everyone knows it is most exorbitant, and as a rule varying from actual investment on different roads by as much as 100 per cent. It expressly refrained from finding the value of any road. It did not ignore mentioning its own valuations or reproduction cost less depreciation so far as it has progressed during the past five years by expenditure of tens of millions of Government money, but it did not take it or even half way approximate it in getting at the figures used. It does not matter for the purpose of this statement what it considered or whether from its viewpoint, which was very nearly the railroads' viewpoint, judging from results, the calculation based on the value taken has produced rates to ruin the country and the railroads in the end.

"Live stock can not be shipped to the feed or the feed to live stock. Fruits and vegetables are rotting and thrown away or not gathered because the rates are so high. Necessities of life were increased by the same percentage as automobiles and silks. The farming and live-stock business of remote regions are ruined.

"WHERE DO EARNINGS GO?

"They say we must support the railroads or we are ruined. Well, we are ruined by this attempt and still they cry aloud for more money from Congress, and would ask for further increases in rates were it not sure to wreck them. Reasonable rates are all that finally can do most for both the railroads and the people.

"Does anyone keep a check on what they are doing? The gross earnings are enormous, while they claim but little net results. Where does it go to? Has your State commission or the Interstate found out? The State commission is not given any funds to find out. If the Interstate Commission is, it has not been made manifest, at least to the public, except the reports of the railroads themselves. Wages are very high, it is said, on account of the high cost of living, but do the railroads expect their employees to first move and lessen wages to reduce the high cost of living? Let the railroads move first and do without dividends like the people who support them are doing without any profit and losing money every time they ship and pay these rates.

"Any law or any ruling that fixes value figures to cause any such rates as we have is wrong, and if we are a people capable of self-government we will right that wrong, and begin it by repealing this law, leaving the Interstate Commerce Commission to exercise its own judgment as it used to do on interstate rates to make them reasonable to shippers and railroads, both of whom must suffer the consequence of the World War on a fifty-fifty basis.

"Now, the States have their constitutional rights and the right to make rates, and while we are at it repeal all provisions which have been made use of by the railroads or commission to destroy our constitutional rights as a State.

"The example of Interstate Commission rates has brought us to ruin under this new law, and it does not lie in anybody's mouth to say that the States can not do at least as well. Certainly we have our constitutional rights that we should stand by, and the States should make their Congressmen do it to the last ditch.

"That does not mean to not do what is right by the railroads, but it will leave the subject clear of this ruinous, impossible financial scheme. Just remember that before the war this scheme was unthought of, and during the 3-years' average the railway earnings exceeded any period in their history. The people all want to give them fair treatment, but not to pay exorbitant rates on unfair and fanciful valuations while the people and their industries face bankruptcy and ruin with no return on their property or pay for their labor. The demand from the shippers and legislatures will result in repeal of that iniquitious section of the law, to be followed by efficient operation rather than high rates to make money. Live and let live is the only possible maintainable policy.

"If this is not done, Government ownership will certainly follow; and the Lord deliver us from that.

"Your demand will be heeded by Congress.

"S. H. COWAN."

RECESS.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I understand it is the desire of the Senate not to continue the session any longer this evening. I therefore move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock Monday morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, February 21, 1921, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 19 (legislative day of February 14), 1921.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 19, 1921.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Rev. Robert Atkinson, pastor of Warner Memorial Presbyterian Church, Kensington, Md., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, to Thee in reverence we draw near. Our need is proportionate to our responsibility, and both alike are great.

Grant to us that wisdom which will enable us to discharge the duties of our high office this day faithfully, wisely, and well, ever keeping before us the glory of Thy name, the welfare of this Nation, and the happiness of mankind. With forbearance, patience, and courage may we meet and overcome difficulties.

So lead us by Thy spirit that the measures we devise shall be approved by Thee and conduce to the progress of mankind onward and upward. Grant, O God, that peace shall extend her domains so widely and speedily that soon all nations shall be dwelling in amity and concord one with another. Guard and protect all those who are knit to us by the ties of relationship or the bonds of affection. As Thou hast set this people in the forefront of the nations so far as material possessions and natural endowments are concerned, may we also be in the vanguard of that great host which seeks to bring in, in its fullness, the kingdom of God, the kingdom of righteousness, peace, and joy throughout the world. Hear us, O God, and answer us in measure that exceeds our asking. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Post Office appropriation bill and to disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Post Office appropriation bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask if this is satisfactory to the minority members of the committee?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. ROUSE. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question concerning the Postal Commission.

Mr. MADDEN. I am not a member of the Postal Commission.

Mr. ROUSE. Has the gentleman any information regarding the activities of that commission?

Mr. MADDEN. No. I resigned from that commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]?

There was no objection; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. MADDEN, Mr. OGDEN, and Mr. HOLLAND.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE BLACKMON.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of an order, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. DENT, by unanimous consent, ordered that Sunday, February 20, 1921, be set apart for addresses on the life, character, and public service of Hon. FRED L. BLACKMON, late a Representative from the State of Alabama.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the order will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on H. R. 15682, the Indian appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California calls up the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. CARTER. At the proper time I desire to reserve points of order.

The SPEAKER. The proper time is after the reading of the report.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I think for the consideration of such an important matter we ought to have a quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point of no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and ninety-eight Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 15962) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior years, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. SMITH of Maryland as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 15872) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. LODGE, Mr. BORAH, and Mr. HITCHCOCK as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4912. An act to authorize the appointment of an ordnance storekeeper in the Army; and

S. J. Res. 226. Joint resolution authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to the dead of the First Division, American Expeditionary Forces, in the World War.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 15130. An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 4582. An act to declare Bayou Cocodrie nonnavigable from its source to its junction with Bayou Chicot.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution and bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 226. Joint resolution authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to the dead of the First Division, American Expeditionary Forces, in the World War; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 4903. An act to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across Detroit River within or near the city limits of Detroit, Mich.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 4912. An act to authorize the appointment of an ordnance storekeeper in the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EMERGENCY TARIFF BILL.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 15275, known as the emergency tariff bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to disagree to all the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked for on the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 15275. An act to impose temporary duties on certain agricultural products, to meet present emergencies, and to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TREADWAY and Mr. PELL objected.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged rule from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 689.

Resolved, That the bill H. R. 15275, being a bill entitled "An act to impose temporary duties on certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, to provide revenue, and for other purposes," be, and hereby is, taken from the Speaker's table, with Senate amendments thereto, to the end that the Senate amendments be, and hereby are, disagreed to, and the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes on said amendments be, and hereby is, agreed to, and the Speaker shall immediately appoint the conferees.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, can we come to some understanding or arrangement as to the time on this resolution?

Mr. POU. This, Mr. Speaker, of course, is a matter of very great importance. There have been quite a number of requests for time on this side as well as on the other side, and I suggest an hour and a half on a side.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Would not the gentleman agree to one hour on a side?

Mr. POU. I will say to my good friend that I would like very much to compromise on an hour and 15 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think we can get along with an hour on a side. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we have one hour on a side, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that debate on this rule be limited to two hours, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU]. Is there objection?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And may we not have the previous question ordered at the conclusion of the debate?

Mr. POU. No.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Then I will not ask for that at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Reserving the right to object, I want to propound a parliamentary inquiry under the right to object. Would it be in order, this rule being under consideration, for me to offer as a substitute a rule that the Committee on Agriculture has asked for to take the packers bill from the Speaker's desk——

The SPEAKER. That would not be in order.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Reserving the right to object, will the debate be confined to the rule?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I agree entirely with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] as to the importance of this measure. Probably otherwise I may not agree with him. The testimony which was introduced before the Ways and Means Committee since the time the bill was originally introduced shows that the crisis which is facing the agricultural interests of this country is deepening and becoming more threatening every day. The testimony of some witnesses was to the effect that the fate of a large number of banks depended upon the passage of this bill, and that the financial interests of the country, as well as those of the farmer, required action upon it as soon as possible.

It is extremely unfortunate that action upon this bill has so long been delayed. Every week that passes, every day that passes—I might almost say every hour that passes—adds to the damage, injury, and the risk of the agricultural communities caused by the failure of Congress to act upon it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman believe that these dangers, both with reference to agricultural interests and the financial interests, apply with anything like the same force to the items included in the Senate amendments as they do to the original items in the House bill?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would not say so, but I want the bill sent to conference. I trust this will be done without unnecessary delay. This bill was introduced as far back as some six weeks ago. Action was speedily taken upon it by the Ways and Means Committee. There was some complaint made at that time that the action of the Ways and Means Committee had been somewhat hasty, and that it had acted without full information. But I will challenge any gentleman to mention any item upon which we have since received information—although we have had full hearings on the tariff bill since that time—that would change his ideas as to what this bill ought to contain. The information which we had before us at that time was amply sufficient to justify our action. The information we have received since only strengthens the conviction of a majority of the committee as to the necessity of immediate action. Mr. Speaker, the Ways and Means Committee has not acted hastily in this matter. The subject matter of this bill was one upon which it has been fully informed.

It has been the object of its constant thought and attention, but the time has now come when, if we expect this bill to go to the President before the close of this session, action must be taken at once sending it to conference. There would be no other hope for the bill. A vote against this rule at this time means simply this, that those who vote against the rule do not wish to have the bill pass the Congress at this session. Gentlemen upon the other side may take that risk if they wish. Gentlemen upon my own side have the right so to do if they feel that their conscience dictates that course. But I feel, Mr. Speaker, that justice to the farmer in the emergency that faces him at this time requires that we should use every effort to get this bill through the Congress and present it to the President in the best form that is obtainable.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I would like for the gentleman to correct the statement in reference to the facts that it has only been pending in Congress for about six weeks. I would like to call his attention to the fact that it passed the House two months ago to-morrow, and it was up for consideration in the Committee on Ways and Means in the very first days in December.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is correct; the statement was made by me through an oversight of the moment. While this matter has been pending in Congress, it has been constantly before the country. Certain charges have been made by interested parties with respect to the good faith of those who favor this bill and those who helped prepare it in the first instance. Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned, I have had but one purpose from the start, to which I have devoted all of my strength and my power, and that was to get this bill through in the best form obtainable and present it to the President, in the hope that it might receive his signature and become a law. For these reasons I earnestly urge support of this rule at this time by all of those who desire to give any aid to the farming and agricultural communities.

Mr. MacGREGOR. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. MacGREGOR. Does not the gentleman think the Members of the House ought to have this bill before them and know what has been done in the Senate in reference to amendments before we are called upon to vote upon it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not know what the trouble is about the gentleman getting a copy of the bill. It is certainly not my fault if copies of the bill are not obtainable. The original bill, I might say to the gentleman, is easily obtainable. Does the gentleman want more——

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. STEVENSON. In case the rule is not adopted, then do I understand that this bill will go back to the Committee on Ways and Means to pass on these amendments put on by the Senate? Is that the practice?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think my friend from South Carolina is as well informed about the rules of the House as I am, and I could not give him any additional information as to procedure.

Mr. STEVENSON. If it goes back it will go back to the Committee on Ways and Means, which have given so much exhaustive study to it and are so much in favor of it; and will not that rather facilitate and help to pass a proper bill than this method of procedure?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman's interrogatory answers himself. It would be answered most emphatically in the negative.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. May I ask for two minutes more?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will yield two additional minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the bill went back to the Committee on Ways and Means and was amended in the House, it would simply have to go to conference, and then, after spending two or three days or even a week or more if we had the time, we would be just exactly where we are now. That is my answer to the gentleman.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Does my colleague think he could get this bill out of the Committee on Ways and Means in its present form at all?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am not going to state what I think would be the committee action. I do not think it would be proper.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I am not going to state what I think it would be either.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Apparently the gentleman's thoughts are very different from mine on the subject. I do not agree with him; so he knows where I stand.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I presume the gentleman thinks he could get the Committee on Ways and Means to report this out, then?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am confident the Ways and Means Committee would take such action as would expedite the passage of the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, this is not a party matter. The emergency tariff bill which came from the Committee on Ways and Means dealt with about eight or nine commodities. The bill went to the Senate, and it now comes back radically changed, an entirely different bill, with 22 or 23 amendments dealing with several additional commodities, including various products of the manufacturing industries of the United States. I maintain that it is an unwise policy immediately before the convening of the extraordinary session of Congress, when it is a matter of common knowledge that the entire tariff schedules are to be revised, to legislate in this summary way. Now, Mr. Speaker, there is something unusual about the request for this rule. No formal request has been made by the Ways and Means Committee—it is not even requested by a majority of the Committee on Ways and Means. That committee is composed of 25 members, and the request for this special rule was formally asked for by 9 members only of that committee. At least, that is the information I have. Now, so far as my recollection goes, this is a departure from the custom of the Committee on Rules—certainly in recent years.

Why was it that certain gentlemen of the minority of the Ways and Means Committee, who were strong supporters of the emergency tariff bill, were not even consulted about the request for this rule? My information is no member of the minority was consulted. So you are asked to send to conference a bill of surpassing importance, a bill which came back from the Senate practically a new measure—you are asked to send that bill to a conference composed of five Members of the Senate and five Members of the House upon the request, not of the majority, but of a minority of the Committee on Ways and Means. Now, gentlemen, that is unusual, to say the least. It is a most summary way of dealing with a great measure, and I do not believe this House wants to deal with tariff schedules in any such way; and if we do not, the only way to prevent it is to vote down this rule. Men on both sides of this Chamber who are opposed to dealing with the great subject in this hasty way ought to unite and vote down this rule and let this mesaure go to the Committee on Ways and Means and at least have a few hours' consideration before sending it to conference.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. I yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I understood the gentleman to say that this request was not supported by a majority of the Ways and Means Committee?

Mr. POU. That is my information.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will say to the House that, so far as it was possible for me to ascertain, the intent and desire of the Ways and Means Committee, some of the members of which are out of the city and just where they are I do not know, there is a majority of the Ways and Means Committee in favor of this.

Mr. POU. Did not the gentleman himself state before the Committee on Rules less than an hour ago that this request came from nine members of the Ways and Means Committee?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I stated that there is one Member sick, and that I did not consult him. I stated that I had telegraphed the chairman and had his approval. They were not included in the nine.

Mr. POU. Did not the gentleman state that the formal request came from nine members of the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I stated there were only so many Members to go to.

Mr. POU. And that there were nine favorable to this rule?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. POU. And that is a minority, not even a majority, of the Committee on Ways and Means. And, gentlemen, you are asked to do a thing that I, at least, have never known to be done before, to grant a rule for the consideration of a great measure like this upon the request of just a little more than one-third of the committee that has charge of the bill.

Let me say I am just as far from being a free trader as some men on the Republican side. I think the course of events has tended to make less acute the old-time traditional difference between the parties with respect to the tariff. I want to deal with this subject in a rational way, and I certainly do not believe that dealing with it in this way is either wise or rational.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, since the reassembling of Congress at the beginning of this session various men have appeared before the Ways and Means Committee asking that the necessities of the agricultural interests of the country be given consideration and that their dangerous situation be provided for by the passage of an emergency tariff bill to prevent the importation into this country of vast amounts of agricultural products produced abroad during the war, and held in those countries by reason of a lack of transportation, and then, at the time we were considering the bill, being ready to be dumped into this country to break the market and to ruin our agricultural interests. Our people, in addition to this storage of commodities in various portions of the world by reason of accumulations for several years, had been asked to greatly increase their production in order to supply our soldiers and our people and our Allies with the necessaries of life and of war. This the people engaged in agriculture had splendidly responded to. They had increased the production of all kinds of grain, and had undertaken the increased production of all kinds of meats. The unexpected close of the war left them with stocks on hand. Then came throughout the great West two years of drought and two very severe winters, and the people who had preserved a considerable and a larger proportion of their stocks of animals for breeding purposes than formerly, and who had prepared to increase their production in every way, found themselves, after two short forage crops and two hard winters, with stocks of animals on hand which they were unable to carry, the price of which was rapidly declining. They were being compelled to settle their outstanding accounts and loans at the bank in a sacrifice market. The competition from abroad was and is forcing ruin upon them. And the decline was being forced by the importation of fresh meats, wool from abroad, and other agricultural products from abroad, because a flock of sheep or a herd of cattle will decline in price if the products of that flock or herd come in from abroad and break the market.

We, on the Ways and Means Committee, taking into consideration the serious condition of this fundamental industry of the country, considered and prepared a bill covering a few items which were the most essential items with which to tide over our people until the regular tariff bill should be enacted. This bill received a very large vote in the committee; it received a good vote on the floor of the House. It was enacted in the utmost good faith. I would not for one, and I do not, accuse my colleagues of trying to be a party to passing a bill for purely camouflage purposes, and pretending to do something for a people which had a right to expect us to do something in reality. And we passed this bill with the utmost intention of securing its enactment for the relief of the people for whose relief it was intended.

The Senate, acting within its authority, has added various amendments to the bill. We have not as a committee concurred in those amendments. We are not asking the House to concur in the amendments. We are asking in this rule that the orderly procedure of the House be concurred in; that the request of our associate body be complied with; that conferees be appointed; and that the bill take its regular course and be sent to conference. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] use some of his time?

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, of course I do not know the views of all the men in the Chamber with reference to the Senate amendments, but I have an idea that there are probably not as many as 50 Members in the House who would be willing to agree to the amendments that have been placed upon this bill, which it is now proposed to send to conference, by the Senate. This bill passed the House originally as a measure somewhat simple in its terms. It embraced, I believe, only about eight subjects. It went to the Senate, and, after consideration by the Senate committee and after consideration in the Senate, it is returned to the House with, I believe, 27 distinct Senate amendments, and those amendments vitally and fundamentally change the whole character and tenor of the measure which passed the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have the advantage of possessing a copy of the bill, which many of the Members have not. The Senate has added 11 new items.

Mr. GARRETT. Eleven new items? Some one stated there were 27.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, may I supplement what the gentleman has just stated?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The original bill carried 13 items, and the Senate has added 11 items. That is, the Senate has increased the bill by almost doubling the number of items.

Mr. GARRETT. Well, whatever the number of items may be—and I did not have the items accurately in mind—the important thing is not so much in the number of items as in the fact that the Senate amendments, however many they may be, or however few, have changed the fundamental character of the measure, because they have added for manufactured products compensatory duties. If the bill should become the law, no man living, in my opinion, can tell now even approximately what its effect upon industry is to be. The Senate has brought within the vortex of this measure amendments that have wholly changed its original character.

Now, under those circumstances a different situation is presented to the House from that which is usually presented when a general tariff measure or a general revenue measure is presented. I submit in all good conscience and in all fairness that this bill should, measured by all the proprieties, be sent to the Committee on Ways and Means, to let the Senate amendments be by them considered before it goes to conference.

The minority members of the Committee on Ways and Means, some of whom supported the original measure, have had no opportunity to give any sort of expression to their views in committee. All that has been done has been done by the majority members. That is a custom with reference to general revenue measures. But this one presents an entirely different proposition. The bill was originally brought here as an emergency measure. The parties divided upon the question of its passage.

Now, let me call your attention to the fact that this rule without amendment does not give to the House itself the slightest opportunity to give instructions to the conferees. Not only are you refusing to send it to the committee, but by the terms of this rule, where it is provided that "the Speaker shall immediately appoint the conferees," there can be no motion in the House itself to instruct. I do not believe gentlemen desire to do that, to send this measure to conference, have it come back here in a form that no one now can even guess at, without the House having the chance to express itself upon these amendments, which the Senate has put on, so fundamentally changing this bill.

Therefore I hope, in the first place, that the previous question on the rule will be voted down, so that there may be offered an amendment that will strike out the language "and the Speaker shall immediately appoint the conferees." If that be done, then there will be an opportunity to the House to offer a motion to instruct the conferees before they are appointed; and if that amendment fails, then I certainly feel that this rule should be defeated outright, and this bill should go to the Committee on Ways and Means, have consideration there, receive the judgment of that committee, formally expressed on these Senate amendments, and brought back to the House. Then I shall be glad to aid in taking whatever steps may seem to be proper at that time.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, at the end of eight years in which the policies of the party to which belongs the gentleman who has just preceded me concerning tariff have been in vogue, we find the producing interests of the country in the most deplorable condition experienced in all time. If there ever was a necessity for a tariff to protect the producer, it is now. If there ever was a tariff bill offered to the country that had for its prime object the protection of the producers of the country, it is this bill. I challenge any man to call attention to the time when any bill was ever pending in the American Congress pertaining to the tariff that gave to the producer the protection that this bill does or which had that purpose for its object. And I say that the industry in which the people who are feeding the world to-day are engaged is in the worst condition ever known in the history of this Republic.

I would like very well personally to instruct the conferees, and that instruction would be to go and agree to the Senate amendments. I am for protection, and have always been. I was for protection when the prime object of protection was to protect infant industries of the East, to protect infant industries of this great country, in order that they might build up and become powerful industries; and I am consistent to-day, and I am for protection when that protection is needed by the producers of the West and Middle West. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I do not blame my friend who has just preceded me [Mr. GARRETT], who has never been for protection and who has always opposed a tariff, in company with his party associates, for casting their votes in opposition and voting against this rule and against this bill. That has been against their policy. But there are a few men in this House who voted against this bill before who may well stop and wonder if this talk about the tariff being a local issue is true; men who live in districts the principal business of which is manufacturing, that have had protection since the inception of government in America; men who stood up and voted against this bill because agriculture was getting some protection. I hope those men have reformed, and that we shall have at least on this side of the aisle a solid vote for this rule, and that when the conferees agree to most of the Senate amendments and bring this bill back we shall have a solid vote for the conference report, and shall not waste any time but shall pass this most constructive and most necessary legislation that has been presented to this short session of Congress, at least that has got to the floor at this short session of Congress. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Gentlemen, I thank you for your attention.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was before the House on the 22d of December I voted for it, but I stated on the floor at that time that if I had a very definite idea that there was a possibility of this bill becoming a law I should hesitate in that action. To-day I think there is so much possibility of it becoming a law that I intend to vote against this rule and will vote against the conference report when it is returned, in all probability somewhat in the form in which we are now sending it to conference. I say there is a strong probability of this bill becoming a law, and my reason for saying that is that if there is such a demand for its passage it can very readily be passed in the last few days of the session, even if it comes back here unapproved by the Executive. I hold no brief for the Executive, but word seems to have been circulated on the highest of authority that the President expects to veto this bill. Be that as it may, I for one do not want to take the chance of putting this bill up to the Executive with a view of inviting a veto. Consequently, I have objected to this bill going to conference, and I object to this rule.

The inquiry that was made here a few moments ago about there being no copies of the bill as it passed the Senate shows the haste exhibited by certain Members of this House from the very start in advocating this legislation. It was haste in the Ways and Means Committee to report it out, it was haste when it was on the floor here to pass it quickly, it is haste to-day to send it to conference. Anything as important as a great tariff measure, which this has developed into, seems to me to warrant due consideration by the Members of Congress.

Now, the excuse that was offered for this haste on the 22d of December was very well put by my associate on the committee [Mr. GREEN of Iowa] when he said, "We took all the time we had and could take on an emergency measure that had to have instant action, if any action was to be had at all, and then we brought in this bill."

On the 22d of December the idea was that we needed instant action. Two months have since elapsed and we have not that instant action yet. Now, my friend from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] who just spoke referred to the fact that the industries of the East have had protection. It is true, and I want the agricultural interests of the West and South to have protection where needed, but I want these to be identical and to go hand in hand. The industries of the East to-day are in as bad condition as the agricultural interests of the West are, and when you pass a bill here putting 40 cents additional duty on wheat, the equivalent of $1.80 or more on a barrel of flour, you paralyze the buying power of the eastern industrial section of our country just to that extent.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I can not yield. I am sorry, and I do not mean any discourtesy, but my time is too short. You can not have protection for one part of the country and free trade for the other. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] said that we in the East had had this protection. Do we get protection for the industries of the East under to-day's law? Who will claim that the Underwood Act was written to give protection to the industries of the East?

Mr. TINCHER. Will my friend yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. For a brief question.

Mr. TINCHER. The gentleman favors a law giving protection to the industries of the East, does he not?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; I certainly do.

Mr. TINCHER. And you expect me to vote for that law?

Mr. TREADWAY. And I want to vote for your industries at the same time.

Mr. TINCHER. You will have a chance to vote to protect our industries to-day.

Mr. TREADWAY. What I am advocating is the same treatment to the industries of the East as to the producers of the West.

Mr. TINCHER. Then you are not a protectionist, but you are in favor of local protection.

Mr. TREADWAY. I have just said I was in favor of all needed protection to all sections alike. I yielded for a question, and I have answered the gentleman's question. Do not let us deceive ourselves as to the form which this bill takes. The complaint I am making is that the pending bill is entirely in the interests of one section, rather than national, in the interests of the entire country.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] in his opening remarks referred to the information that has come to the Ways and Means Committee since this bill was reported out in December, as an additional reason for its passage to-day. I should like to ask him and my colleagues on the Ways and Means Committee if we have not had exactly the same evidence as to the distressing conditions of the industrial centers of the East as that which we have had concerning the agricultural centers of the West?

That is the situation, my friends. I would gladly have voted in the Ways and Means Committee and on this floor for such protection as the woolgrowers of the West and South and the cattle producers of those sections said they must have, but it has gone far astray from that situation to-day. Now you are asking to send this bill to conference.

A gentleman well informed as to the industrial situation told me this morning that paragraph 17, on page 3, known as the wool schedule, will close every woolen mill in New England. If that is true, where do you find your customer for your western produce? This can not be a sectional country, my friends. The prosperity of one section carries with it the prosperity of every other section. If one section is in distress, that distress will be felt elsewhere and throughout the Nation. There is but one thing for us to do, both as a party and as a Congress, namely, to take up this subject of the tariff, one of the important issues before the people of the Nation to-day, and go about it intelligently, acting diligently as your Ways and Means Committee have done in the preliminary hearings on the tariff bill, and proceed as expeditiously as possible to frame a general measure, one for every part of the country—for its industries, for its commerce, for its agriculture, for every feature of the country—and not to send out special items for particular sections.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman made a statement with reference to closing the woolen mills if this bill was passed. The gentleman is aware that the owners of the woolen mills were represented before the Ways and Means Committee on the hearings recently had. They knew that this bill was pending. Does he claim that they gave any such testimony before us?

Mr. TREADWAY. This bill was not pending before the Ways and Means Committee when Col. Wood, of Philadelphia, appeared in their behalf.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They knew that it had already passed the House.

Mr. TREADWAY. Then why should they appear before the Ways and Means Committee, as it had already passed this body? They were not having a hearing before us on this bill. [Applause.] We need and must have general tariff legislation—not the piecemeal variety.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I am sure those of us who come from the West are greatly surprised at the position taken by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]. It is a matter of surprise to us, and must be to all here, for the gentleman to state that he is willing to vote for this bill in case it is sure of defeat. It is also a matter of great surprise that a man who takes that position maintains that he is a friend of the farmer in the West. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], chairman of our committee, is not present to-day, but we know his vigorous way of speaking, and I think if he was here he would style the gentleman from Massachusetts as a ——— poor friend of the farmer. [Laughter.]

How do you think the farmers of the Western States are going to be impressed when they read the speech to-morrow, if they do, of the gentleman from Massachusetts? There has been some talk about bad faith in connection with this bill. It has been raised by different speakers. I would like to have you consider how the people of the West will regard the attitude of some people of the East who can not see farther west than the Allegheny Mountains—how they are going to regard their action on the bill if it should be defeated by their votes.

I am aware of the fact that since there will be a tremendous Republican majority in the next Congress some people have got the notion that the West does not count at all. It is true that when we get to electing a President we can not furnish a large percentage of the votes in the West. It is true that when we get to electing a House of Representatives comparatively a small portion of the House is elected from the West. But I want to call attention to this fact, that when it comes to electing a United States Senate we have got a very big say, and we have got more to say than they have east of the Allegheny Mountains. I want to tell you now that if the farmers of the West become convinced that this House to-day and our party has shown bad faith in this matter, the next Senate of the United States will be Democratic. That is something for you people of the East to think about. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I am not seeking any applause on that side, but I am giving a little wholesome advice to the Members on the Republican side of the House.

Mr. STEVENSON. May I inquire if that was the reason the Senate has loaded this up so?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I have only five minutes, and can not yield to my friend. I think it is time for people on this side who can not vote for a temporary bill to last only a few months, unless it is loaded up with items to protect items of production in the East, to consider how long they think the Republicans are going to be in control of the government of this country if they follow so short-sighted a policy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Take the question of a duty on wool, which the gentleman from Massachusetts seems to be so solicitous about and which he says is going to be the ruin of the great woolen interests of the country if they do not get a compensatory tariff on cloth. If there is anything to that statement at all, it means that the woolen mills can not get sufficient wool to run their mills during the next nine months at a reasonable price. Why, wool is piled mountain high at Boston and everywhere else, and can be bought for a song.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is two years' supply on hand without the spring clip.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yes; and they come here and try to make you believe that if we pass this bill, which is to be in operation nine months, it is going to shut off a necessary supply of wool for their mills and ruin the great woolen industries of the country. The statement is preposterous.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Who owns this two years' supply of wool in Boston?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I am sorry to say that a whole lot of it is owned by the farmers; but no matter who owns it, if the woolen manufacturers own it themselves they have a sufficient supply for nine months, and if they do not, they can buy it very cheaply all over the United States to-day.

Mr. OLNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yes; briefly.

Mr. OLNEY. I might state for the information of the gentleman from North Dakota that $60,000,000 worth of wool in Boston is owned by the Government. May I say to the gentleman that this is a matter of compensatory duty, and does he not think that if the owners of raw material receive a certain amount of protection there should be a compensatory duty on the manufactured product? That is what I understand these Senate amendments are.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. If the woolen manufacturers should be obliged to pay more, that would be true, but they have more than nine months' supply on hand without being obliged to pay any more for the raw product. [Applause.]

These people in Massachusetts should wake up to the fact that the purchasing power of the farmers has been greatly reduced and that unemployment will never be reduced until relief is brought to the grain growers and live-stock men.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, this bill is not worth the paper it is written on unless it raises the price of food. It brings no benefit to any man in this country unless it makes every other man pay more for what he eats. The whole purpose of this bill is to transfer money from all the community to some part of the community. It is wholly a class proposition.

I am not going to take any of my time in speaking for the manufacturers of New England. I do want to say a word for the manufacturers of the West. I find that from January, 1920, to January, 1921, there was an 82 per cent reduction in employment in Michigan. Four men out of five of the wage earners there are out of work. I find that in Ohio and Indiana one man out of every two is unemployed. One-half of the wage earners of Ohio and Indiana, as I say, are out of work. I plead for the West itself, I plead for the whole country in its hour of distress. I plead for every man who has seen his income cut off. I plead for the wife, I plead for the children in this hour of national distress. I plead for the consumer. There never was a more iniquitous proposition presented to this House than one which in this period of distress from one end of the land to the other contemplates an increase in the cost of bread. I am not talking about automobiles or gasoline or any other of the luxuries of life, but I am talking about that which every man must have three times a day to support existence.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. I would like to ask the gentleman, in view of all the men he speaks of who are out of work, how he proposes to get those men back to work.

Mr. LUCE. That, sir, is not the theme of my address. I am facing the situation as it is. I am not talking about the next tariff bill, I am not talking about next year, but I am talking about now, with more than 3,000,000 men in this country without the means of livelihood. I am talking about the children and the women—the families of the 3,000,000 wage earners in this country who are out of work to-day.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman misunderstands my question, and if he will yield further I will ask him if he does not realize that the farmers are the greatest consumers in the whole United States.

Mr. LUCE. Every farmer has food in his granary, in his pantry.

Mr. SNYDER. But the gentleman must know that unless industry is started up by some one, unless some one begins to purchase, you can not put these three or four million men back to work. [Applause.]

Mr. LUCE. I am not talking about that one-third of the country which has plenty of food. I am not talking about the man who has a roof over his head, who does not fear the extortions of a landlord, I am not talking about the man who has enough to wear, but I am talking about those who have had their incomes stopped, those who are to-day in distress. The farmer is not in distress. He has a roof over his head and clothes to wear and food to eat. He is not in danger of being thrown out on the street. He is not in need of coal, or if he is, he has wood which he can get in abundance. He can get through this terrible winter. I plead for the men and the women and the children in the cities.

Mr. SNYDER. But the gentleman certainly must find employment for those people from some source, and the best source in the country is to get some one to purchase the goods that those very people need when they are at work, and we must start back with the farm, the original purchaser. The gentleman must know that, if he is interested in manufacturing. The greatest consumers of the goods that I help to manufacture in this country are the farmers, and they are not buying to-day because they have nothing with which to buy. We must get the farmer, who is the first purchaser, to begin to purchase in order to put our people back to work in the mills.

Mr. LUCE. But the gentleman is wrong in saying that the farmer is the chief purchaser. He is only one man out of three, and I am talking for the other two out of that three. I am talking for twice as many people as my friend seems interested in. I am talking about the whole country. About Eastport, about Los Angeles, about Seattle, about Davenport, about Des Moines, about Detroit, about Galena, about Springfield, and Dayton. I am talking about the great centers of population that are to-day in the throes of distress.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. What remedy would the gentleman suggest for this deplorable situation?

Mr. LUCE. I do not know the remedy, but I do know that the remedy is not to make the cost of food any higher.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Should we not try out this experiment and see whether or not it will help?

Mr. LUCE. Not at the expense of the women and children, who are starving to-day.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. Did the gentleman ever know, when a Republican high-protective tariff was in force, of such conditions as exist to-day, that he has described here to-day? Did the gentleman ever know of 3,000,000 people being idle in the United States?

Mr. LUCE. Not until recent days.

Mr. TINCHER. Is the gentleman for a protective tariff?

Mr. LUCE. I am for the protective tariff of Henry Clay. I am for the protective tariff of the fathers of this country. I am not for this modern idea of taxing food. A tariff on food was never an essential part of the protective doctrine. A tariff on food ought not to be made a part of the protective doctrine. It will wreck the party that accepts it, and it will wreck the country itself.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts think that a duty of 2 cents a pound on meat will redound to the benefit of the farmer or to the benefit of the packer?

Mr. LUCE. I do not know to whose benefit it will redound, but I do know to whose injury it will redound. If it is of any efficacy it will redound to the injury of every man here and of every man, woman, and child in the land who eats meat. If it is any good at all it will increase the cost of meat. That is why I protest against this tariff. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I always listen with a great deal of pleasure to what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has to say. I listened this morning to what he had to say about this bill and his argument that it should be sent back to the Ways and Means Committee instead of this rule being adopted. The gentleman's argument was that this measure had been changed entirely by the Senate, that as it comes to us to-day it is an entirely different bill from that passed by the House. Let us see whether that is so. The gentleman does not descend to particulars. He made the naked statement, but he did not give us the facts. Let us see if the facts verify his statement. The bill as originally passed covered wheat, corn, beans, peanuts, potatoes, onions, rice, lemons, oils, cattle, mutton, sheep, cotton and its manufactures, and wool.

Now, what has been added in the Senate, because it is simply an addition of articles? Are the articles which have been added of a different kind; are they manufactures; are they something of a different nature from those included in the original bill? Not at all. They are precisely of the same nature, and they are the following—sugar, butter, cheese, milk, cream, tobacco, hides, apples, and cherries. So we find, instead of the nature of the bill being changed in the slightest——

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. In just one moment. Instead of the bill being a different bill in any particular it is exactly the same kind of a bill. It is a bill designed to protect the farmer, the farmer of the North, the farmer of the South, the farmer of the East, and the farmer of the West; and you simply have added to the number of articles which you protect and you have not changed the bill in any other particular.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will.

Mr. GARRETT. Let me call the attention of the gentleman simply to cotton. As the bill passed the House——

Mr. DEMPSEY. Just a second. Cotton is simply different in this respect, and in this respect only, that it is a little wider in its protection. It protects cotton of a shorter growth and so gives a greater measure of protection, and it protects certain manufactures of cotton.

Mr. GARRETT. Ah, Mr. Speaker, and that is just where the difficulty is, and that is why I made the statement——

Mr. DEMPSEY. It gives the South that added measure of protection. It protects the cotton grower in a measure and to a degree in which he was not protected by the House bill, and that is the only respect——

Mr. GARRETT. For which he has no use on earth.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Well, the gentleman did not find it so on the vote on the bill, and he did not find that he induced a united democracy to vote with him. He found that those who were interested in the protection of cotton voted the other way, and he will find it that way to-day. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Then come the two gentlemen from Massachusetts. The first gentleman says that he would be very glad to vote for protection if he could only get the opportunity, and he knows that he has an opportunity. He knows also that he will not have an opportunity to vote for any different bill, to vote for any other bill, to vote for any bill except the bill presented here to-day. Why, then, if he is in favor of protection does not he avail himself of the opportunity? And then comes another gentleman from Massachusetts, and he says, "Why, I am opposing this rule because the women and children of the country are going to have to pay more for food." Why, the gentleman's argument, logically, inevitably, as a matter of reasoning, leads, and leads only, to one conclusion, and that conclusion is that he is either a protectionist or he is a free trader, and he must be a free trader from his argument. He says this is class legislation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAIGE. I ask that the gentleman have three minutes additional.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas has control of the time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield the gentleman two minutes additional.

Mr. PAIGE. I would like to have the gentleman hear from another Representative from Massachusetts. Here is a letter I have received from one of the leading woolen manufacturers in Massachusetts, a Democrat in politics, and he says:

We have received from you a copy of House bill 15275. I can simply say that this is the most astounding piece of legislation that I have ever seen enacted by any legislative body. It is quite difficult to determine from such a crude measure just what it means, but after some study the only interpretation we can make of it is that the rawest kind of raw material is to carry a heavy specific duty regardless of the quality, and goods manufactured from those qualities, in some instances, carry even less protection than the raw material. This condition is causing quite a stir in the raw-material market, but it would seem to me that if a bill anything like this is enacted into law there will be very little wool used on woolen machinery in America—

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I can not yield any more time to the gentleman from New York. If the gentleman desires to use his time, he will have to use it himself.

Mr. PAIGE. One minute.

It would be far cheaper to shut down tight as we have done for the last nine months than to experiment under such crude conditions.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. Gentlemen, the gentleman from Massachusetts who preceded the last gentleman—Massachusetts seems to be united—says that this is class legislation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I ask for one minute more.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will yield the gentleman one minute additional.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman from Massachusetts says that this is class legislation, and that he is in favor of a protective tariff. If it is class legislation, it is class legislation of this kind, that we are able to legislate at this time on this subject because we are not able to cover the entire field. The entire field will be covered as soon as it can be reached. Now, when the gentleman from Massachusetts has just read a letter which states that the writer can not interpret this tariff, it is not a tariff that is difficult of interpretation, it is plain and simple. It is protection for the farmer. It does not need any elaborate interpretation, and even gentlemen from Massachusetts, I am sure, if they study it, can understand it and interpret it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. POU. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]. [Applause.]

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I voted for the original Fordney bill, and I have no regret for doing so. [Applause.] Owing to the abnormal conditions in the world the farmers throughout the United States, in every section of it, were in despair and were facing bankruptcy. I thought the passage of this bill would act as an embargo—the bill on its face showing it was only for 10 months—which would give the farmers a chance for things to become stabilized so that they could realize something like the cost of production on their products that they were then selling and are now selling for hardly one-third of the cost of production. I believe the farmer is entitled to the same protection on his products that the manufactures are on theirs.

I can not, Mr. Speaker, vote for this rule to send this bill to conference without giving the House and the Committee on Ways and Means an opportunity to consider the various amendments that the Senate adopted to the bill. I have the honor to be a member of the Ways and Means Committee, and if this bill is referred to that committee, as the rules of the House provide, I will gladly meet with my colleagues to consider the amendments, and I will vote to report the bill out of the committee either with recommendations to agree or disagree to the Senate amendments, and thus give the House a chance to pass on the Senate amendments. The way the bill is proposed to be considered to-day is by the adoption of a rule by one vote of the House, to absolutely take away from the House the right to consider any of these amendments or to instruct the conferees of the House how they shall act on these various Senate amendments which add a great many new matters in the bill. All of the country is vitally interested in the bill, whether they be the farmers or the consumers, and I think orderly legislation requires that a bill of this magnitude should be considered by a committee of the House.

Now, if this rule is defeated, I apprehend that the Speaker will refer the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means. That committee can consider these amendments. Some of the amendments that were added to the bill in the Senate were rejected by the Ways and Means Committee when we prepared the original Fordney bill.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield? The gentleman heard a moment ago his colleague from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] make the observation that the bill would not come back to the House if it went to the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. CRISP. I did not hear him because I was not here. I can only speak for myself. I am not antagonistic to the bill based on the lines of the original Fordney bill as it passed the House as a temporary measure, and, as I said a moment ago, I will vote to report this bill back to the House from the Ways and Means Committee. I do not say I will vote favorably on all of these Senate amendments, but I will vote to get the bill back in the House and give the House a chance to consider each of the amendments.

Mr. SNYDER. Does the gentleman think that can be done in time for legislation on it?

Mr. CRISP. I do not see why it can not. I have said, Mr. Speaker, about all I desire to say. This is an important bill. I am sympathetic with the intent of it, but I do not believe a bill of this magnitude should be put through the House under whip and spur with two hours' debate and without a chance to offer any amendment. Therefore I feel constrained to vote against the adoption of this rule. [Applause.]

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, just a pertinent observation. Every person who has spoken against this rule, with the exception of the last speaker and with the exception of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], originally opposed the legislation and fought it to the finish up to December 22, when it came to a vote. The gentleman from Massachusetts, who voted for it, stated to-day that he voted for it thinking it would not become a law. So we can discount his position at that time. The proposition is here: If we want this legislation to become law, it had best be acted upon by the friends of the measure. And those who are friendly will note carefully the character of the opposition now. These persons who are now opposing it, as a rule, on technical matters, will be opposed to it when it comes from the conference and will vote against it.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. FESS. I can not yield in four minutes.

Another thing is pertinent. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] who spoke on behalf of the consuming public makes the record speak for free trade. That is the only argument that it is possible to make for the old-time, one-idea argument of free trade, and my friend knows it as well as I do.

[Applause on the Republican side.] I regret that this attitude is from east of the Hudson River on the part of few of our friends here. It is presenting the argument that Democratic free traders have always assaulted Republicans with, putting the argument on the basis that you are for a thing if it is in your behalf, but you are against it if it is not in your behalf. [Applause on the Republican side.] That is an unfortunate situation for us—as the Republican Party—to put ourselves in to-day, confessing that tariff is nothing but a local issue, when every man knows that the protective tariff is a national issue. [Applause on the Republican side.] And everybody should be for the proposition as a good policy, rather than of personal interest. My friend knows that that is the attitude in which he has placed himself.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Protection is a national issue——

Mr. FESS. Absolutely.

Mr. LUCE. Because it is a national issue, I shall support it, as our country has understood it for a hundred years, when the essence of protection has been protection to industry.

Mr. FESS. I can not yield. My friend, if he is for protection, must vote for protection and not for free trade. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. LUCE. I will vote for protection to industry as it has been understood for a hundred years.

Mr. FESS. I do not care how the gentleman talks. I want him to vote as he should vote if he is for protection, and not vote against protection, saying that it is not going to protect the section he is from.

Mr. LUCE. But this is not protection.

Mr. FESS. It is protection.

Mr. LUCE. It is not.

Mr. FESS. It is a protection policy, written on the basis that protection is a national issue and not a local issue. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the party which assumes power completely on the 4th of March is pledged to the policy of protection. So far as I am concerned, when the next Congress comes to frame tariff legislation I shall advocate equivalent protection on agricultural products as on manufactured products. [Applause on the Republican side.] I will never be found voting, for instance, for such a measure as the Canadian reciprocity bill. [Applause.]

I supported the emergency tariff bill as it left the House, recognizing that it might afford some relief to the agricultural interests, and I know that they need relief. I may continue to support the bill however it may be modified.

The reason why I shall not vote for this rule is that I believe that bill as variously amended in the Senate should receive proper and ordinary consideration by being referred to the Committee on Ways and Means for such quick investigation as that committee may find possible and expedient. The bill passed this House on the 23d of December. It then went to the Senate; it was not reported to the Senate until the 17th of January. The Senate always declines to act as a rubber stamp, and yet it seems that the House is commonly expected to act in that way. The Senate, for example, received the House antidumping bill and the bills affecting dyestuffs and certain minerals more than a year ago and has surely proceeded in a deliberate manner to deal with those bills. It has not yet passed them. We may never be able to be as deliberative as the Senate, but at least it strikes me that the House should not take anything that is sent from the other end of the Capitol and approve it forthwith as a matter of course and without real consideration, merely because it has been approved elsewhere.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman surely does not call a rule disagreeing to the Senate amendments "passing the measure"?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes; but the gentleman knows perfectly well what is in his mind—that is, to proceed under this rule so as to O. K. the bill precisely as it came from the Senate. The gentleman will hardly deny that.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman has a rare faculty of reading my mind exactly to the contrary. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will ask the gentleman if he has any expectation that in conference there is going to be any careful consideration or material modification?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I expect very careful consideration, and I expect material amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Do you really expect any material modification? Is not the whole purpose of this rule to put this bill through exactly as it comes here?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not on my part, and I expect to be one of the conferees.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I make the prediction that if you take the action now contemplated—and I make it standing here as good a friend of the agricultural interests as represents a constituency in this House—we will in the end be brought to a vote on this bill precisely as it comes from the Senate, or without any material modification. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, in my district I have many farmers, but I have many more constituents who are interested in commerce, in finance, and in manufacturing. But, realizing that the prosperity of the agricultural element means prosperity to all, as a protectionist, representing a far eastern district, I propose to vote for this rule and for this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, in five minutes it would be impossible to give to the House any information about this bill. The bill originally was reported out of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives with less than one-half page of information submitted by the proponents of this bill on the committee. It went to the Senate and comes back with a tax upon nearly every known foodstuff, except perhaps hickory nuts and wild blackberries, and with no information at all. The Senate report contains not one line of information, not one suggestion as to the necessity for any of the items in this bill. I do not wonder that advocates of high protection are falling out as to what a protective tariff is, and I hail as a sign of advance along economic lines the dispute, the bitter controversy, which has commenced to divide the Republican side of this House as to what a protective tariff is.

This bill does not help the farmer any. How can it help the farmer? Let me call attention to just one item in the bill—and I have time to discuss only one item—the item placing taxes upon wool, unwashed, 15 cents per pound; washed, 30 cents per pound; scoured, 45 cents per pound. What do you mean by that? Do you expect the farmer to get anything out of that? Here in the report submitted by the Committee on Ways and Means the statement is made that there is at the present time in storage 600,000,000 pounds of wool, and the statement is made that this does not include the spring clip at all, and the further statement is made that this is enough to supply all of the needs of all the wool manufacturers in the United States for one year's time.

Now, a few gentlemen in Boston—not necessarily manufacturers—have cornered 600,000,000 pounds of wool; and that is the statement the Republicans make, and they propose for 10 months to protect wool by putting on it these exorbitant, high tariffs, the highest tariffs on wool we have ever had. When the 10 months expire those people in Boston who have cornered a year's wool supply will still have left two months' wool supply, and they need not purchase a pound of the spring clip nor a pound of the summer clip, nor any that the wool farmers are holding in their wool pools.

Then, who benefits by this? The men who own the 600,000,000 pounds of wool; not the farmer. If it is scoured wool they are going to make $400,000,000 out of it. You hand them a subsidy of $400,000,000, and the farmers and the woolgrowers do not get a cent of it. If it is merely washed, you hand to these gentlemen who have cornered the year's supply a subsidy of $200,000,000. That is what you do by this bill. If it is in the grease you hand to those gentlemen a subsidy of $60,000,000. Is not that subsidy enough? Is not that protection run wild? When the manufacturers of woolen goods apply to these persons who have stored wool, do you think they are going to get it at the present price? Why, certainly not. They are going to get it with 45 per cent or 30 per cent or 15 per cent added, depending upon whether it is scoured or washed, or whether it is still in the grease, and that charge will be passed on to the consumers. It is a step in the direction of keeping up the cost of woolen clothing throughout the United States; and it does not help the farmer, and he does not get a dollar of it; and it does not help the manufacturer.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that all tariff bills which have passed have been sent to conference on the Senate amendments by the House. I think the Senate amendments to a tariff bill have never been considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union in the House. This bill is in that parliamentary situation where those who are in favor of passing it, whether on one side of the House or the other, in my judgment, ought to vote for this rule. [Applause.] And those who are opposed to the passage of the bill ought to vote against the rule. If this rule is agreed to, the ordinary procedure in reference to tariff bills will be followed. If this rule is disagreed to, this bill will be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and I suppose at once reported back to the House with the recommendation either that the House agree or that it disagree to the Senate amendments, and then those Senate amendments will have to be considered in the House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. I apprehend that that might be done, but I also apprehend, if I can judge from past observation, that if it be done there will be no other business of any kind transacted by the House between now and the adjournment on the 4th of March, except the consideration of appropriation bills, conference reports, and Senate amendments on appropriation bills, and I am not at all certain that we would get through with them unless we should postpone the consideration of the tariff bill until all Senate amendments on appropriation bills had been disposed of. And under the new rule of the House, in my judgment, it is going to make the House hustle and work early and late to take care of the Senate amendments to appropriation bills which, if offered in the House, would have been subject to a point of order. I will say frankly to those who are opposed to this bill that if I had my way about it I would dispose of the appropriation bills before I disposed of the tariff bill, and, of course, if that were done it would succeed in defeating the tariff bill. So again I say that those who are in favor of the tariff bill ought to vote for the rule and those who are opposed to the tariff bill ought to vote against the rule. And I might add for the benefit of my colleagues from Massachusetts that if we propose to have divisions on the Republican side of the House after a tariff bill is reported by the Ways and Means Committee I apprehend those divisions will not end with this session of Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman from North Carolina use the remainder of his time?

Mr. POU. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT] is recognized for five minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, there was one argument made by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] which would be a very convincing argument to me why this rule should pass, and it is the only argument that appeals to me. He said if this rule did not pass there would be in the next Congress a Democratic Senate. That is a consummation devoutly to be wished. [Applause.] Because then we might have orderly processes of government, and instead of having a great bill or resolution of this kind presented within the last 10 days of the Congress we would have it presented in such time and in such manner as to give it careful consideration.

But what are we to do in this situation? We have here the rather remarkable fact that the doctors disagree. Dr. FESS is determined that this rule shall pass; and giving the other gentlemen the medical appellation, Dr. TREADWAY is entirely of a different opinion. Dr. LUCE agrees with Dr. TREADWAY. Dr. PAIGE, from Massachusetts, is of the same opinion, and Dr. DEMPSEY, from New York, desires to treat the patient in a different way. Now, when these great physicians, upon this great bill or resolution, differ in regard to the treatment of the patient, what becomes of the patient? Why, possibly the proper remedy would be to give him some treatment not suggested by either one of these doctors, and wait until a tariff bill is presented in the next Congress in a formal and definite way. [Laughter.] Now, coming down to the real pith of this matter, what is proposed here to be done? The bill as returned to us by the Senate contains 11 new paragraphs—not only amendments, but 11 new and distinct paragraphs—and not one of those paragraphs has been considered by the Ways and Means Committee of the House so far as we have definite information. At least it is safe to say that not one of them has been considered by the House itself.

By this process the House will have no opportunity of considering them, because if this rule is adopted the bill will go to the conference committee without the privilege of the House itself offering any amendments thereto. Is that in the direction of orderly government and legislation?

Now, what more? The bill contains an amendment providing that the tariff on wheat shall be raised from 30 cents to 40 cents. I heard a gentleman present the argument awhile ago that the producers would be benefited. Well, the producers of grain stuffs no doubt would be. The producers of cherries would be, because cherries are included in the bill. The producers of butter and cheese and milk and tobacco and sugar and apples would be benefited. But how about the consumers of butter and cheese and milk and apples and sugar and tobacco? Will they be benefited? After all, ultimately the matter comes down to the price that is to be paid by the consumer. Therefore I must consistently oppose the adoption of this rule. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD].

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am opposed to this rule. I was opposed to the bill as it passed the House, and I am more strongly opposed to the bill as it has passed the Senate. I do not think the remedy is a prohibitory tariff on imports. That is not the trouble in this country to-day. That is not the trouble with the farmers of the country. That is not the trouble with the manufacturers of this country. Most manufacturers are unable to sell their products because the consumers are unable to buy. The farmers of this country are unable to sell what they produce on the farms because the consumers of their products are unable to buy.

What we need is international trade at this moment. What we need in every line of industry is a market for things we produce in this country. And yet, my friends, they place a prohibitory tariff on wheat and flour in this bill. Why? Not to help the wheat growers generally, but to help a strip of wheat growers along the Canadian border when, as a matter of fact, we sell twice as much corn to Canada as Canada sells wheat to America. In other words, my friends, the Canadian people are our best customers, the best we have on this earth except Great Britain, and why discriminate against her when we get a great deal more trade out of her than she gets out of us. We ship several times as much product in value to Canada as they ship to this country.

Now, take sugar, as proposed in this bill.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLDFIELD. I will.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman suggests that we sell more to Canada than we buy. Does not the gentleman know that when we sell too many goods to a country we do not make a profit?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Does the gentleman want to cut off our trade with Canada?

Mr. SNYDER. No; but a large part of our goods are sold to Canada without profit.

Mr. OLDFIELD. This bill is before the country to-day for the purpose of fooling the American farmer, and you gentlemen know it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You gentlemen want to pass this bill, but you do not want it to become a law. The majority of the Senators in the other end of the Capitol do not want the bill to become a law.

Now, I want to take a moment on this sugar proposition. The bill increases the tariff on sugar, and it is admitted by the sugar producers of this country that every cent of the tariff on sugar comes directly out of the pockets of the consumers of the country. In other words, this bill increases the duty on sugar to $2.36 per hundred pounds. We consume in this country 9,000,000,000 pounds of sugar per year; hence more than $200,000,000 are collected from the people of this country, and only one-half of that goes into the Treasury of the United States. Now, you gentlemen who vote for this bill vote to take out of the pockets of the American people, the consumers, $100,000,000 and place it in the pockets of the sugar producers. I asked a gentleman from Louisiana how much they had invested in the sugar business, and he said $200,000,000.

It would be better for the American people to appropriate $200,000,000 and buy that property and give it back to them rather than to burden the people of this country with this tariff on sugar. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the gentleman from North Carolina I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SABATH.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I fully agree with the gentleman who preceded me, as well as my colleague from Illinois, Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY, that this bill can not in any way aid or assist the American farmer. If it will aid anyone at all, it will be the hoarder and the speculator. I am of the opinion, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, that notwithstanding the statements made in regard to the American farmer, that he is better off and in a better position to-day than he has ever been before in the history of our Nation. Oh, he might have been hard up for cash at times, and why? Because he has refused to sell his products. Because he has invested tremendously large sums of money in buying additional acreage that formerly was valued at $100 per acre and has paid two, three, yes, as high as four hundred dollars per acre. In addition to that, he has invested large sums of money in automobiles and machinery, and, above that, due to the fact that he has speculated and invested large sums of money in various kinds of banking and corporation stocks. It is for these reasons that he is needing some financial aid and assistance, and not because he has not received a fair compensation for the things which he has grown.

As to the lull in business, the gentleman should know it is due to the fact that people have refused to buy at the unjustifiably high prices and are waiting until they can buy at reasonable prices. The gentleman from New York is very much alarmed about the unemployment, and he wants to know what will become of the unemployed if the farmers will not buy. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the unemployment that exists to-day is due to a large extent—I am not going to say conspiracy, but to an understanding entered into on the part of certain industries because they desire to beat down the wages of the American laborer. They started to close up their shops and factories for two weeks, sometimes for three and four weeks, for the purpose of being able to hire these men back at 25, 33, and 50 per cent lower wages. That is responsible for the unemployment which exists to-day. I am satisfied that within a short space of time we will have very little unemployment in the United States.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I will.

Mr. SNYDER. I challenge the gentleman to name one single instance where that has occurred, and, besides that, he knows that that is the argument of every demagogue in the country, and there is not a word of truth in it.

Mr. SABATH. I say to the gentleman he is mistaken. The gentleman should not make that statement.

Mr. SNYDER. I do not mean it personally, but the gentleman can not name a single case.

Mr. SABATH. There are hundreds of cases.

Mr. SNYDER. Point out one.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing extraordinary about this rule. The purpose is to enable the House to expedite the passage of the bill that has already passed the House and the Senate before the close of the session. When gentlemen returned from their homes in December they brought with them the vivid recollection of what had been told them by the farmers throughout the country.

With a unanimity of purpose and action the bill was passed through the House to relieve a serious condition throughout the country that everybody knows exists. The condition of the farmer has not changed for the better since December. The hour approaches when the farmer must scour his plow and put it in the field and put in his crop and raise food for the country, or decide whether or not he will scour his plow and put in a crop and feed the people of Massachusetts. It is all important that this bill shall pass at the very earliest date—important to the idle people in Massachusetts. If they have difficulty in getting food to-day, they will have greater difficulty in getting food in a year from now. If the farmers of this country are to be confronted in the future with the competition that they are meeting to-day in their markets, they will not put in crops to be sold in competition with the products that are imported to-day. That will reduce the production of agricultural products in this country, and that will raise the price to the consumer and reduce at the same time the ability of the farmers of the country to purchase the products of Massachusetts. Massachusetts has prospered heretofore by selling her products to the farmers of Kansas and of the West. The farmers of Kansas and of the country have prospered by selling the products of their industry to the manufacturers and the mill operatives in Massachusetts and elsewhere in the country. Under a policy that gave the industries of Massachusetts protection the farmers got incidental protection by getting a good market for their products, but that day has passed. They must now have direct protection for the products of the farm.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I can not yield.

Mr. RUBEY. We would like to have a rule for the packers' bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] has been here for eight years without wasting the time of the House or his own in demanding action upon the matter that seems to press so heavily on his mind during the last three or four days.

Mr. RUBEY. We have been praying to get you to bring us in a rule for two or three weeks.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman's party had control of the House for eight years and did nothing about the matter.

Mr. RUBEY. We did not need any such thing until you fellows got in. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The farmers have been the best customers that Massachusetts has had. One farmer in America is worth four consumers elsewhere to every American industry, and what is true of the farmer as a consumer is likewise true of the manufacturers and their employees as consumers of farm products in this country. They are the best consumers of American products, and I refuse here to take the narrow doctrine of Massachusetts to-day for the doctrine of the consumer in this country, in Massachusetts, or in Kansas. Massachusetts must know that this country extends westward beyond Buffalo. If she does not know it, she will find it out.

This bill relates to agricultural products. It is important, I repeat, to farmers of the country to know this spring, now, whether or not they should put in a big crop. The farmers of Oklahoma are scouring their plows and the farmers of the country are ready and watching to see what their Representatives in Congress are going to do with this bill. A vote against sending this bill to conference to-day is a vote to defeat the bill. Do not attempt to deceive the farmers in Texas or in Oklahoma or in any other State of this Union.

Mr. HUDSPETH and Mr. HASTINGS rose.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I can not yield. The farmers will not be deceived by a vote on this rule to-day. They can not be fooled by any such pretext as that. This is a special rule. They know, or will know, that a vote to defeat this rule means a vote to kill this bill. This bill follows the same path that other tariff bills have followed throughout our country's history.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I can not yield.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I just wanted to ask the gentleman why they do not relieve the farmers by passing the packer bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG] is nearly as much interested in the cattlemen as he pretends to be in these closing hours of his service here, he will vote for this rule and for this bill.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Not on your life.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Then he is not interested in the cattlemen.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Because it does not help them.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. He is not interested in the farmer, he is not interested in the agricultural producers of this country, because this bill relates wholly to agricultural interests. There is not an item in it except in their behalf; there is not an item in this bill except in the interest of the farmer, and to give compensatory duties to the users of farm products, in cotton and wool.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma for a question.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman be practical enough to tell the House how this will help a single cotton grower in Oklahoma or in Texas?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It gives a compensatory duty upon every pound of cotton grown and used in our industries.

Mr. HASTINGS. But——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am not going to argue with the gentleman. I have answered his question.

Mr. HASTINGS. But the gentleman knows——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman knows——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; I do not yield. Democratic Senators asked for that provision in the bill, and I assume that they were not attempting to fool their constituents.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield for a question, not for an argument.

Mr. SABATH. Can the gentleman inform me whether the Tariff Commission has been asked for a report upon this bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not know whether they have or not. There is not a Member in the House who does not know the necessity for the passage of this bill without consulting the Tariff Commission.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For a question.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Should we not vote for the rule, in view of the statement by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] that it would not help the wool men, that wool is all in the hands of the purchaser, in view of the sworn statement before his committee that 60,000,000 pounds of wool from Texas is in the hands of the producer, stored in Boston?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. This will prevent flooding of the markets with wool?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And with other farm products.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I am agreeing with the gentleman. I say, in view of the sworn statement that there are 60,000,000 pounds of wool in Boston to-day owned by 6,000 ranchmen, who are unable to sell it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It will prevent a further glutting of the markets of this country with the products of foreign farm labor if we pass this bill. [Applause.] The way to restore employment to the 4,000,000 men the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] says to-day are out of employment is to make the farmers of the country so prosperous as to enable them to again become purchasers of the products of every industry in the land.

The way to make this country prosper again and give employment to every idle laborer in it is to protect the product of every industry in this country against competition with labor that gets a less wage elsewhere in the world. That is what this bill proposes to do so far as the farmer is concerned, and we shall take care of Massachusetts and her industries in due time after the farmers have gotten in their crops in sufficient quantities to feed the people of this country for the next year. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 203, nays 114, not voting 111, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LEHLBACH) announced the following conferees: Mr. FORDNEY, Mr. GREEN of Iowa, Mr. LONGWORTH, Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY, and Mr. HULL of Tennessee.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's table the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, H. R. 15872, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. BARKLEY. Reserving the right to object, there was an amendment added on by the Senate reappropriating an unexpended balance of an appropriation carried for the purpose of paying the expenses of American delegates to some sort of an alcoholic conference. Will the gentleman agree, before that is eliminated, to give the House leave to vote on it?

Mr. ROGERS. That is a legislative matter, so, of course, it can not be agreed to by the House conferees without a separate vote of the House.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that is true; but what I am seeking is that before it is eliminated by the conferees we may also have a separate vote upon it.

Mr. ROGERS. I will say to the gentleman very frankly that I would prefer that he would not insist upon that, although my present inclination is to accede to what I understand to be his desire. This particular item was not carried in the estimates. There was no request for it made of the House or of the Committee on Appropriations of the House.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the gentleman that it is not a new appropriation. It is simply a reappropriation of an unexpended balance of $150,000 that was appropriated some years ago for that purpose.

Mr. ROGERS. It carries a charge upon the Treasury, in that the Treasury would not expend that money if it were not reappropriated.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the gentleman that this is the amount of money that was saved on account of the extreme economy of the American delegates in the last conference.

Mr. ROGERS. I am glad to hear that; but I hope the gentleman will not ask me to commit myself, although my disposition is to give the House an opportunity to vote upon this amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield——

Mr. ROGERS. I yield.

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, all that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] asks—and I am glad to join with him in that request—is that it being, as I understand, an appropriation without authorization, if it is brought back to the House a vote of the House is necessary, and the conferees can not agree to it without authorization by the House. But we desire to guard against the possibility of its being disagreed to and eliminated without a chance to vote on it in the House. All I ask is that the gentleman bring it to the House.

Mr. ROGERS. That is my disposition, and I am not seeking to evade the request; but I would prefer, if the House is willing, that I should not be absolutely obligated to do it, come what might.

Mr. CRAMTON. Some of us feel very much interested in that, I will say to the gentleman, and I feel very reluctant——

Mr. ROGERS. I hope the gentleman will not object. I have been entirely candid with him in what I say, and I think that ought to suffice for the gentleman.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will accept the gentleman's statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there is no objection, the Chair will appoint the conferees. The Chair appoints as conferees on the part of the House Mr. ROGERS, Mr. ELSTON, and Mr. SMALL.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California calls up the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill. The Clerk will report it.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15682) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 9, 11, 19, 28, 33, 39, 50, 56, 57, 66, 67, 71, 75, 78, 79, 88, 90, 91, 99, 107, 110, 111, 113, 114, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, and 126.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 12, 15, 16, 29, 30, 35, 41, 47, 52, 54, 55, 63, 68, 69, 70, 72, 73, 74, 80, 84, 85, 86, 98, 100, 105, 115, 116, 117, 125, 127, and 128, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$35,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$375,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$13,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$7,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 51: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$65,000, of which sum $15,000 shall be immediately available"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 96: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 96, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$273,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 97: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 97, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$380,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 112: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 112, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,222,004"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 13, 14, 17, 18, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 31, 32, 34, 36, 37, 40, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 48, 49, 53, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 64, 65, 76, 77, 81, 82, 83, 87, 89, 92, 93, 94, 95, 101, 102, 103, 104, 106, 108, 109, 129, and 130.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15682) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of said amendments, namely:

On No. 1: Strikes out the language, inserted by the Senate, making the appropriation for surveying and allotting Indian reservations available for expenses heretofore incurred during 1921.

On No. 2, relating to irrigation on Indian reservations: Makes a typographical correction in the heading of the paragraph.

On No. 7: Appropriates $35,000, instead of $20,000, as proposed by the House, and $50,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the suppression of traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians.

On Nos. 8 to 11, inclusive, relating to the relief of distress and medical care and treatment of Indians: Appropriates $375,000, instead of $350,000, as proposed by the House, and $415,000, as proposed by the Senate; strikes out the authorization of $10,000 proposed by the Senate for removing the Blackfeet Hospital to the Blackfeet Agency; authorizes the use of $13,000, instead of $10,000, as proposed by the House, and $15,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the Pima Hospital, Ariz.; strikes out the authorization, inserted by the Senate, for the use of $50,000 for medical and health work among the restricted Indians in the Five Civilized Tribes.

On No. 12: Inserts the increase of $100,000 proposed by the Senate in the appropriation for the support of Indian day and industrial schools.

On No. 15: Reduces from $7,500 to $7,000, as proposed by the Senate, the appropriation for telegraphing and telephoning.

On No. 16: Reduces from $800 to $600, as proposed by the Senate, the appropriation for court expenses in connection with suits involving the title to allotted lands.

On No. 19: Relating to general expenses of the Indian Service: Provides that $7,500 of the appropriation "shall" be used for continuing the work of the Competency Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, as proposed by the House, instead of "may be" used for that purpose, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 28: Strikes out the increase of $15,000, proposed by the Senate, in the appropriation for the development of the water supply for the Navajo and Hopi Indians in Arizona and New Mexico.

On Nos. 29 and 30, relating to the expenditure of tribal funds of Indians of the Fort Apache Reservation: Reduces the authorization from $8,500 to $8,000 and makes that sum immediately available, as proposed by the Senate, for school and agency buildings and irrigation purposes.

On No. 33: Strikes out the appropriation, inserted by the Senate, for the purchase of water rights for the irrigation of 631 Salt River allotments of 10 acres each.

On No. 35: Appropriates $5,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the completion of the approaches to the bridges over the Little Colorado and Canyon Diablo Rivers, near the Leupp Agency, Ariz.

J. A. ELSTON,
S. WALLACE DEMPSEY,
W. W. HASTINGS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma reserves all points of order on the conference report.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the gentleman can reserve points of order on a conference report.

Mr. CARTER. I did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the gentleman want to reserve a point of order for the purpose of making an inquiry?

Mr. CARTER. No; I reserve all points of order on the conference report in order that they might be made if necessary.

Mr. SNYDER. There is no point of order that could be made.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have no objection to the gentleman reserving a point of order on the conference report for the purpose of making an inquiry, but when a conference report comes up for consideration it can not come up for consideration with points of order reserved.

Mr. CARTER. I do not want to make any point of order now. I am not sure that there is anything in the conference report against which I desire to invoke the rules; but if there is, I did not want to lose the right to make it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; but, after all, you have to have some procedure about these things. The conference report has been read. Now it is time to make points of order, and not after the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SNYDER. I would like to ask if, in the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill the other day, it was settled that a point of order would not lie against an amendment attached to an appropriation bill in the Senate in a conference report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not remember whether it was or not.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly plain that a point of order does not lie against a Senate amendment. A point of order would lie against a conference report if it included an agreement to a Senate amendment made in violation of a rule of the House.

Mr. CARTER. As the gentleman knows, the conference report was only printed last night. I have looked over it very hastily, and I am not sure that it contains anything against which I desire to make a point of order; but in case anything develops during the consideration of it, we ought to have a right to make a point of order against it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; you do not want to waste time spending the afternoon on a conference report and then make a point of order. The time to make it is now.

Mr. CARTER. We have not had time to find out if it embraces anything necessitating points of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. If a point of order is not made before the statement was read, it would be too late to make it afterwards; and after the consideration of the conference report begins the point of order can not be made.

Mr. CARTER. I do not think the consideration begins until after the statement is read.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The statement is not read at all.

Mr. CARTER. Has the report been read?

Mr. CRAMTON. The report has been read. After we begin the consideration of the report it will be too late.

Mr. CARTER. Usually we read the statement instead of the report, but in this case the statement was a good deal longer than the report. I was called out in the corridor for the moment and presume the statement was omitted and the report read during my absence.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. The point I wanted to make in my inquiry to the Speaker was that there are items in this bill that would have been subject to a point of order had they been placed on the bill before it passed through this House or while it was going through the House. Now, before we start proceedings on the bill I want to be clear whether I have a right to make a point of order against any item of legislation put on in the Senate that would have been subject to a point of order if put on in the House?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The way to test that is to make the point of order.

Mr. ELSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes; if I have the floor.

Mr. ELSTON. There is no new legislation in the conference report; and the inquiry is made, as to the suspended items, whether a point of order would lie against them in the House.

Mr. SNYDER. From the best investigation I could make of this report in the time I have had this morning, I know of no item in the report of the kind I have spoken of, but there has been at least a belief on the part of many Members that under the rule under which we are now attempting to legislate an item placed on the bill in the Senate that would have been subject to a point of order in this House is still subject to a point of order. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says the best way to find out about that is to make the point. I am perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. CRAMTON. And the gentleman will not lose any rights as to items that have not been agreed to by withholding any point on them until after the conference report has been agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. As to the Senate amendments which have been agreed to, either with or without amendment by the conferees, does any one of them carry legislation, or is there any one of them that is not authorized by law? If so, which one or ones?

Mr. ELSTON. None of the items mentioned by the gentleman have been agreed to in the conference report, and there are many such items that have been referred back to the House as being matters which the House conferees had no jurisdiction to consider; but those items are reported back to the House to the extent of 57 amendments.

Mr. CANNON. Then there is no new legislation on this bill which has been agreed to so far?

Mr. ELSTON. Not if the conference report is adopted. Then it will be before the House to say whether or not these items shall go into the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The conference report does not include any such legislation.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely; and therefore no point of order could be made on the conference report from that standpoint.

Mr. ELSTON. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CANNON. And in the next conference report, if anything is included that is not authorized by law, attention will be called to it if we have not industry enough or time enough to examine for ourselves?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Those amendments will come up later in the House.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, here is one amendment, No. 51, which might be subject to a point of order. My attention has been called to it. The action of the conferees is as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 51, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$65,000, of which sum $15,000 shall be immediately available"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The words "of which sum $15,000 shall be immediately available" were added to the bill in the Senate, and may be in violation of the House rules.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, no.

Mr. CARTER. Did the gentleman say they are not?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No.

Mr. CARTER. That appropriates for this year, and the appropriation bill is for the coming year.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The best way to test that is to make a point of order against the report on that ground.

Mr. CARTER. I do not know whether I want to make a point of order. That may be a good amendment, but we should have some justification for it and should not lose any of our rights.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That provision is not subject to a point of order on a bill reported from a committee which has jurisdiction over deficiency appropriations.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman's contention is that it is not subject to a point of order under the new rules, but would have been subject to a point of order before the new rule was adopted?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If it had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, it would have been subject to a point of order.

Mr. CARTER. Perhaps the gentleman is right about that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think I am right.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned there is nothing in the report as it stands to which I desire to make a point of order. The most that I expect to do is to get the House to vote upon the legislation that is in the bill that has not had any investigation in this House by any proper body; and, so far as I am personally concerned, I am not here for the purpose of delaying legislation; neither am I attempting to keep anything out of the bill that ought to go into it; but I am here to do the best I can to protect the House and to inform the House by the arguments that will go on here this afternoon as to the difficulties and, to my mind and judgment, the improper method of putting legislation on this bill such as is carried in it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That will come later.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. SNYDER. I am ready to go ahead on that basis.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of the conference report. Does the gentleman from California desire recognition?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I desire to know whether the matter of the point of order against the conference report has been disposed of. The gentleman from Oklahoma raised a point of order.

Mr. CARTER. If the Chair will indulge me, I think I will be through with this matter in a moment. I want to pursue the question a little further and get a little more parliamentary information from my friend from Illinois, who knows the parliamentary situation.

Now, I am seeking information because I am trying to find out something as to what the procedure will be in the future. Do I understand the statement to be now that a deficiency appropriation is in order on any appropriation bill that may come into the House?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think it is in order on any appropriation bill from a committee that has jurisdiction over deficiencies, and that is the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CARTER. Without reference to whether it is a deficiency bill or not?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Without reference to whether it is called a deficiency bill or not.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of comparison, I might refer back to some figures that I submitted to the House when the bill was originally reported out of the Appropriations Committee to the House. I will begin by giving the amounts carried in the current law of 1920:

Gratuities, $7,251,985.20; reimbursables, $1,941,950.07; treaty items, $826,620; the grand total of the bill for 1920 being $12,847,997.39. The bill as reported to the House at the present session by the Appropriations Committee through this subcommittee carried a grand total of $11,944,000, or about a million under the act of last year. The House is well advised that the bill as reported to the House by the Appropriations Committee went through some changes in the House. As it was passed by the Senate it carried a total of $13,697,000.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman does not include in those figures the amounts that are obligated for future expenditure. For instance, there is one item in the bill carrying $50,000 appropriation and an obligation in the future of $2,450,000 on the part of the Government. The gentleman does not include that.

Mr. ELSTON. I say the grand total is $13,697,000, that being the total amount of appropriations. For instance, in the Yakima item I am counting in the grand total only $50,000 appropriated in this bill, while the whole project is to cost $2,500,000. I understand the gentleman has included that in his total, inasmuch as it involves obligations on the part of the Government, although no appropriation is made.

Mr. SNYDER. That has been the practice heretofore.

Mr. ELSTON. Now, it might be instructive to state to the House the exact situation with regard to the amounts carried in the conference report now pending. I wish the House to keep in mind that the conference report includes a good many items on which the Senate has receded, and a good many items that the House has agreed to, and some that the House will agree to with an amendment. If the conference report passes, the total will be greatly below the amount carried by the bill as it was introduced in the House. After the conference report is adopted we have a bill that will be nearly $5,000,000 below last year's act, and below the bill as introduced in the House, and it is up to the House as to what they will put upon it. I shall, of course, according to my own judgment, move to concur in certain items, and I will state to the House now that if my motions are carried the total of all the appropriations involved in my motions will still make the bill less than the law of last year. This will be a fairly creditable showing.

Mr. CANNON. How about the legislation that obligates the Government for thousands and millions of dollars hereafter?

Mr. ELSTON. The gentleman will have an opportunity to make his observations on that in a few moments, because that will be up to the House. The total as carried in the conference report, if agreed to, will be as follows: Grand total, $7,312,640, distributed as follows: $2,428,000 gratuities, $249,500 reimbursable, $580,000 treaty items, total out of the Treasury $3,257,500; grand total of items amounting to $7,312,640.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. I can not understand the gentleman's figures at all. The gentleman speaks of $2,000,000 gratuities alone. There is one item of $1,700,000 for school purposes, and the item of hospitals.

Mr. ELSTON. The item of hospitals is not in the bill and not in the report. The item of $1,700,000 for schools is included in my total of $7,312,640.

Mr. SNYDER. If the gentleman is talking about only the things in the conference report which have been agreed to, that is one thing.

Mr. ELSTON. That is exactly what I am stating. I am trying to give the House an idea how we will stand after the conference report is adopted.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman's statement may have been as misleading to some of the others as it is to me.

Mr. ELSTON. I tried to be as clear as I could.

Mr. CANNON. The Senate amendments covering legislation are subject to the point of order, are they not?

Mr. ELSTON. There is no such amendment in the conference report.

Mr. CANNON. But I am speaking of the Senate amendments.

Mr. ELSTON. There are none in the conference report. There may be legislation in some of the Senate amendments, and they will be submitted to the House for a vote.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the gentleman has made it clear to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that there is no legislation whatever in the conference report, that such legislation as will be passed on by the House, after the adoption of the conference report, will be presented seriatim by the gentleman, and he will make the motion to recede and concur or to disagree, and then the gentleman from Illinois will have an opportunity to consider each separately.

Mr. ELSTON. That is correct.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman from Illinois can not make the point of order against any of those items. He will either have to vote yes or no on them.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman from California will make the motion on each one, and then the House can vote.

Mr. ELSTON. I will make the motion to concur or further disagree and instruct, if that is the sense of the House.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman call them off item by item?

Mr. ELSTON. That is what I expect to do.

Mr. Speaker, I tried to make myself plain with regard to what the conference report will carry. I thought it fair to state to the House that it carries a very much less amount in totals than will be necessary for the needs of the service.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman knows of course that several million dollars must be added to the conference report, or the bill will be absolutely worthless.

Mr. ELSTON. That is true in a sense.

Mr. SNYDER. And the service would go out of business. Why should the gentleman stand up here now and tell us that he has reduced appropriations five or six million dollars when the fact is that the bill has been increased by $5,000,000 in the Senate?

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I made no such statement. I was giving information to the House, and if the gentleman got any implication from my remarks that this committee was glorifying itself as the result of the very low amount carried in the conference report, he got a wrong impression. It was a matter of information merely. The gentleman knows, and I know, that the House will act further on suspended items, and the bill will be increased. It will be up to the House whether this subcommittee is to be congratulated. All additions over the total amount of $7,312,640 carried in the conference report lie with the House.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I understood the gentleman to say that only $3,000,000 would be taken out of the Treasury by this conference report.

Mr. ELSTON. I said $3,988,000 would be taken out of the tribal funds. The conference report carries a total of $7,312,640.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I understood the gentleman to say that it came out of the Treasury, and it would be more than $3,000,000 through this conference report.

Mr. ELSTON. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Then some $3,000,000 additional were reimbursable funds.

Mr. ELSTON. No; I did not say that.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. We all recognize that the reimbursable proposition is practically taken out of the Treasury.

Mr. ELSTON. I did not mention the reimbursable funds at all. I will repeat what I said. I stated that the aggregate of items carried in the conference report, including gratuities, reimbursables, and treaty items, amounted to $3,257,000.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. What is the amount of reimbursables?

Mr. ELSTON. All that the conference report carries in the way of reimbursables is $249,500.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Those are the items agreed upon?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF SPEAKERS PRO TEMPORE.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. ALMON to preside over the memorial exercises in honor of the late Representative BLACKMON, and Mr. RUCKER to preside over the memorial exercises in honor of the late Representative BOOHER, to be held Sunday, February 20, 1921.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, of the printed bill, line 13, insert: Owens River Valley projects, California, $2,000; Soboba Reservation, Calif., $750.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede as to that amendment and concur in the same. With regard to these items, they were not carried in the initial bill which was reported to the House. These items are for projects that have been in existence for several years. They have been carried under the omnibus appropriation that has been distributed to the various minor irrigation projects of the West. Several years ago, on demand of the Indian Affairs Committee, a segregation was made of the various projects, and they have since appeared in the bill separately. It seems that these particular projects have been carried under a diminished omnibus fund, and they did appear in the estimates for this year. They were not carried in the bill. They aggregate only about $2,700. The Owens Valley project consists of a number of small projects that are distributed over an area more than 50 miles in length. The additional funds are required for continuing already constructed projects, making small repairs for the same during the year. No new construction will be undertaken under the appropriation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I did not care to unduly press these two very small items touching California. I was rather tender about putting them in the bill, and resolved the doubt by not putting them in the bill. I am informed they are very necessary small projects in California, already in existence. To abandon them would cause a great deal of hurt to the Indians concerned.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield me some time?

Mr. ELSTON. I will yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, in reference to these items, the position that the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House assumes is the same as it will be on many other items in the bill. There is not any doubt but what the chairman of the subcommittee has made a true statement of the situation as it exists, but this is an item in an appropriation bill where there has been absolutely no investigation or examination made on the part of the House, and if it were made on the part of the Senate there is no record of it. And so we say that the man here who votes to put this in the bill is voting to do it without any knowledge of the facts beforehand and nothing to substantiate his vote upon it after he has made it. And so, like all other items in the bill that are in that position, we are opposed to it because it has not had proper investigation either by the Appropriations Committee or by the Indian Affairs Committee or by the Indian Affairs Committee of the Senate, or any other body, and therefore it is not regular, in my judgment, on the bill. That is all I care to say.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I will conclude by stating that the items have had consideration by the Senate committee, where a strong presentation was made.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman will agree there is no record made of that investigation.

Mr. ELSTON. Not by way of hearings, except by the Senate committee. I move the previous question on the amendment.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask if this is authorized by existing legislation?

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact there is no question whatever that these three amendments touching California, aggregating $2,700, were not subject to a point of order. They are existing projects and have been in existence for years.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. I will.

Mr. SINNOTT. Can the gentleman tell us how many acres of land are involved?

Mr. ELSTON. We have the report here.

Mr. SINNOTT. I would like to know how many acres of land are involved and whether or not the settlers are irrigationists, are Indians, or white men?

Mr. ELSTON. They are all Indians. This is a small matter, and I do not think it is worth the time of the House to discuss it further. I move the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 16, Tule River Reservation, Calif., $5,000.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Is that a new project?

Mr. ELSTON. I will read:

The Tule River project was begun nearly two years ago, and it now lacks but $5,000 to complete. The construction of this project was made necessary on account of shortage of water and a probable attack by white owners who held rights previous to the settling of the Indians upon this particular land. The project as now being constructed conserves the water, allowing both Indians and whites a better supply, and when fully completed will avoid the necessity of litigation and possible loss of water rights by the Indians.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. I will.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman does not contend that he has any information in regard to it except this that he has just read, that there was no examination made in regard to——

Mr. ELSTON. Not before the House committee. I move the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the Senate amendment was concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 17, strike out "$35,500" and insert "$43,200."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment. This merely readjusts the total.

Mr. HASTINGS. I suggest also the gentleman include No. 6, because it corrects the grand total.

Mr. ELSTON. We will reach that in just a moment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment to correct the total is agreed to.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 10, strike out "$166,750" and insert "$174,500."

Mr. ELSTON. I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment, which is merely a readjustment of the total and conforms to the additions made.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 13: Page 8, line 5, after the figures "1922," insert: "Provided, That this limitation as to attendance shall not apply to the Hope Indian School for Girls at Springfield, S. Dak., which school is hereby reestablished and continued."

Mr. SNYDER. Where is amendment No. 7?

Mr. ELSTON. It was agreed to in the conference report.

Mr. SNYDER. Here is the case where the amount has been increased $15,000, and certainly that amendment should be discussed.

Mr. ELSTON. It was agreed to in the conference report and passed. It was passed in the conference. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its disagreement.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, just a moment.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement. As to that I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER].

Mr. CANNON. It is subject to a point of order now?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to substitute for the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON] that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, in reference to this amendment, No. 13, it is proposed to put back into use a school that was put out of business on account of statutory law that was created in the Indian bill of last year, which fixed it so that boarding schools which did not bring the number of pupils up to a fixed amount should be eliminated. This was one that was eliminated on that account, and this proposes now by amendment to not only reinstate the school, but to fix it so that one of them is exempt from that limitation. It is contrary to the policy that has been adopted by the Indian Committee in this House, and it certainly is establishing a bad precedent. The effect of the legislation of last year brought nearly every school that is conducted in the Indian Service up to the required number of pupils. This one was one that evidently could not be brought up to the required number, and therefore they are asking that an exception should be made.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNYDER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman suggested a while ago that he would like to make a point of order on a Senate amendment. The gentleman might try it on this.

Mr. SNYDER. Well, I am only too willing to adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois and make a point of order against it.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that it comes too late.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is no point of order that lies against the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The point of order of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON] that it comes too late is valid.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the point of order was made, it would come under the new rule that provides the point of order is in order at any time.

The SPEAKER. Certainly; under the new rule. The Chair does not know what the point of order is that the gentleman from New York wishes to make.

Mr. SNYDER. It is new legislation, unauthorized by law, and that it is not proper on an appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. It may not be proper for the House to put it on. That, of course, does not apply to the Senate.

Mr. SNYDER. I have nothing further to say, except what I said in my original argument. I wanted to have the thing settled.

The SPEAKER. This is a new rule, and perhaps it is well to have it settled, as the gentleman says. The rule provides that a conference committee shall not agree to certain new legislation put in by the Senate. After a bill goes to the Senate and comes back from conference, then the conferees can not have agreed to legislation without specific authority from the House. But there is no rule to prevent the House considering such legislation put in by the Senate, and no point of order lies against it.

Mr. SNYDER. Now, Mr. Speaker, in further reference to this matter—and I believe I have the floor yet—if the committee should listen to the appeals of every individual Member who has Indians in his district there would not be a section of the statutory law that would not be changed in every bill. We are asked here, the first thing, the law only having been in effect seven months, to make an exception in the interest of one Member here, whom personally I would like to please, but it is absolutely contrary to good law and practice to start in before you have really got working well under the law that was made effective only last December and begin to make exceptions to it and that provision in it. Therefore I submit that this should be stricken from the bill on a vote. When the proper time comes I want to move that we vote on it, unless the chairman does so.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Is there any more reason for this exception, because it is the only Indian girl school in the United States and that there is necessity for this school, than there would be for the general schools that would go below the 100 limit?

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman well knows that last year when this law went into effect this situation existed in this school, and no one at that time made any plea for it, and the House, being a legislative body, can not be supposed to have knowledge of every item that is before it. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs was cognizant of this, but did not bring the matter before the Indian Affairs Committee.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] has expired.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON].

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, it is true, as has been said by the gentleman from New York, that the limitation that was placed in the law eliminated this Hope School, at Springfield, S. Dak., but I do not believe it was the intention when that limitation was drawn that it should affect that school.

This is a small school that was originally started by Bishop Hara, an Episcopal bishop of South Dakota, who had devoted a large part of his long and busy life to education and missionary work among the Indians, and he believed that one of the best ways to educate the Indians and bring them to our methods of life was to educate the girls. And so they organized and started this school, a purely girls' school, a boarding school, where the girls are not only instructed in the rudiments of book learning, but they are taught cooking, washing, housekeeping, and so forth.

It is the opinion of the men out there who are best acquainted with this subject, such as Prof. C. G. Lawrence, the superintendent of the normal school at Springfield, and the present Episcopal bishop of South Dakota, Bishop Burleson, that that school was doing a fine work up to the time it was closed. It is a small school, with a capacity of 60 pupils, and therefore it fell within the limitations of this law. But I think we should reestablish that school, just as the Senate has sought to do, and grant these Indian girls the privilege of attending that school.

It may be said that they should go to the public schools; but they do not go to the public schools. Here they had a nice school, with suitable buildings all prepared and arranged for this kind of work, and the school was doing a good work.

We have taken away from the Indians large tracts of land. We are asking them to comply with our methods of civilization, and I do not believe we could do any better work than to grant the reestablishment of this school and continue it.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Certainly.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman realizes that up in that country there are plenty of facilities for Indian children to go to school?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Yes; public schools.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman surely ought to realize, if he has studied the question, that the best education that an Indian can get is in contact with white children in white schools, and that is where those children ought to be.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. That is not the opinion of men who have given the matter a special study. I wish to read a line or two from a letter from Bishop Burleson, of South Dakota, who has given a great deal of attention to the matter of education among the Indians. Speaking of this school, he says:

> It never has had nor was intended to have more than 60 in attendance. It is a home school for girls, established originally by Bishop Hara and by him transferred to the Government. It has maintained the best traditions of its founder. I am constantly visiting the Indian schools of the State, and it is my conviction that no other is rendering such effective service as Hope School. I can quite understand that in the case of large Government schools intended for two or three hundred pupils, which have dropped to one-third or less of that attendance, the law may be reasonable; but it certainly was not drafted to abolish a school such as this, that is unique among Government institutions in this State in confining its education to girls only. Without criticizing the educational policy of other schools, I can assert from knowledge that this school is giving to the Indian girls what they can not get elsewhere and girls need. The women of the race should have the best possible, and they are the ones who must be reached with careful and discriminating influences. Hope School is making splendid wives and mothers for the future.

Likewise a letter from Prof. Lawrence, ex-superintendent of schools of that State, in which he says:

> This school has an enrollment at the present time of 64 pupils, which is the maximum number that can possibly be enrolled in the school.
>
> It seems to me that the school here should be exempted from the ruling of the commissioner because of its peculiarly advantageous location. The school is doing a great work for the Indians, and if it is closed not many of the Indian girls in this section of the country will secure the education they need.
> I believe that the best guarantee for the future welfare of the Indians is found in the proper training of Indian girls for intelligent motherhood.

I hope the House will show this degree of liberality to-day and grant to these Indian girls the reestablishment of this school, which was doing so fine a work out there in that community, not only for the Indians on the reservations in South Dakota, but also for those in the adjoining State of Nebraska. It does not cost much to run it. You have the buildings and plant there now. Reestablish it, and give the girls the benefit of this school.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Yes.

Mr. REED of New York. Do I understand the gentleman to say there were 60 girls?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Sixty-four girls attending that school.

Mr. REED of New York. This is the only Indian girls' school?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Yes; this is the only Indian girls' school that I know of at this time in existence. [Applause.]

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. ELSTON. The gentleman knows that there are 60 amendments to this bill which must be considered, and therefore we must proceed rapidly; but I will yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, in pursuance of a rigid demand for economy, the House undertook less than a year ago to adopt a fixed plan with reference to Indian schools. This plan was not agreed upon until after several months of investigation by your Committee on Indian Affairs, which crystallized into a recommendation from this committee to the House, requiring a certain attendance at each different kind of Indian school. This plan was written into law in the last Indian appropriation bill and provided that no boarding school should be continued beyond that fiscal year where an attendance was shown of less than 80 pupils. That policy has hardly been in operation now for one year. Then, do I understand that the gentleman from California, who himself assisted materially in promoting that new policy, now comes in with a motion to recede and agree, which is practically a repudiation of the plan adopted less than a year ago?

Mr. ELSTON. Oh, no. I made the motion to further insist on a disagreement.

Mr. CARTER. Oh, then, I misunderstood the situation. Not the gentleman from California, but some one else has made the motion to recede and agree, and perhaps there is no necessity for my making any speech at all.

Mr. ELSTON. What I have done is to turn over my function in resisting this matter to the gentleman from Oklahoma and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER].

Mr. CARTER. In that case, then, I only desire to say that our genial friend from South Dakota has just presented his case very clearly. I believe he has said all that could be said in defense of this motion, yet he has not presented any reason for the continuation of his school which could not be presented with equal force for nearly every other school that has been discontinued on account of lack of attendance of 80. If we are going to begin at this early day to make exceptions in this manner, then there is no knowing how far we may go, and it will probably not be long until the policy established by the House will be completely destroyed or reversed.

Mr. REED of New York. This is the only Indian girls' school in the country, and that makes it an exceptional case.

Mr. CARTER. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken about that. There are several Indian girls' schools in the country. There are two in my own district in Oklahoma.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY].

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, there is a good deal of reason why there should be an exception made in the case of this school. This House acted without sufficient information when the action was taken which has been referred to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] and the gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER]. This school is different from most of the schools we provided for in the bill in that it is operated without name. It was paid for out of a lump-sum appropriation. In my membership of the Committee on Indian Affairs I do not recall any specific conversation, conference, or report with relation to this school. We dealt generally with schools that were paid for out of the lump-sum appropriation, but not specifically with any school, so that it did not develop that this school had a capacity of only 60 when the limitation of 80 was put in the general law. Now, the fact is, gentlemen, this school was donated to the Government as a result of the efforts of good old Bishop Hare, now deceased. It has served a useful purpose. It was full more than to capacity, something that can not be said of many of the Indian schools of the country. It had a capacity of only 60, and yet the report showed 64 girls there when the order of discontinuance came. It is not in the interest of economy to discontinue this school, because these children must be taken care of somewhere. I challenge the gentleman in charge of this bill to show me where that lump-sum appropriation has been reduced one penny by the discontinuance of this school. You must take care of these children somewhere, and why not in this school, under ideal surroundings and circumstances, in a school that has helped rear better girls for these many years?

Mr. ELSTON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, first I want to say that I happen to be in hearty sympathy with the position taken by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER], chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee, in desiring to secure economy, and he has perhaps given as much time and energy to the study of Indian Affairs as any man in the United States and is making the same great record that many other great men have made as chairman of that committee. But I would like to ask him if it is not true, as stated by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY], that this particular Hope School was not considered in the committee as a separate school, but that the appropriation came in a lump sum, and that this school went down without the committee realizing the facts with reference to it?

Mr. SNYDER. What the gentleman says as to the making up of the appropriation for this school is true, but in that investigation that we made, starting a year ago last September, every single school operated by the Government, either on a reservation or a nonreservation school, was examined, this school as well as the others, and this particular school was one of several that the commissioner pointed out as being one that would have to go out of business. Our first idea was that a boarding school could not be operated economically with less than 100 pupils. Personally I do not think such a school can be operated economically with less than 250, but we reduced the figure at the urgent solicitation of many Members of Congress and brought it down to 80, and we think that is the limit to which it should go. The point is this, if the gentleman will yield——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have only two minutes.

Mr. SNYDER. I guess the gentleman's two minutes are gone now. I ask the gentleman from California to give him two minutes more.

Mr. ELSTON. I yield to the gentleman one minute longer.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman, as I stated before, that I happen to be a member of the Indian Affairs Committee and am in hearty sympathy with his desire for economy; but having some knowledge of the local situation and some knowledge of the location of this school and the way it is run, I do not believe this is the particular time and place for the House to economize, in view of the fact that if this is not the only Indian girls' school in the United States, it is at least the only one in the northern part of the United States.

Mr. ELSTON. I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER].

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, this law which was enacted last year has filled to the required number practically every Indian school. Now, if we do not insist upon this thing going out, it will be the means of every one of these schools dropping down in attendance, and then some one will come in here and ask us to accept it.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON] that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment and concur in it.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON) there were—ayes 33, noes 31.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands tellers. All those in favor of tellers will rise. [After counting.] Twenty-three have arisen; not a sufficient number.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. If a sufficient number rose to get tellers, would the gentleman still insist upon his point of no quorum?

Mr. SNYDER. I am regretting to see a policy that is of great value and will prove of great value being put out of business at the request of one man. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it, and the motion is agreed to. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

INDUSTRIAL WORK AND CARE OF TIMBER.

For the purposes of preserving living and growing timber on Indian reservations and allotments, and to educate Indians in the proper care of forests; for the employment of suitable persons as matrons to teach Indian women and girls housekeeping and other household duties, for necessary traveling expenses of such matrons, and for furnishing necessary equipments and supplies and renting quarters for them where necessary; for the conducting of experiments on Indian school or agency farms designed to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, cotton, and fruits, and for the employment of practical farmers and stockmen, in addition to the agency and school farmers now employed; for necessary traveling expenses of such farmers and stockmen and for furnishing necessary equipment and supplies for them; and for superintending and directing farming and stock raising among Indians, $460,000, of which sum not less than $75,000 shall be used for the employment of field matrons: Provided, That the foregoing shall not, as to timber, apply to the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin: Provided further, That not to exceed $15,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be used to conduct experiments on Indian school or agency farms to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, cotton, grain, vegetables, and fruits: Provided also, That the amounts paid to matrons, foresters, farmers, physicians, nurses, and other hospital employees, and stockmen provided for in this act shall not be included within the limitations on salaries and compensation of employees contained in the act of August 24, 1912.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agree to the same with an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ELSTON moves that the House recede from its disagreement to amendment of the Senate No. 14, and agree to the same with the following amendment: "In lieu of the sum of $460,000 named in said amendment insert the sum of $400,000."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, this item is the regular item under this caption that has been carried in the Indian appropriation bill for over 20 years. It has ranged ordinarily from $460,000 to $450,000, although in the years 1918 and 1919 it was carried at $475,000. The Indian appropriation bill last year carried this item in the sum of $460,000. The Appropriations Committee, when it reported out this item, brought in an appropriation of $400,000. In other words, for the first time in years we decreased this activity and reduced the appropriation to $400,000.

Mr. HASTINGS. And it is in the identical language.

Mr. ELSTON. The language is identical. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER].

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I will say that this is one of the items taken out of the bill when it was before the House on a point of order. As the chairman says, it has been carried in the Indian appropriation bill for years and is an integral part of the Indian Service and should be retained in the bill. However, it is one of those items that remains on the bill in exactly the same attitude, as far as the House is concerned, as the information as to other ones already referred to. The gentleman in stating the figures that this bill has carried in its course through legislation was to my mind somewhat misleading, although I am willing to admit that he did not do it with the idea of misleading the House. The amounts that the bill carried in its various stages were these: When it came to the House it carried $11,944,335. On leaving the House it carried $11,194,035, $750,000 having been taken out of the bill in the House. The bill as reported to the Senate carried an amount of $13,405,744, and the bill as it passed the Senate carried $16,072,512, being an increase over the amount carried when the bill left the House of $4,878,000, or $4,127,000 over the amount allowed by the Appropriations Committee in the bill as presented to the House.

Now, of course, I have not had time to discover whether the figures which the chairman submitted are correct or not but I take it for granted that they are. When the bill is finished to-day, if the usual rule is followed, it will carry several million dollars more than it carried when it came into the House. I have no further objection to this item.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this item for industrial work and care of timber perhaps ought to pass with an appropriation of $400,000, under the circumstances. However, the House should pay a little attention to the growth of such branches of the Indian Bureau. This forestry branch was established in 1909. At the present time it has 115 employees and a salary list of $138,000 a year. The division is divided and subdivided into futility and foolishness, employees dealing with the reproduction of timber, overseeing lumber operations, inspection of timber, and a host of other activities. If it is necessary to appropriate $400,000 now it is certain that the Indian owner of the timber is not getting the value, but that it is being largely spent in the salary list among the employees who help to make up the 6,000 employees in the Indian Bureau. We are coming to the time when there should be a reorganization, and this branch of the Indian Service should be transferred to the Forestry Service of the Government, where it belongs, and where it can be handled efficiently and effectively.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I just want to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. ELSTON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. Where are these 6,000 employees?

Mr. SNYDER. They are all over the United States.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I would say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that that does not include 12,000 more employees of the Indian Bureau, who are Indians, on part time. Bureau agents are employed in every agency on every reservation in the country and in Washington.

Mr. CANNON. And the aggregate expense is how much?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Between four and five million dollars for a salary list each year.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Here are 56 amendments, and I want to get at the procedure being followed under the new rule. The chairman of the conference committee under the old rule, of course, had one hour in which to move the previous question. Does he have one hour that he may yield out at will on each of the 56 amendments?

The SPEAKER. He does.

Mr. FERRIS. Or must he conclude within the hour?

The SPEAKER. He has an hour on each amendment.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 17: Page 12, after line 16, insert:

"PAY OF INDIAN POLICE.

"For pay of Indian police, including chiefs of police at not to exceed $50 per month each and privates at not to exceed $30 per month each, to be employed in maintaining order, for purchase of equipment and supplies, and for rations for policemen at nonration agencies, $200,000."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur in the same with the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ELSTON moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 17, and concur in the same with the following amendment:

In lieu of the sum of "$200,000" named in said amendment, insert the sum of "$150,000."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, the language in the Senate amendment is identical with what has been carried in the Indian appropriation bill for the past 20 years. When we introduced this item in the House at the beginning of this session we thought it should be reduced, in view of the more settled conditions in a great many of the States where the Indians now reside, and the fact that police duty is much less necessary than it was formerly. We therefore decided on a course of reducing this and some other appropriations of a similar kind.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. During the course of 20 years most of the Indian tribes have been dissolved and members covered into citizenship of the United States. Why does it require nearly as much money to police these citizens, members of former tribes, now dissolved, as it did to police them in their tribal relations?

Mr. ELSTON. I see no reason whatever for it, and I think that the activity in the matter of policing should be a decreasing one, although the gentleman must remember that in some of the outlying Indian country the need is just as great. They are still living in a rather wild country, and possibly Indian policemen are needed, but in States like Oklahoma, Wisconsin, and Michigan, where a great many of these policemen are located, it seems unnecessary to continue them at the full quota that obtained 15 or 20 years ago. This committee in bringing this bill began a reduction in this activity.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is a cut of 25 per cent. Of course, I am not well informed on the subject, but I have seen legislation during my service here which has made so many Indians citizens of the United States, who are now subject to the ordinary conditions of other citizens, that I wonder if whenever we make them citizens it is also necessary to employ them then as policemen, in order to help them obey the law.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs testified to the committee at the hearings that not a single tribe had been released from the jurisdiction of the Indian Bureau; that there are more Indians now under the Indian Bureau than there were 30 years ago, when the act providing for allotment was passed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There may be more under the Indian Bureau, so far as property is concerned, but not as to citizenship of the United States.

Mr. SNYDER. Our investigation shows that in 1920 there were only 285 Indians who were declared competent and made citizens. There are 250,000 incompetent Indians, according to the bureau's figures, which, I believe, are at least 50,000 out of the way. That would make at least 50,000 families of five each, who would certainly propagate at the rate of two-thirds of a child per annum, and if that is so we certainly have an increase annually of fifteen or twenty thousand incompetent Indians. I compliment the chairman of the subcommittee on reducing this amount. I think it should be done. I would like to have seen it go out altogether. They have all sorts of officers around these reservations to take care of the Indians, and they do not need half as much care as they give them. However, the gentleman has done well in cutting it to $50,000, and I have no objection, but I do not want anybody to get the idea that the Indian question as it exists to-day is a receding question, because it is an increasing question, and the burden and obligation of the people of the country is getting greater every day by reason of it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman recently reported a bill which practically gave every Indian in the United States citizenship, and I suppose after they become citizens they will cost more than they do now.

Mr. SNYDER. That may be so.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 23, insert:

"PAY OF JUDGES OF INDIAN COURTS.

"For pay of judges of Indian courts where tribal relations now exist, $7,000."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment. This item is one of the regular Indian Bureau items taken out on a point of order after the bill was introduced in the House, and is the usual amount carried, and is in the same amount carried in the bill of last year.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 15, strike out "Provided, That not to exceed $15,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended out of applicable funds in the work of determining the competency of Indians on Indian reservations outside of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma," and insert "Provided further, That not exceeding $3,000 of this amount shall be immediately available for the purchase of a bookkeeping machine, with incidental equipment and supplies, in the Office of Indian Affairs: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay for certain law books purchased for the Office of Indian Affairs at an expense of $488.70, from the appropriation for general expenses of the Indian Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment, and agree to the same with the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ELSTON moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 20, and agree to the same with the following amendment:

Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, and after the word "Oklahoma" in the matter so restored insert a colon and the matter inserted by said amendment.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, this amendment restores the language that has been carried in Indian appropriation bills for many years and seems to be consistent with the policy adopted by the Indian Affairs Committee. With regard to the item of $3,000 for the purchase of a bookkeeping machine, it will be noted this is an authorization to expend it out of applicable appropriations. Hearings were had, and it was shown to the committee of the House that this $3,000 for the purchase of a bookkeeping machine would immensely aid the department in its work.

Mr. MADDEN. What kind of a machine would it be to cost $3,000?

Mr. ELSTON. I could not state, but I am informed it is absolutely necessary, and the same showing was made to the Senate committee and they believed it was necessary.

Mr. MADDEN. The only kind of a bookkeeping machine that I ever knew was one operated by a man or woman.

Mr. ELSTON. Now, in regard to the item of $488.70, I am informed that the Indian Bureau came to the Indian Affairs Committee for an appropriation in that amount. I am told that out of the conversations had with the Indian Affairs Committee the officials believed they had authority to buy these books, under the impression it would pass the comptroller. They bought these books and they found the comptroller would not pass the item, and they wish now to pay for the books out of the general appropriation. I believe both of these items are necessary, and the question does not involve anything except the authorization to pay out an amount which would be spent anyway. I think it might be just as well spent on general improvements in the office as spent in some other way.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Did the department have the authority to buy these books?

Mr. ELSTON. They thought they had, but I think the Committee on Indian Affairs said it was all right and to go ahead without congressional action.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I take it the department does not ask a Member of Congress as to whether the law gave the department certain authority to buy books. If they do, they want to get a new head of the department.

Mr. ELSTON. I am giving the gentleman statements which were made by bureau officials in testifying before the Senate committee.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The bureau's official who gets in a casual conversation with a Member of Congress and asks him whether he thought the law authorized the bureau official to do it and get the Member of Congress to say yes ought to be thrown out of office for pure incompetency.

Mr. ELSTON. But let me explain. The question was put not to a Member of Congress but it was put by bureau officials to the Indian Affairs Committee in speaking upon an estimate made by the bureau of this very amount.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That might be a little stronger, but I am very much surprised that any committee would undertake to give legal information to a department.

Mr. ELSTON. Well, the gentleman will understand I was not a member of the committee at that time, so far as I remember, or was not present, and I have no recollection of this incident.

Mr. SNYDER. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, as a member of the committee for six years, I have not any recollection of anybody coming in and asking a question of that kind.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think a bureau official who would do that is a fool. I do not know whether in this case he is telling the truth, but he proves himself to be foolish or lies—proves himself to be——

Mr. ELSTON. Of course, I am going on hearsay and information given me as to what the bureau official did. I move the previous question.

Mr. HAWLEY. What is the nature of this particular machine? How does it operate; how do you use it?

Mr. ELSTON. I am not an expert in such matters, and I have said as much as I can in regard to it.

Mr. SNYDER. The point is, if the gentleman will yield, that there has been no proper investigation made of this item, and nobody knows what it is or what it is for, and that is the reason it ought not to stay in the bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. If my colleague from California will yield to me for a minute.

Mr. ELSTON. I will yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. This item was presented to the Committee on Appropriations on making up this bill. It was stated that the tabulating machine was a labor-saving machine.

Mr. MADDEN. But a tabulating machine is not a bookkeeping machine.

Mr. HASTINGS. And it was said that it would be of great assistance to the department.

Mr. SNYDER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Does he recall that the assistant commissioner said this would decrease the number of employees in the bureau?

Mr. HASTINGS. He said it would render them much more efficient and enable them to do a great deal more work.

Mr. HAWLEY. If this is a tabulating machine, it would be nearer $300 than $3,000.

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not know the particular character of the machine.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California to concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 21: Page 14, line 5, strike out the word "four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "six."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, this is an item——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. This is an item, as the committee knows, that was first stricken out on a point of order, and then it was found that there was statutory law for four inspectors. And the item stayed in the bill, taking care of four inspectors. Now they have raised it to six, as it was originally in the bill, and it is simply adding to this bill two absolutely superfluous positions. So far as I have been able to find, even the four that the law gives the right to legislate for do little or nothing, and now we are arranging it so that we can continue two more. And it is absolutely a wrong proposition and ought not to be left in the bill. Four are ample. Six, of course, could be employed if you would arrange to appropriate for them. They could draw their pay and ride around from one section of the Indian country to another and do nobody any good. I am opposed to it, and it ought to be stricken out.

Mr. ELSTON. Of course, the gentleman must realize that he, as chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, has approved this number of six ever since he has been on the committee?

Mr. SNYDER. Ah, but the gentleman does not stop to consider the fact that since we reported the last appropriation bill the gentleman has been in the field and knows what the inspectors do and what the work amounts to.

Mr. ELSTON. If there is any argument to be obtained from practice and habit on the part of the Indian Affairs Committee, of which the gentleman has been chairman for the past two years, then I should say that is an absolutely convincing argument this should remain at six. If you go into the question at this time of whether four or six are necessary, I believe it is the best money you can expend, to bring in true reports so that Congress can be advised. I believe this is the best money we can spend with good Indian inspectors, and I believe under the new administration we will have a good opportunity to get them.

Mr. SNYDER. I believe it is true if you have good ones, and if you can get them. I appreciate that, as a political proposition, I am standing here against the interests of patronage. But four men can do all the work that is necessary to be done, and the gentleman knows that.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 22: Page 15, at the top of the page, insert:

"INDUSTRY AMONG INDIANS.

"For the purpose of encouraging industry and self-support among the Indians and to aid them in the culture of fruits, grains, and other crops, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, which sum may be used for the purchase of seeds, animals, machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment necessary, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, to enable Indians to become self-supporting: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1930: Provided further, That not to exceed $20,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be expended on any one reservation or for the benefit of any one tribe of Indians, and that no part of this appropriation shall be used for the purchase of tribal herds."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment. It is the same item that has been carried in the Indian appropriation bill for many years, with a like amount, and was put out on a point of order; but I understand that it has been the policy of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California that the House recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 23: Page 16, after line 5, insert:

"SUPPRESSING CONTAGIOUS DISEASES AMONG LIVE STOCK OF INDIANS.

"For reimbursing Indians for live stock which may be hereafter destroyed on account of being infected with dourine or other contagious diseases, and for expenses in connection with the work of eradicating and preventing such diseases, to be expended under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, $20,000."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment. This is the same text that has always been carried in the bill, but the Senate reduced the amount that was carried in the House bill.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. I yield.

Mr. GARD. Is this item, for the purpose of suppressing contagious diseases, in addition to the work done through the Department of Agriculture? This is done by the direction of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. ELSTON. This is in addition to what is done by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. GARD. Does the Department of Agriculture do any work among the stock of the Indians?

Mr. ELSTON. I am informed that they do not. They regard that as under the jurisdiction of the Indian Bureau.

Mr. GANDY. Will the gentleman yield on that?

Mr. GARD. I will.

Mr. GANDY. This item is used to pay for animals that have been destroyed, animals belonging to the Indians, by the veterinarians of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. GARD. It says "For expenses in connection with the work of eradicating such diseases."

Mr. GANDY. Of course, that is true, but that is a small portion of the expense.

Mr. ELSTON. I will state to the gentleman that three or four years ago this appropriation was $100,000.

Mr. GARD. I am not questioning the amount. I was merely questioning the policy of whether it would be a duplication of work.

Mr. ELSTON. There is no duplication.

Mr. CARTER. I think practically all of this is to pay for horses that are killed, which comes under the eradication and prevention of diseases. It may be that there are some expenses connected with gentlemen going about among these Indians, but that represents only a small amount. The larger portion of it is for paying for horses that have been destroyed.

Mr. GARD. What is the amount of the reduction?

Mr. ELSTON. It has been reduced $20,000.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. Certainly.

Mr. TINCHER. This seems to be an appropriation to pay salaries of these gentlemen who are still holding on to the positions of veterinarian for the purpose of eradicating dourine among horses, although the disease was eradicated several years ago. The testimony adduced before the Committee on Agriculture last year was to the effect that the disease had been eradicated. The department did not ask for any substantial appropriation this year, and they assured us they would not ask for an appropriation last year. I was wondering if, while the Department of Agriculture and the whole country think this disease is eradicated, and has been eradicated for several years, we should still continue in these positions the men who want to keep them?

Mr. ELSTON. The bill last year carried $40,000, and only $10,000 was used for salaries.

Mr. TINCHER. They kill a pony or two among these Indians on the ground that they have dourine, notwithstanding the fact that, according to the testimony of the Department of Agriculture, the disease has been stamped out.

Mr. SNYDER. In this item, as in the case of others, we reduce the amount but we do not reduce the activity on the part of the bureau. They keep right on spending money, whether you appropriate it or not. Right now, in the first deficiency appropriation which passed the Senate yesterday, the Indian Bureau comes in with $1,000,000 of deficit, covering almost every item in this bill, including nearly $300,000 for schools and $200,000 for transportation.

I talked with the assistant commissioner this morning about it, and he says, "There is no law that will stop us from continuing to spend appropriations when the appropriations run out"; so that what the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] said is a fact. The report last year was that but $10,000 was spent for salaries. You reduce this appropriation to $20,000, but do you think they will reduce any salaries or stop the paying of any of the men? Not by any means. They will not discontinue paying for the Indian ponies destroyed. They will continue it. There is a million dollars for the Indian Bureau incorporated in the deficiency bill which passed the Senate yesterday. There has not been a bill presented to this House where greater care was taken by the committee which framed it to keep the items within the proper amount and give each activity the proper amount required for its service than the Indian appropriation bill which passed a year ago, although I did have the honor to report it.

Mr. ELSTON. In the Indian appropriation bill last year we carried $40,000 for this item. This bill carries $20,000.

Mr. SNYDER. I congratulate the gentleman on cutting down the amount; but I am pointing out the fact that it makes no difference whether you reduce the items or not—the department goes on spending the money just the same.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. ELSTON. I move that the House recede and concur.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves that the House recede and concur. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 24: Page 16, line 14, insert the following:

"DEVELOPING WATER FOR INDIAN STOCK.

"For improving springs, drilling wells, and otherwise developing and conserving water for the use of Indian stock, including the purchase, construction, and installation of pumping machinery, tanks, troughs, and other necessary equipment, and for necessary investigations and surveys, for the purpose of increasing the available grazing range on unallotted lands on Indian reservations, $40,000, to be reimbursed under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That the necessity exists on any Indian reservation so far as the Indians themselves are concerned."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur on this amendment. It is the same as that carried in the bill for many years last past.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from California.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 25: Page 17, line 9, insert the following:
"That section 26 of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920,' approved June 30, 1919 (Public, No. 3, 66th Cong.), be amended as follows:
"That wherever the term 'metalliferous' is used in said section 26 of the above-entitled act, it shall hereafter be defined and construed by the Secretary of the Interior to include magnesite, gypsum, limestone, and asbestos."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement and agree with the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves that the House recede from its disagreement and agree with the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ELSTON moves that the House recede from its disagreement to amendment No. 25 and agree to the same with the following amendment: In line 9 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out the word "hereafter."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I wish the chairman of the committee would give a little explanation of what that is.

Mr. ELSTON. This was an amendment to the act which permitted leases of the mineral rights on some Indian lands. The definition was supposed to include all minerals. Many applications have been made upon that interpretation, and the Bureau of Indian Affairs is anxious to close for the benefit of the Indians certain leases which would be for their benefit, but they find that the definition in the bill does not cover these additional substances. The original act gives discretion to the Secretary of the Interior to fix the rules for leases and arrange terms, so that it is within the control of the Government as to what leases shall be made and what they shall contain.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman refresh his memory of what was the act of June 30, 1919? Was that the bill authorizing the lease of oil lands on Indian reservations?

Mr. ELSTON. No; that is not the act.

Mr. FERRIS. What is that act?

Mr. ELSTON. I will yield to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], who I have no doubt can answer that.

Mr. HAYDEN. Section 26 of the Indian appropriation act referred to provided for a method of leasing Indian lands for the purpose of metalliferous mining. It applies only to metals, such as gold, silver, copper, and lead. The purpose of this amendment, as I understand it, is to include magnesite, gypsum, limestone, and asbestos, and to call them "metalliferous minerals" for the purposes of that act, in order that leases may be made under the same conditions as leases are made for metalliferous minerals.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We may legislate and say that limestone is metalliferous, but we may lie about it. It will have the same effect.

Mr. HAYDEN. It might well read, "For the purposes of this act these four nonmetalliferous minerals shall be considered to be metalliferous."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What is the purpose of that word "hereafter"?

Mr. HAYDEN. I am not informed as to why the House conferees desire that change.

Mr. SNYDER. I will enlighten the gentleman, if I can. In the act passed last year, or the one you are talking about, the act of June 30, 1919, the country was opened up for prospecting for these metals. But the comptroller or the Secretary of the Interior did not understand that the definition of "metalliferous" included metals that have been found by people who have gone in there and developed mining, so that there is production of asbestos, and if this law went through with the word "thereafter" in it, those men who have located there would have to get off and others could locate on the same mining operations.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The word "thereafter" is not in here at all. It is "hereafter."

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman has moved to strike out the word "hereafter."

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think it would have any such effect as the gentleman from New York thinks, but I would like to ask the gentleman from California what he thinks will be the effect of striking out the word "hereafter"?

Mr. ELSTON. Some of the proposed lessees have gone in, believing that under an interpretation of the act they were acting within the law.

Mr. SNYDER. That is it.

Mr. ELSTON. If the language is carried as it is in the amendment, it might put them out of possession and let some claim jumper come in and supersede them. Their equities appear quite strong. I am informed by the bureau that it will have full control over this matter, and that it will exact the same from the present claimants that it would from new claimants. So the Government can not be prejudiced, and the amendment would only protect those who have very strong equities in their present position.

Mr. DEMPSEY. In other words, it will make it apply from the date of the present law instead of from the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. ELSTON. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 26: Page 17, line 20, insert:
"That the restricted allotment of any Indian may be leased for farming and grazing purposes by the allottee or his heirs, subject only to the approval of the superintendent or other officer in charge of the reservation where the land is located, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe."

Mr. ELSTON. I move to recede and concur with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, line 25, after the word "prescribe," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following:
"Provided, That this provision shall not apply to the Five Civilized Tribes."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, this amendment was put on by the Senate, but I am informed that it has the full approval of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. SNYDER]. I am told by him and by the chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee of the Senate that if this amendment goes into effect it will save a very large amount of money and a tremendous amount of time in the Indian Service. The amendment which I propose is necessary by reason of the fact that the Five Civilized Tribes are subject to a separate act, so that this provision ought not to prevail as to them.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 27: Page 18, after line 11, insert:
"For new buildings and additions to and remodeling of present buildings, $50,000."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves that the House recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ELSTON moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 27 and agree to the same with the following amendment: In line 2 of the matter inserted by the said amendment, after the word "buildings," insert the following: "At the Indian School, Phoenix, Ariz."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, investigation was made by the subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs who went into the Indian country of the situation at the Phoenix school, and they came to the conclusion that it presents about as great a necessity for a new building as could be imagined. The school gave a demonstration of the inadequacy of the present assembly hall to hold the students. They were crowded clear to the doors, and 100 or more could not get into the assembly hall at all. The situation is deplorable, in view of the high standard that this school has maintained.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 31: Page 21, line 17, after the figures "1916," strike out "$100,000" and insert: "$75,000 to be immediately available: Provided, however, That not exceeding $50,000 of the appropriations available for the construction of this project may be used in the purchase of such land, right of ways, constructed or partly constructed canals, and other physical properties deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Interior in connection with such project.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in this amendment. It will be observed that the Senate in this amendment has reduced the House appropriation by $25,000, but it has added certain language which was favorably considered by the House and inserted in the committee bill but stricken out on a point of order.

The language is necessary to properly make use of the reduced appropriation. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an investigation by the Secretary of the Interior of the conditions with respect to the necessity of constructing a bridge across the Colorado River at or near Lees Ferry, Ariz., $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purpose, and the said Secretary is hereby authorized and directed to cause surveys, plans, and reports to be made, together with an estimated limit of the cost of said bridge, and to submit same to Congress as soon as possible, with his recommendation as to what proportionate part of the cost of the construction of said bridge, if any, shall be paid by the United States.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ELSTON moves to recede and concur with the following amendment: In lieu of the sum of "$1,000" named in said amendment, insert the sum of "$1,200."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, it was represented that this was a very necessary investigation.

Mr. HAYDEN. One end of this proposed bridge will be in the Navajo Reservation and, if constructed, it would give access to what is now a very remote section of northern Arizona. What the ultimate cost will be is to be determined by investigation.

Mr. CARTER. There is no provision as to what part of the cost of the investigation is to be paid by the Indians and by the Government of the United States. The amount taken from the Treasury ought to be reimbursable.

Mr. ELSTON. I have no objection to such a modification.

Mr. CARTER. Would it not be better to provide that the amount paid by the United States is to be reimbursable from the fund of the Navajo Indians?

Mr. HAYDEN. The bill might properly be amended in that way.

Mr. ELSTON. I would accept that.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, this is clearly legislation put on by the Senate and is properly before the House, so far as that is concerned. If we put the item into the bill as legislation, when the investigation is completed where will the report go, to the Committee on Appropriations or to the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. HAYDEN. The report would be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Committee on Indian Affairs will get the report and the Committee on Appropriations will move to concur in the Senate amendment and make the appropriation.

Mr. SNYDER. That is the point, and no one has any information.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Committee on Indian Affairs could not make the appropriation.

Mr. CARTER. The Indian Committee has the blessed privilege of receiving the report. [Laughter.]

Mr. SNYDER. That is about all. The things that have happened this afternoon convinces me more fully than I have been at any time that no matter what we do under the rule we get the reverse of what we were told the rule was going to give us. In other words, the rule was made so that the Senate could not legislate without the consent of the House. What is the effect? Estimates come from the bureau with such legislation as they desire. It goes to the Committee on Appropriations and they take out such legislation as they think would not go through, making no investigation of the items that they throw out. It comes to the House, the House takes a number of items out, and it goes to the Senate and the Senate puts every one of them back except two, hangs everything on to it including the kitchen stove without a particle of investigation; that is a matter of record. It comes back to the House, and we are asked to take this legislation without anybody in the House having any knowledge whatever, and 90 per cent of the Members who know nothing about it come in and vote with the committee, with the result that it does not matter what is in here, good, bad, or indifferent, if the chairman of the subcommittee, who is the only man that has any knowledge of what is in the bill, and that knowledge is only from his own investigation and what little he gets from the conferees—all the rest come in and support it, and we are going to enact from now on laws in this country that 90 per cent of the Members do not know anything about and have no way of finding out unless they sit here and listen to the arguments.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I have been rather indulgent to the gentleman in yielding time——

Mr. SNYDER. The chairman, I am sure, will appreciate that I have certain rights.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I will take two minutes out of my time to make an observation upon this question, as gentlemen know I have made no reference heretofore to outside matters. The gentleman from New York does not describe the situation with absolute correctness. Before the new rule was passed the House conferees could agree to every legislative item added by the Senate, and the House would have to vote it up or vote it down as a whole. The House had no privilege of passing on new items separately. Now what happens? The Senate puts on legislative items and the House conferees have no right to even consider them.

We bring them in here, and all we do is to throw them before the House and say, "Do as you please; let the House legislate as it pleases."

Mr. SNYDER. Without any knowledge whatever of the provisions.

Mr. ELSTON. That is the answer to the gentleman's position.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman states it all right, except the fact that the House has no knowledge of these items on which to base a vote.

Mr. ELSTON. How much knowledge did the Members of the House have before, when the Senate put on these legislative items and the House was obliged to vote them up or down in a conference report? Formerly they brought in a conference report and sometimes put it through without any explanation. We at least are giving the House a little more than it ever had before.

Mr. SNYDER. But heretofore 98 per cent of the legislation that was on appropriation bills had been investigated by a committee.

Mr. ELSTON. The gentleman knows that most of these legislative items have been considered by the Senate committee and many of them by the House committee. Under the former system it was about the same, so far as investigation is concerned.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. I would like to have everybody hear this intelligent discussion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. BEGG (interrupting the count). Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order of no quorum for the time being.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement with reference to the discussion just had between the gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER]. It has been the policy of the Indian Committee in the past and the policy of the House conferees on the Indian appropriation bill to refuse to accept such amendments as these unless such amendments had theretofore had consideration by the House Committee on Indian Affairs. Certainly there may have been times when that rule was not adhered to strictly, but usually—in fact, I think almost universally—the House conferees would insist upon the rights of the House, and the Senate conferees would, of course, recede, the possible exception being matters which had been formerly thoroughly considered by the House Committee on Indian Affairs and favorably reported, and even then we would sometimes find that the House conferees had made a mistake.

Mr. ELSTON. If the gentleman will consult section 3906 of Hinds' Precedents, he will see what policy the House has adopted with reference to legislative matter put on by the Senate, and where the House adopted the policy as a matter of fact, as a matter of practice, to recede where the Senate absolutely insisted on its legislative amendments.

Mr. CARTER. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is mistaken about that. The rule has always been between legislative bodies, if one body puts legislative matter on a bill as an amendment to which the other will not agree, that the body that adds it recedes.

Mr. CARTER. And is not that the rule with reference to all amendments obnoxious to the rules placed on all appropriation bills?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. A new proposition inserted by either House is receded from in the end if the other House will not agree to it. I would like now to ask something about this proposition, if it is not out of order. The gentleman proposes now an amendment to reduce an item of $1,000 to $500 for making plans for this bridge. Is it not perfectly certain that $500 will not provide the plans?

Mr. ELSTON. I think $500 will do about as much as $1,000, and inasmuch as the sum is inadequate I believe it will be only sufficient to make a rough reconnoissance to find out the necessity for it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That would be a waste of $500. Here is a provision requiring the Secretary to cause surveys, plans, and reports to be made with an estimate of the limited cost of the bridge. He has got to make the plans and ascertain the probable cost of the bridge. They can not do that for $500. It will be just wasting that much money, because we would have to do it all over again.

Mr. ELSTON. The gentleman is much more experienced than I, but I feel that $1,000 is too much and that $500 is about as much as I am willing to propose. If that is not enough, the gentleman can draw his own conclusions as to the adequacy of the amendment. I move the previous question on the motion.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to permit the gentleman, when I am asking him a question, to take me off my feet by moving the previous question.

Mr. ELSTON. Oh, I withdraw that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Because if it is to be the practice when these Senate amendments come back from the Senate for consideration in the House that, under the pressure of business, the gentleman having the right to move the previous question, can do so and foreclose the consideration of amendments, then this rule will not last very long. I know the pressure the gentleman is under. I understand that, but if the rule is to remain, it must be proper for Members of the House who wish to know about the Senate amendment to make inquiry about it, even if the gentleman representing the House on the conference committee does not know anything about it.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I have the greatest consideration in the world for the gentleman's opinion and for his learning and his experience. I have no intention whatever of taking the gentleman off his feet. I withdraw my motion for the previous question. The gentleman stated it right when he spoke of the pressure that I am under. If we take an average of half an hour or 20 minutes to each of these 57 amendments we are going to take three days on this bill. I feel a certain obligation in closing as rapidly as possible. I yield to the gentleman five minutes, if he wishes to use that time.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, we are confronted with this proposition: If this provision were in a bill reported to the House it would be subject to consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and would be debated probably for a time long enough to find out something about it. Somebody would know about it.

We are now told that under pressure in the last days of the Congress we can not even have 10 minutes on an amendment of the Senate. We must swallow the amendments without knowledge or reject them without information. I want to know whether under this rule we are put in the position where the House must act speedily without knowing anything? If that is the case, if these amendments are to be brought in here by gentlemen who say they have never heard of them at all until some Senator told them how necessary they are, then the rule does not work very well. I know very well that over in another distinguished legislative body, which I shall not name, it is the custom for any Member of that body, however lowly he may be, to merely say he wants an amendment stuck on an appropriation bill, and it goes on as a matter of right in the opinion of the gentleman who offers it, and if he does not get it then there is a row in that other legislative body that nearly breaks it up. Hence, the amendments are put on.

I have not heard before that because a distinguished Member of another legislative body, or a distinguished Senator of the United States, told the conferees on the part of the House that he wanted an amendment about which they knew nothing and about which he furnished no information, that therefore you could not discuss it before the House without the chairman moving to concur in the Senate amendment. I do not know whether we have reached that to-day. I know one Member of another legislative body can control that body, and I wondered if he has equal power to control this body. Are we to concur in Senate amendments without knowing anything about them, simply because some man of another legislative body said he wanted it? It gets my goat. [Laughter.]

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, this item, of course, authorizes an investigation merely. Not knowing the necessity I can not make any observation of what the necessity is. It is represented that there is a situation concerning which we should have information. I move the previous question.

Mr. CARTER. I want to move an amendment.

Mr. ELSTON. The gentleman's amendment is that it is to be reimbursed——

Mr. CARTER. I will send it to the Clerk's desk and I ask to have it reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CARTER to Senate amendment No. 32: After the words "United States," strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the following: "and if authorized to be paid, to be reimbursed from the tribal funds of the Navajo Indians."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment on that? The amendment does not mean anything.

Mr. SNYDER. Not a thing.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This provision says there shall be a report of how much shall be paid by the United States. Now, the gentleman's amendment was intended to mean how much shall be paid by the United States and be reimbursed from the money of the Indians, but it does not accomplish anything.

Mr. CARTER. That is my purpose, and I certainly think it does. If the gentleman has any suggestion to offer, I would be very glad to hear it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think if we had time to sit down we could prepare a proper provision to cover it; but this provision as it reads says how much the United States shall contribute, and I assume that means out of the Federal Treasury. The balance probably would be paid by the Indians. The gentleman's amendment proposes how much shall be paid by the United States to be reimbursed.

Mr. CARTER. As I understand this, Mr. Speaker, a part of this is to be paid perhaps by some authority here and the other part out of the Indians' fund, and what I am trying to avoid is having any part paid out of the United States Treasury without having it reimbursed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am with the gentleman. I want to do what he wants, but I think, as reported, it would dodge it.

Mr. SNYDER. Since nobody seems to know anything about it at all, a proper amendment would be to strike it out altogether.

The gentleman can reject that; that is perfectly within the province of the House.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have my amendment again reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. CARTER. I think this does exactly what I am trying to do, but I have so much respect for the gentleman's opinion that I would like to ask——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What do they report?

Mr. CARTER. They are to report what the cost of construction of said bridge is and what part, if any, shall be paid by the United States, and then we might put the words "reimbursable from the funds of the Navajo Indians." The other was a little more specific.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What the gentleman has in his mind is a provision to require that any money which the United States shall contribute shall be paid out of the funds of the Indians?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But this is not the requirement at all except that the Secretary of the Interior shall submit a report or recommendation.

Mr. CARTER. Yes; and give them that right, if the gentleman will permit, to recommend what part shall be paid by the United States. Now, I did not want to make that recommendation without at the same time making it so that that shall be reimbursable from the tribal funds.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman can not do that at this time. The report, if the gentleman's amendment is agreed to, may do some good. The report will be a recommendation as to how much shall be paid by the United States, to be reimbursed out of the Indian funds.

Mr. CARTER. That is exactly what I want the report to show.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The report would do that anyhow, probably.

Mr. CARTER. There is no direction here for the committee to report anything about the tribal funds, if the gentleman will notice, and I wanted to be sure there was something in the report which would not leave the House to believe that any indication had been made that this bridge should be built from Treasury funds without being reimbursable.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But the Secretary would still be able to report how much was to be paid out of the Federal Treasury not to be reimbursable and how much would be paid out of the Federal Treasury that would be reimbursable.

Mr. CARTER. The thing I am trying to avoid is to have anything paid out of the Federal Treasury without being reimbursed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman's amendment will not accomplish that.

Mr. CARTER. I think it will.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I would like to know whether a motion to disagree to the Senate amendment is now in order?

The SPEAKER. There is already a motion pending. If that is voted down, the motion will be in order. The present motion is preferential over a motion to disagree.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If I may be indulged for a moment, I wish to say that I have listened to this discussion, and if anyone who is not a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs or not a member of the Committee on Appropriations now has sufficient information to vote upon this Senate amendment No. 32 I would like to have him rise in his seat and be recorded. I think the only thing to do is to disagree to the amendment.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I have explained as fully as I could that here is a project as to which there is nothing certain. I want to find out about it. This is an investigation to find out if the prima facie allegations are important and sufficient. There is no evidence so far as to whether they are or not. That is what the investigation is for.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What I wanted to say was, as to whether $500 is an adequate amount, or $5,000 is an adequate amount, nobody can tell from this discussion.

Mr. ELSTON. Nobody can tell. Therefore I have put it as low as I can.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON] to recede and concur with an amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 12.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 34, page 22, line 20, insert: "The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell and convey at the appraised value of same at the time of sale the land and buildings known as United States Indian day school, located in the southwestern part of the city of Tucson, to school district No. 1, Pima County, Ariz., for use as a public school: Provided, That Indian children residing in that district shall be received therein at all times on equal terms with white children."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves to recede and concur in the amendment.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Of course, this is clearly legislation, a new item, and no one knows anything about it, either as a member of the committee or as a Member of the House, except what information the subcommittee may have received as conferees. It clearly has no place on an Indian appropriation bill; but under the rule and under the method and under the sentiment that seems to prevail here in the House to-day, I have not any doubt but that it will be inserted in the bill. It looks like if all these items go in the bill that have been put in in the Senate, the bill would be increased several million dollars over what it carried when it left the House. Notwithstanding the fact that our distinguished leaders and all the leaders that are operating the machine here are talking economy all the time, there is not one of them here this afternoon defending these increases that are being made in this appropriation bill. What is the use of gentlemen getting up here and making statements in sequence on these appropriation bills as they have passed the House, showing the country we have saved $1,200,000,000, when on each one of the bills that is brought back they have to admit that they not only carry all that the estimates call for, but an addition, even, to the estimates. That is what this will show when we get through with this bill to-night or Monday, namely, that the appropriations carried in these very amendments we are putting in here now are due to the fact that the House will not stand up and vote against the items and thereby carry out the wishes of the leaders and the statements that they are giving to the House, and endeavoring to make good on those statements by holding another body down to the amounts we put in the appropriation bill. Instead of that, we are staying here, only a few of us, and are voting against that thing.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Do I understand the gentleman to say that when we had finished, if we went on as we are now doing, the items in the bill would exceed the sum in the estimates?

Mr. SNYDER. The bill as it has already passed the Senate is more than a million dollars over the estimates, and if we put the items in this bill that are asked for by the Senate it will be within $100,000 to $200,000 of the estimates.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. CRAMTON. Is it not a fact that up to date in this discussion this afternoon the largest item that has been approved, adding to the amount in the House bill, was an item that was, in the discussion, recommended to this committee by the gentleman from New York, amounting to something like $400,000?

Mr. SNYDER. Which one is that?

Mr. CRAMTON. It is the largest one, as I recollect, that we have had before us.

Mr. SNYDER. I do not recall recommending any of them.

Mr. CRAMTON. It was an item of $400,000, which I understood the gentleman to say was necessary.

Mr. SNYDER. That was an integral part of the bill when it was brought into the House, when we came in here.

Mr. CRAMTON. The largest item added this afternoon was recommended by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNYDER. No. The gentleman is making a misleading statement. He is trying to put statements in the gentleman's mouth that he did not say. That is an integral part of this service, and I had no objection to its going in.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does not that confirm what I said, that the gentleman says "it is an integral part," and that it is necessary?

Mr. SNYDER. Well, we have a right to discuss a thing about these items, and I do not propose to be swept off my feet here unless the House wishes to do it and unless I have had my rights.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am not sure that I have any conception of what the responsibilities of a Member of Congress are. It is entirely possible that my ideas may be exalted and that I may be forced to erroneous conclusions. But I simply want to call the attention, not of the House—I do not care anything about the House—I want to call the attention of the people who are reading the newspapers to this budget system, and particularly to this fact: The lower House of Congress this afternoon is sitting here going through a farce so far as honest legislation is concerned. I have not had time to compute line by line, but I am going to make an estimate, and I will stand for a correction if I am wild. One-fourth of this bill is being passed on this fashion: The gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON]—and I have no quarrel with him in the least; he is doing what you or I would do if we had his position—the gentleman from California rises in his place and says, "I move that the House recede and concur." Now, recede from what? Nobody knows. Nobody in this House has the least conception of what he is receding from. Concur in what? Why, in whatever was sent over from the other side of the building.

Now, we go out before the country every two years and we make a great splurge about what we will do if the people send us to Congress. I am ready to say to you that I am willing to go back and tell my people that there is no use in sending me here, but all that is needed now is to wire down an O. K. for whatever the committee of 35 sees fit for the country.

Talk about rights on the floor! Of course, we have rights. I can have a right to talk 5 minutes, or I might get 15 if I got bully and should make a point of order or say that I would make a point of order if they did not give it to me.

But what do you think? There is not a single item changed when the chairman stands up and says, "Put it over."

It seems to me it is preposterous. It seems to me it is terribly ridiculous that in America, where it is the boast and the foundation stone of progress from the start, that the power of initiating legislation rests with this body and not in the other body, not in the committee of 35. For a man who claims to know anything about the budget system to say that the budget system can not be made to function in the legislative end of the Government is to deny the fundamental principles upon which our Government was founded. A legislative budget system is a farce and a misnomer. An executive budget is all right, and the men who are responsible for foisting this kind of a proposition on the country have to convict themselves of either one of two things, either of wanting to control all the power or else of not knowing the condition that they are throwing this country and everybody else into. Why, I am getting letters from colleges. I got a great long questionnaire this morning from a college debating society with 10 questions. One of them was, "Are you in favor of a legislative budget system that deprives the House of the right to add to or subtract from the budget as sent down from the Executive offices?"

Now, I simply warn you men. I admit that I am only a cub in legislation, but I am not a cub in judging as to where men are driving to, and I will say to you and I warn you men who are backing this thing that inside of a decade, if you continue, you will have surrendered the only vestige of control; you will have surrendered your control not from this body to the other on the hill, but from this end of the Government to the Executive end of the Government.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask how the time is running?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BEGG. I should like to have a couple of minutes more. I admit it is possibly getting a little uncomfortable.

Mr. ELSTON. I would be perfectly willing to yield to the gentleman two minutes if I thought we could thrash out this whole budget system in that time without any reply from any other gentleman.

Mr. BEGG. I will say to the gentleman that I have not taken a single minute for a week or two. I have been listening.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California yields to the gentleman from Ohio two minutes more.

Mr. BEGG. Now, let us get back to the fundamental principle of why we are down here, why we sit in a body known as the Congress at all. In the first place, I have not forgotten my history that when the first legislative body ever sat it was out of the comparing of the different ideas on every question, it was through a getting together of extreme views on every question that we obtained our system of Government, and it is only going to be by the preservation of that system that will permit us to do that very thing that we will have anything like a guaranty of permanency in the functioning of the Government. To say that we can legislate on all the legislative provisions of government is again to me a farce. I want to ask you Members of the House how much time will you be required to be in this House annually if they take away from you every single bit of the power to decide on the appropriations for the various branches of the Government? You say you will be busy all the time sitting and hearing. What are you going to hear, after you get your fundamental law? I am one Congressman who is not afraid to say to the country that if we should pass the appropriation bills and go home the country would be better off in 10 years' time, rather than have us sit here and bring in all kinds of freak legislation that will do nothing except come back and slap us in the face inside of a year or two.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HASTINGS. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported. There is not a dollar of charge upon the Treasury in this amendment 34 that has been debated.

Mr. ELSTON. The amendment amounts to nothing.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk again reported amendment 34.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 36: Page 23, line 11, insert: "For the purchase of lands for the homeless Indians in California, including improvements thereon, for the use and occupancy of said Indians, $10,000, said funds to be expended under such regulations and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 37: Page 24, line 17, insert: "For the improvement and construction of roads and bridges on the Yuma Indian Reservation in California, $10,000, reimbursable to the United States by the Indians having tribal rights on said reservation."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in that amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 40: Page 25, line 19, insert:

"IOWA.

"SEC. 5a. For the construction, maintenance, and operation of a drainage system for lands of the Sac and Fox Indians in Iowa, $10,000: Provided, That any moneys expended for this purpose shall be reimbursed out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the said Sac and Fox Indians: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to enter into agreements, or make other suitable arrangements, with owners of adjacent lands benefited by the construction of such drainage system as will insure from such owners payment, on a per acre basis, of a proportionate part of the construction, operation, and maintenance of said drainage system."

Mr. ELSTON. I move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the amendment with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"IOWA.

"SEC. 5a. For the construction, maintenance, and operation of a drainage system for lands of the Sac and Fox Indians in Iowa, $10,000, payable from the tribal funds of such Indians: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to enter into agreements or make other suitable arrangements with owners of adjacent lands benefited by the construction of such drainage system as will insure from such owners payment, on a per-acre basis of a proportionate part of the construction, operation, and maintenance of said drainage system."

Mr. WALSH. What is the idea of this amendment?

Mr. ELSTON. The amendment is to make this appropriation payable out of the tribal funds instead of out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. WALSH. The Senate amendment provides that, does it not?

Mr. ELSTON. No; the Senate amendment provides that these moneys are to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. The amendment which I sent to the Clerk's desk provides that the money shall be paid out of the tribal funds of the Indians.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not reimbursable?

Mr. CARTER. The Senate amendment makes it reimbursable, and this amendment offered by the gentleman from California makes it payable from the tribal fund.

Mr. ELSTON. The Senate amendment appropriates the money out of the Treasury and provides that the Indians shall reimburse the Treasury. My amendment cuts out that provision and makes the tribal fund pay for it. It does not take the money out of the Treasury but makes them pay for their own improvement.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. I will.

Mr. RAKER. In line 5, page 26, it fixes the payment on a per acre basis of a proportionate part of the construction, operation and maintenance of said drainage system. Does the gentleman think that is a fair basis to fix it on?

Mr. ELSTON. I think so in this case, and I hope the gentleman will rest on my statement.

Mr. RAKER. I will, if the gentleman says it is fair under the circumstances.

Mr. CARTER. Let me ask the gentleman if there is any Indian tribal fund?

Mr. ELSTON. There is; they have over $300,000.

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes; we investigated that.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 15962, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, disagree to all of the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate of a bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 15962. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order. We are considering a conference report.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota objects, and the Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For new heating, power, ice, and electric plant, $75,000; for repairs and construction of drain, ditches, and dikes on the Haskell School farm, $18,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur with an amendment which I send to the desk:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ELSTON moves to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 42, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For new heating and power plant, $55,000; for repair and construction of drains, ditches, and dikes on the Haskell School farm, $18,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended."

Mr. CARTER. That adds $73,000 to the bill.

Mr. ELSTON. It does.

Mr. CARTER. We ought to have some explanation of that.

Mr. ELSTON. In regard to the $18,000 item it was shown that there was a cloud-burst over this farm and practically destroyed all the drains and dikes, and unless this work is done immediately the work on the farm can not go on and loss to the Government will ensue, and of course no work can be done in an agricultural way at the school. This work must be done.

In regard to the $55,000 item it is a reduction of $20,000 in the amount carried in the amendment. My amendment proposes to strike out the ice and electric plant and provide only for the heating plant, which is absolutely necessary.

Mr. CARTER. Have they no heating plant there?

Mr. ELSTON. They have one but it is gone, absolutely. It is a wreck and a ruin.

Mr. CARTER. And it can not be repaired?

Mr. ELSTON. It could not be repaired.

Mr. HAYDEN. If there is any such necessity as the gentleman states why is it provided that the fund is to be made available until expended?

Mr. ELSTON. They have to put in drains and dikes, and it will take some little time, and that was added as a precaution. Facts were presented showing that this was absolutely imperative.

Mr. HASTINGS. In addition to what has been said by the gentleman from California, I think this is a very urgent case. It was shown that this school could not run during the coming winter without a new heating plant.

Mr. CARTER. Was this presented to the subcommittee by the Indian Bureau?

Mr. ELSTON. It was.

Mr. CARTER. Why did not the subcommittee include it in the bill?

Mr. HASTINGS. Well, it was a legislative item, and there were threats made against putting in legislative matter.

Mr. CARTER. There were many legislative items included in the bill when it came into the House.

Mr. ELSTON. But the legislative items included in the bill were taken from the old structure of the bill. This was legislation for a new item not ordinarily carried in the bill.

Mr. CARTER. Generally, that was true; but there were exceptions even to that rule.

Mr. ELSTON. Then, the committee probably made a mistake.

Mr. CARTER. If it was so necessary, I do not understand how it is that the subcommittee, after considering it, did not bring some information about it beforehand. I can not understand why it is so much more necessary now than then.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recede and concur.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 43: Page 26, line 16, strike out "$172,600" and insert "$265,600."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to this amendment and concur in the same with the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ELSTON moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 43, and agree to the same with the following amendment: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$245,000."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, this amendment merely corrects the total to conform to the previous amendment just agreed to by the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 47: Page 27, line 1, after the figures "$8,000," insert "for water supply, including laying of pipe line to connect with water system of city of Pipestone, $8,000."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in this amendment. Hearings were had upon this in the subcommittee, and it appeared to be a very necessary item. However, because we did not want to go beyond our jurisdiction we left it out. I recommend that it be now inserted.

Mr. MONDELL. Where is Pipestone?

Mr. ELSTON. It is in Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 45: Page 27, line 3, strike out "$54,650" and insert in lieu thereof "$62,650."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in this amendment. It is a mere correction of a total.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 46: Page 27, after line 9, insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, and to expend the same in the construction of roads and bridges on the Red Lake Indian Reservation, in said State, including the purchase of material, equipment, and supplies, and the employment of labor: Provided, That Indian labor shall be employed as far as practicable."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in this Senate amendment. This amendment is exactly in the same language as the text of the bill reported to the House. It was stricken out on a point of order. It was a regular item in the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 48: Page 29, line 3, after the word "Minnesota," insert: "Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, as soon as practicable, to turn over to the proper authorities of the State of Minnesota all hospital plants and equipment now or previously used in connection with the Chippewa Indian service the use of which is, or may hereafter become, unnecessary in connection with said service, conditioned upon said State first giving satisfactory assurance that said property will at all times be maintained and used by said State for public purposes and that the Chippewa Indians shall at all times be admitted to all State institutions upon the same terms as citizens of said State."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in this amendment. This was carried in the bill reported to the House and was stricken out on a point of order. It is part of an agreement arrived at between the representatives of the Chippewas, both factions, and the bureau officials. It was recommended in that text to the House for insertion in the bill. So far as I know, it should be adopted.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is now moving to recede and concur?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. And overruling the ruling heretofore made upon the point of order?

Mr. ELSTON. So far as it involves that effect; yes.

Mr. CARTER. This is a departure from the usual policy. The usual policy is that these Indian institutions when they are turned over to a State are appraised and sold at not less than the appraised value, and the funds passed into the Indian tribal funds. That has always been the custom since I have been in the committee. I never heard of the Indian government being called upon to give these institutions to the States.

Mr. ELSTON. This is a result of the compromise between all the factions as certified down here.

Mr. CARTER. I think they ought to be paid for.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I am familiar with this situation. Congress failed to appropriate for the service of these hospitals. They have been closed for a year. So far as the White Earth Reservation is concerned, there are a great many Indians there who ought to have the care of this hospital that is there, but there were no funds and the State board of health of the State of Minnesota investigated it and they were afraid that if these patients were not taken care of and hospital accommodations provided that it would be injurious to the people in that vicinity, so they have offered to take over these hospitals. It is not the granting of the land or buildings; it is simply turning them over by the United States to the State and keeping them open, and the Indians are to be admitted on equal terms with white patients.

Mr. CARTER. I do not think the language of the amendment quite justifies the statement by the gentleman that they are turned over, because that might probably indicate that they were to be transferred to the State.

Mr. STEENERSON. I am giving the interpretation placed on it by the Indian Bureau. I just talked with Mr. Merrit, of the Indian Bureau, and this was drafted by the Indian Bureau after a hearing of representatives of the different factions of the Indians, and he maintains that it is not a conveyance of the property, but it is simply turning it over for use.

Mr. CARTER. I call attention to the fact that just recently it became necessary to have hospital ground for the State of Oklahoma in that State, and the only lands left available were part of some sanitorium owned by the Choctaws and Chickasaw Indians and we passed a bill. No man thought we turned this land over to the Government without pay, and we passed a bill through the House a few days ago authorizing the sale of this land at a price to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, or which had already been fixed, and I think that would be the proper way.

Mr. STEENERSON. These hospital sites that I am familiar with are absolutely useless now, and these people ought to have hospital service, and if the State is willing to take them over, it would be an advantage to all concerned.

Mr. CARTER. The Indians are citizens.

Mr. STEENERSON. Most of these Indians have been allotted lands in severalty, all on the White Earth Indian Reservation, and consequently, technically, are citizens of the United States.

Mr. CARTER. Citizens of the United States and pay taxes the same as any other citizen, so there is no reason why they should not be admitted to any State institution.

Mr. STEENERSON. They pay taxes if they have anything.

Mr. CARTER. The same as other people.

Mr. STEENERSON. These people to be accommodated by this hospital are absolutely destitute and have nothing but the pittance given them by the Government out of the tribal funds. Presumably it will be free except to those able to pay. That is the usual rule.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 49: Page 29, after the amendment just reported, insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, in his discretion, the sum of $5,200, or so much thereof as may be necessary, from the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, arising under section 7 of the act of January 14, 1889, and to use the same for payment to school district No. 6, Itasca County, Minn., for tuition of Chippewa Indian children attending school in said district during the fiscal year commencing with the year ended June 30, 1914, and ending June 30, 1920, inclusive.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 53: Page 32, line 19, strike out "$200,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$250,000."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, after line 20, insert:

"For the purpose of enabling the Secretary of the Interior to settle all unpaid claims against the United States Government to funds derived from sale of patented Indian lands in the Bitter Root Valley, Mont., under the provisions of the act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat. L., p. 871), entitled 'An act to provide for the sale of lands patented to certain members of the Flathead Band of Indians in Montana Territory, and for other purposes,' $1,124.67, the same to be immediately available."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in this amendment.

Mr. CARTER. What are these claims?

Mr. ELSTON. These are claims of various Indians taken out of the Indian country when the lands were ceded for sale to whites and they were moved to a very unhospitable, harsh country under the agreement that they would be reimbursed for their holdings, and a great many claims were paid, and these are the claims remaining unpaid audited by the department. It is only $1,100 and cleans up the whole matter. It has been a very great injustice to just the few remaining Indians to wait a long time, in addition to having been originally moved out of their territory.

Mr. CARTER. Did the gentleman give this any investigation by the subcommittee?

Mr. ELSTON. You will find it in the hearings of the subcommittee, page 218, it being a legislative matter.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON] to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 34, after the amendment just reported, line 4, insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patent to school district No. 9 of Glacier County, Mont., for block 35 in Browning town site in the former Blackfeet Indian Reservation, upon filing its application therefor, said block to be used and maintained for public school purposes: Provided, That Indian children shall at all times be received in the school maintained on said block 35 for public school purposes on equal terms with white children."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CARTER. I want to ask the gentleman what is the reason for issuing this patent? Has the land been purchased or has it been donated as this Minnesota item was? What justification is there for issuing a patent here?

Mr. ELSTON. The act of March 1, 1907, authorized the setting aside of certain lands for the town site of Browning on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation and for the sale of the town-site lots. No provision, however, was contained in said act for the reservation of any part of said town site for public school purposes. A school building has been erected on block 35 in said township, at a cost of approximately $60,000—$15,000 of which was appropriated pursuant to an item in the Indian appropriation act approved February 14, 1920, the balance being paid by school district No. 9 of Glacier County. Under the terms of the suggested legislation, Indian children are to be received in the school maintained on said block 35 on equal terms with white children, and inasmuch as the school authorities are bearing the larger part of the cost of the school building a patent should be issued for said block to school district No. 9.

That is the substance of the justification I have from the Indian Bureau.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 60: Page 34, line 14, insert:

"For the construction of that portion of the highway from Yellowstone National Park to Glacier National Park within the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, Mont., $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur; and I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS].

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to speak in reference to this amendment, which it seems to me is one worthy to be considered and passed upon favorably.

Last summer I visited Glacier Park and was out on this part of the road, which is a 25-mile strip of highway running between Shelby and the National Park. It runs through a part of the Blackfeet Reservation and right by the town of Browning, in which is located the Indian agency. It is the main artery for the Indians. There are two arguments to support this amendment. One is the need of the Indians on their reservation and the other is the need of the tourists who enter Glacier Park from the east and who desire to go from Glacier Park down to the Yellowstone Park to the southward. It is the only highway by which you can enter the Glacier Park from the east. Some may say that the greater number of tourists that go into this park are of the wealthier class. As a matter of fact the people who enter the Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks today are the people of the great middle element of our population. I have seen in those parks, as other Members have seen, men and women in their touring cars with their children and camping outfits, chuck boxes on the rear, and their running boards filled with all sorts of paraphernalia, roughing it and enjoying the magnificent splendor of these great national parks. I believe they are entitled to have this part of the road fixed up so that they can enter the Glacier Park and go from the Glacier Park to the Yellowstone Park without danger. Over a part of this highway now the grade is as high as 12 per cent, and the road is extremely narrow in places, and there are very sharp curves. That road should be repaired and improved. There is a bridge that we have already appropriated for, costing $10,000, to be constructed on this highway, and unless we can put the road in shape and improve it, that bridge will practically be useless. And therefore, Mr. Speaker, it seems that in the interest of both the Indians and the tourists this appropriation should be favorably considered. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention of the gentleman to the fact that this appropriation seems to be made directly from the Treasury. That has been against the policy of the Congress and the House. It ought to be made reimbursable from the funds of the Blackfeet Indians. Therefore I offer an amendment to insert after the word "necessary" the words:

Reimbursable from any funds of said Blackfeet Tribe of Indians that may be now or hereafter placed in the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CARTER: Page 34, line 17, after the word "necessary," strike out the period, insert a comma, and add: "and reimbursable from any funds of said Blackfeet Tribe that may be now or hereafter placed in the Treasury of the United States."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from California.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from California yield for a question before this amendment is put?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Is this to be for the benefit of these Indians on this reservation?

Mr. ELSTON. It is. It is the main highway, and the only highway, through this reservation, so that the bridges can be used. At the same time it is an incident to the highway between these two parks.

Mr. RAKER. Well, we are all interested in proper touring roads between the parks and other places, but I did not want to leave the record so that it could be said that we are taking $25,000 out of the Indian funds to build an automobile road for tourists. This is really a road already in existence?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes. The road is already in existence.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from California.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 61: On page 35, line 4, insert the following: "For dining room and kitchen, $24,000; for improvement of domestic water supply and irrigation system, $5,000."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ELSTON moves that the House recede from its disagreement to amendment No. 61, and agree to the same with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "For improvement of domestic water supply and irrigation system, $5,000."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, this cuts out the larger appropriation here for the dining room, which will have to go over as being a necessity but not an emergency matter, and keeps in the appropriation now of $5,000 for the water supply, which is absolutely necessary.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from California.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 62: On page 35, line 6, strike out "$94,000" and insert "$123,000."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement on this amendment and agree to the same with an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves that the House recede and agree to the same with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ELSTON moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 62, and agree to the same with the following amendment: In lieu of the sum appropriated in said amendment insert "$99,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreement to the motion of the gentleman from California.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 64: Page 36, line 1, after "$8,000" insert "to be immediately available, and the amount of $7,000 heretofore appropriated for this purpose shall be available until expended; for girls' dormitory, $40,000."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement and agree to the amendment with an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ELSTON moves that the House recede from its disagreement to amendment No. 64, and agree to the same with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ", to be immediately available, and the amount of $7,000 heretofore appropriated for this purpose shall be available until expended."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, this cuts down the additional appropriation made by the Senate and merely leaves the matter relating to the immediate availability of the fund.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. Certainly.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. The gentleman will recall that when the subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs visited this school we were shown the necessity for these girls' dormitories. He will also recall that this is one of the best conducted Indian schools in that section of the country. They are full to their utmost capacity, which is about 500 pupils now, and the congested condition of the dormitories there makes it absolutely necessary to have this girls' dormitory provided. I wish the gentleman would withdraw his amendment and move to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, the subcommittee visited this school. What the gentleman said is true. While there is great necessity, it is our belief that the school can wait for another year before putting in this improvement. I have no doubt it would convenience the school to have it now, but we felt that in every case where extreme emergency was not shown the appropriation should be withheld, and we felt that we had to follow that policy with regard to this item.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment making an appropriation of $40,000 for the girls' dormitory in this school.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Mexico offers a preferential motion, that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. HERNANDEZ) there were—ayes 18, noes 18.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON] that the House recede and concur with the amendment which has been read.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 65: Page 36, line 4, strike out "$120,400" and insert in lieu thereof "$160,400."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment. As the situation now stands the sum of $40,000 has been taken out of the amount which is to be totaled. That leaves a situation where we should disagree to the Senate amendment and insist on that disagreement, in order to put the figures back to the amount appropriated by the House.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. What does that do with the $7,000?

Mr. ELSTON. It leaves it available until expended.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California that the House insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment 65.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 76: Page 38, after line 11, insert: "For the pay of one special attorney for the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, and for necessary traveling expenses of said attorney, $3,000, or so much thereof as the Secretary of the Interior may deem necessary."

Mr. ELSTON. I move to recede and concur in this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 77: Page 38, after line 16, insert:

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized in his discretion, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, to accept reconveyances to the Government of privately owned and State school lands, and relinquishments of valid homestead entries or other filings, including Indian allotment selections, within any township of the public domain in San Juan, McKinley, and Valencia Counties, N. Mex., and to permit lieu selections by those surrendering their rights so that the holdings of any claimant within any township wherein such reconveyances or relinquishments are made may be consolidated and held in solid areas: Provided, That the title or claim of any person who refuses to reconvey to the Government shall not be hereby affected."

Mr. ELSTON. I move to recede and concur in this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 81: Page 40, line 7, after the figures "$35,725," insert: "Provided, That not exceeding $6,000 of the amount reappropriated by the Indian appropriation act of May 25, 1918 (40 Stat. L., p. 577), for employees' quarters may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be used for the purchase of the Baker cottage and lands adjoining the Bismarck Indian School grounds."

Mr. ELSTON. I move that the House recede and concur in this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 82: Page 42, line 8, after the figures "$15,000," insert: "For new buildings and additions to and remodeling of present buildings, $75,000."

Mr. ELSTON. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to this amendment and agree to the same with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ELSTON moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 82, and agree to the same with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to report to the Congress at the beginning of the next regular session what necessity there is, if any, for new buildings and the enlargement and remodeling of present buildings at the Chilocco Indian School, Oklahoma, and if he finds such necessity to exist, to make such recommendations therefor as he may deem appropriate, together with a statement of the cost of carrying them into effect."

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, this amendment cuts out the appropriation and authorizes an investigation of actual conditions at this school. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SWINDALL] has made a very strong presentation of the necessity for this appropriation. Now, the best that can be done, in my belief, is not to appropriate the amount of $75,000 on a very inclusive plan and a very ambitious plan which he believes should be adopted, but to provide for an investigation such as is proposed in this amendment, and I believe the gentleman from Oklahoma should be perfectly willing to take it.

I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SWINDALL].

Mr. SWINDALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede from the disagreement and agree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, to-day in the consideration of this bill, on page 15, amendment No. 22, this body receded from its disagreement and agreed to the Senate amendment providing for the encouragement of industry and self-support among the Indians to aid them in the culture of fruits, grains, and other products, and appropriated $100,000 for that purpose. Now, the Chilocco Indian School is located in the best agricultural portion of the State of Oklahoma. It has 8,500 acres of fine land, and last year on this school reservation there was earned by Indian pupils $42,000 for the Indian fund. This is the only nonreservation school in the State of Oklahoma, and I think the appropriation requested for this school is not out of proportion compared with other appropriations requested for Indian schools here to-day, and is consistent with the policy of economy adopted by this body and which I most heartily approve.

At page 18 of this bill we agreed to an increase appropriation for the construction of additional buildings at Phoenix, Ariz., in the sum of $50,000 to accommodate 750 Indian pupils. At the Chilocco Indian School at the present time we have 550 Indian pupils, and with the amendment I have requested this body to agree to we can accommodate 850 Indian pupils. This body has agreed to a Senate amendment appropriating $55,000 for additional improvements at the Haskell Institute, Lawrence, Kans. Therefore I say, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, that I believe the position I have taken in this matter is correct and in the interest of the Indians and in keeping with the policy of this body in aiding them, encouraging industry and self-support.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWINDALL. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Are these school buildings necessary on this reservation?

Mr. SWINDALL. It is so stated to be by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER], the gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON], and my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS], who have visited this school and know the great benefit it is to these Indians and this Nation, will agree with me.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the committee, the Indian Affairs Committee only last May made a very careful investigation of the Chilocco school. It is one of the best institutions—one of the best nonreservation schools we have. There are ample facilities at Chilocco for all the pupils there. It is only a short distance from the Haskell school, and the committee went carefully into the necessity of enlarging that school not only at that hearing but in the investigation made by the Indian Affairs Committee when the appropriation bill was being prepared a year ago, and it came to the conclusion that there was no necessity of enlarging it at this time. The gentleman from Oklahoma says that they have 8,000 acres there, which is true, and they have a well-managed school; but there is absolutely no necessity of enlarging that nonreservation boarding school or any other at the present time. Therefore I am not only opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma, but I am opposed to the amendment offered by the chairman of the subcommittee to even investigate it. There has been a careful investigation made of that project out there, and the committee has not seen fit to recommend an additional expenditure.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SWINDALL) there were—ayes 14, noes 26.

So the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from California to recede and concur with an amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CLARK of Missouri, for to-day, on account of illness.

To Mr. LAZARO (at the request of Mr. DUPRÉ), for the day, on account of illness.

To Mr. LAYTON, on account of death in family.

To Mr. DUNBAR, for two days, February 21 and 22, on account of business.

PORTO RICO.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Commissioner of Porto Rico may address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent for the Commissioner of Porto Rico to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVILA. Mr. Speaker, there appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday's proceedings of the House two cables from the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate of Porto Rico, which are now in session.

Those cablegrams both express to this House the sentiments of adherence and respect which the insular representatives there assembled feel for the Representatives of the sovereign United States and voicing the faith of the Porto Rico Assembly that "justice worthy of both would be exercised in granting their immediate aspirations in the extension and development of our present system of government under democratic principles."

It appears that these cables have been misunderstood by some Members of Congress. These gentlemen assume that the language was intended as a petition for independence. I am frank to say that to me the language conveyed no such meaning, but seemed clear and plain. It is because the language must have been ambiguous to some that I think the incident should be made perfectly plain. The Porto Rican Assembly has merely asked for the development of the government now existing there under American sovereignty.

It would obviously be impossible to develop the present system by granting independence. You can not "develop" one thing by creating another and entirely different thing.

There is no denying the fact, Mr. Speaker, that there is an element of the population in Porto Rico that favors independence. But it is also true that there is a large proportion of her people who do not want separation from the United States, and among the latter I am bound to proclaim myself one of the number. [Applause.] I may add, Mr. Speaker, that I yield to no Member of this House in my devotion and fidelity to the United States. [Applause.] But, Mr. Speaker, I think the time opportune to caution Congress and the United States against the insidious propaganda that is now being waged with a view of misrepresenting conditions in Porto Rico.

My love and devotion for this country has been a matter of evolution and growth dating from the time that the Spanish flag was hauled down on that island. At that time I did not entertain the same views upon this question that possess me to-day, for, while I then yielded to none in my determination to throw off the yoke of Spanish tyranny, yet like all Porto Ricans imbued with patriotic motives, I questioned the justice of being transferred like so many chattels from one sovereignty to another without even so much as "by your leave." Such sentiments have not been unusual among other island people. We have an illustrious precedent in the case of Corsica, which is to-day a very citadel of French patriotism, rich in the most glorious traditions of that country. I want to say in all frankness, Mr. Speaker, that from the day we were acquired by the United States my love and devotion for this country has steadily increased until to-day, and, as I have already asserted, I yield to none in my fidelity and devotion. I became imbued with the American spirit when as a young man following the Spanish-American War I came to this country to complete my studies. I have educated my boys in this country. They were born under the flag, and they yield to none as Americans—Americans without a hyphen and without any mental or other reservation, however small. [Applause.]

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 15962) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to all of the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to take the general deficiency bill from the Speaker's table, disagree to all of the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask the gentleman if he will not agree to bring into the House, so that the House may have an opportunity to vote upon it, the amendment to the deficiency bill providing for the enforcement of national prohibition?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, there are a great many amendments to the deficiency bill that would have been subject to a point of order if they had been offered on the floor of the House. Those the conferees will be compelled to bring back to the House. I hesitate at this time, when we have so many conference reports to take up, to enlarge that list, as the gentleman may well understand. I am perfectly willing to make some arrangement so that the gentleman may appear before the conferees, but I do not think the gentleman ought to ask me to agree to bring back matters where the conferees have a right to agree upon them, particularly in view of the fact that other Members have asked that other items of the same class be brought back.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Chair appoints the following conferees: Mr. GOOD, Mr. CANNON, Mr. EVANS of Montana.

REPRINT OF COLD STORAGE BILL.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, may I have a minute to ask the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] a question respecting the cold storage bill? All of the bills are out of print, the conference report is out of print, and the bill as it passed the Senate is out of print. This is a very important measure, and I think we ought to have some information available in the House.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if the situation is as the gentleman suggests, then there ought to be a reprint, and I ask unanimous consent that a reprint be made of the bill H. R. 9521, the cold storage bill, as it passed the Senate, and of the conference report thereon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill H. R. 9521, as it passed the Senate, and of the conference report thereon. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, can the gentleman from Wyoming say whether or not we will probably get to a consideration of the packers bill next week?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wyoming ought not to impart that information until there is a quorum present. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Sunday, February 20, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

418. A letter from the Secretary of the Teasury, transmitting estimate of appropriation for additional buildings and water supply for the New York (N. Y.) quarantine station (H. Doc. No. 1011); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

419. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report on the cost in detail and the economic value of developing power in the Potomac River (H. Doc. No. 1012); to the Committees on Appropriations and District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. DENISON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16060) to amend the interstate commerce act by adding thereto a new section, No. 20b, and to amend an act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, by adding a new paragraph to section 10 thereof, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1340); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. CRAGO, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4912) to authorize the appointment of an ordnance storekeeper in the Army, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1342); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. KAHN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the resolution (H. Res. 680) requesting certain information from the Secretary of War, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 1341), which said bill and report were laid on the table.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 16127) to amend the Army appropriation act approved July 11, 1919, so as to release appropriations for the completion of the acquisition of real estate in certain cases and making additional appropriations therefor; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HAWLEY: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, urging Congress to take necessary steps to have a survey made of the port of Port Orford, Oreg., with a view to making necessary improvements; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, urging Congress to pass legislation compelling every manufacturer or handler or seller of woolen fabrics and woolen garments to place thereon a tag plainly stating the exact percentage of virgin wool and also how much and what other materials enter into such cloth; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LUFKIN: Memorial from the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts, relating to the creation of an agency by the Federal Government to regulate and control the production, sorting, grading, and transportation and distribution of coal; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. McARTHUR: Memorial from the Legislature of the State of Oregon, favoring legislation to give relief to China and the Near East; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. RIDDICK: Memorial from the Legislature of the State of Montana, urging Congress to take immediate action toward furnishing aid to the farmers; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, memorial from the Legislature of the State of Montana, urging Congress to provide sufficient appropriations for the completion of Federal reclamation projects within the State of Montana; to the Committee on Appropriations.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FESS: A bill (H. R. 16130) to incorporate the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 16131) granting a pension to Ellen J. Webb; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WATKINS: A bill (H. R. 16132) for the relief of Augusta C. Todd and the heirs of T. Alonzo Walker, of Bienville Parish, La.; to the Committee on War Claims.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, February 20, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by Mr. RUCKER as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., of Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, before entering upon the sacred duties of the hour we humbly and reverently bow in Thy presence that we take increased devotion to the sacred dead who died at their posts leaving behind them an enviable record, Members of this legislative body dead though they live in the memory of those who knew them.

Let Thy loving arms be about their friends, colleagues, especially the members of their respective families to uphold and sustain them till the mists have rolled away for when the stars shall fade and crumble into impalpable dust we shall live and love in eternal glory for it is writ in letters of light "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me shall never die," for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE CHARLES F. BOOHER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the special order of the day.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. RUCKER, by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That Sunday, February 20, 1921, be set apart for addresses on the life, character, and public service of Hon. CHARLES F. BOOHER, late a Representative from the State of Missouri.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 690.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that an opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. CHARLES F. BOOHER, late a Member of this House from the State of Missouri.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of the exercises of this day, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The question was taken, and the resolution was unanimously agreed to.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the remarks of Ex-Speaker CLARK be read by the Clerk at this time. They are in writing and it is at the request of Mr. CLARK, who is absent on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the request of the gentleman will be granted.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, an old Latin proverb reads, when translated into American—

Concerning the dead, speak nothing but that which is good.

There is no difficulty in carrying out this injunction when we come to speak of our friend and fellow Member of the House of Representatives, CHARLES F. BOOHER, of Missouri, who has gone to join the great majority of the men who have, since the foundation of our Government, done service in this House.

CHARLES F. BOOHER was one of the most likeable men I ever knew. A sensible man. A reasonable man. A dependable man. Without being in any respect a showy person, he was nevertheless able to take a man's part in all the legislative business which came up for consideration in the sessions of Congress in which he served.

In debate he spoke to the point, and stopped when he came to it. He was not given to long-winded oratory. The St. Joseph district has sent able men to represent it in Washington. When I first came here I was first elected in the Democratic landslide of 1892, Representative Burns had just died, and had been succeeded by his son, who was in turn succeeded by Charles Fremont Cochren, one of the most brilliant men that Missouri has sent here.

The St. Joseph district did the remarkable thing of electing Gov. Willard P. Hall to Congress while he was serving in Doniphan's expedition. It is one of the richest districts in America. The Missouri and other large streams furnish the rich bottom lands which made great wealth.

What now constitutes the St. Joseph district did not at first belong to Missouri. What first constituted the laying out lines for the State of Missouri's west line ran north and south through the mouth of the Kaw, which left six great counties now constituting the St. Joseph district to the west of that line and out in the cold generally.

In 1836 Senator Lynn, perhaps the most popular man that ever lived in the State, introduced a bill to make the Platte Purchase a part of Missouri. In this he had the loyal help of Senator Benton.

The strange part of this story is that the act of the 10th of August, 1821, solemnly signed by the President, accepted Missouri as slave territory and dedicated all the rest of the great Northwest to freedom. Now here they were putting one of the greatest agricultural districts in America into a slave territory 16 years later with scarcely a chirp from the Abolitionists and emotionalists up North. Everybody interested in it was satisfied. Nobody else counted. If the people of the Platte Purchase district of Missouri had a just appreciation of the obligation they are under to Lynn and Benton, they would rear a monument of testimonial marble to these great Senators that would touch the very heavens. Whether or not they will ever accomplish this duty remains to be seen. But it is meet and fitting that I should on this occasion and in this presence pronounce this eulogy on our absent but well-beloved member, CHARLES F. BOOHER.

As a Member of Congress and in all the relations of life, those who speak of him may say, "He dared do all that doth become a man; who dares do more is none."

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I regret that I have no chosen, well-selected remarks to speak to-day concerning this distinguished Missourian. It was my peculiar privilege to know Judge BOOHER intimately. His career as a public man was an unusual one. He came to this House by the choice of his constituents for seven consecutive terms, in addition to having been selected a number of years ago to fill a brief unexpired term. CHARLES F. BOOHER was the oldest member of our delegation. He lived in a small county in northwest Missouri.

A Democrat living in a Republican county, he was so regarded and loved and respected that it was his fortune to receive from time to time the majority vote of that county. He had in his district a large city of over 100,000 inhabitants, one of the oldest and wealthiest cities in the West with ambitious and strong men desiring to represent that district, and yet he was so regarded, loved, and respected and his character was so high and the confidence of the people in him was so great that they sent him here for seven consecutive terms. He did not ask to be returned at the last election. There was no better man ever came to this House than CHARLES F. BOOHER, a man of sterling integrity, a man of the highest character. I heard once a colleague speak of him, who said he was "pure gold." There was no alloy in his make-up. He was a native of New York who came to Missouri a half century ago about. Prominent in his section both in politics and in the law, he made a reputation worth while. He was the leader of his bar. He was a strong lawyer, a man of courage, a man of convictions, who made up his own mind as to what he wanted to do and followed the dictates of his own conscience and his own judgment. He was a man of firmness. He had as few faults as any man I ever knew. He was loved by everybody with whom he came in contact, and he was loved and highly regarded by all of his colleagues and associates. He will be missed in his own section and by his associates here. He has passed away into the great beyond, and he has left a record worthy of any man. He had no enemies; he was entitled to have none. He had lived a good life, and his example is worthy to be followed by all men.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, respect for the dead has characterized all peoples, and a desire for immortality has inspired and encouraged them. The Egyptians tried to preserve for a better world the bodies of their friends and loved ones. Many of the ancients displayed a cheering faith by placing food and drink with the remains of those who were dear to them. "The Elysian fields" and "the happy hunting ground" have become proverbial. The laws of Solon forbade men to speak ill of the dead. Socrates taught in his last moments, as he had endeavored to teach in his life, that each thing implies its opposite; that the foul implies the fair; that cold implies heat; that to die implies to live again. And so history records from the beginning an onward trend of hope toward the advent of the Master.

We who have been permitted to live in the light of Christian revelation have come to know more completely the significance of that transition whose meaning the ancients so earnestly sought. We need no longer regard our departed friends in that hazy and uncertain contemplation of the early times, but we may think of them, rather, in the enlightened scope of Christian teaching. And with this broader view we come to-day to betoken our respect and veneration for a comrade who has passed on before us to that greater fullness of light and life.

It was the good fortune and pleasure both of my father and myself to serve in this House with our lamented colleague, CHARLES F. BOOHER, of Missouri. It was given to me to know him only during the present Congress, but in that brief acquaintance he seemed to bestow upon me as a younger Member a consideration born of that earlier service. I am gratified at this additional opportunity to bespeak the reciprocal regard which I cherished for him, and also to attest the reverence in which I hold his memory.

Mindful at all times of the obligations and responsibilities of the high position to which his district had called him, he tried, even in the days of affliction and failing strength, to render the same faithful service of his more active and vigorous years. Almost to the last he strove to remain at his post with his hand and his heart in his work. He was willing to sacrifice himself for his people in that same spirit of fidelity which had marked his entire career.

In the little city of Savannah, Mo., which was so long his home, I was impressed with many things which reminded me of the life of devotion to duty which he has left as a heritage to his family and friends. Just before the last sad service in his honor, as those who had known him and who, therefore, mourned his loss looked on his form for the last time on earth, there stood at one end of the casket a young soldier who had battled for our country on foreign fields, and at the other a young sailor who had helped to maintain our prestige on the seas. How singularly appropriate that was, for it must have occurred to all, as it did to me, that between these young patriots rested one who had fought quite as courageously and as well in the legislative halls of our Nation for the freedom and the progress of the land he loved.

Most gratifying was the tribute of words and flowers in those final ceremonies, but it was so apparent in that large gathering of friends and neighbors and associates that his best eulogy is written on the tablets of memory in the minds and hearts of all who knew him.

The congressional party visited his office, where his books bespoke his work. We have all sat with him here, where the voluminous records attest his service. We have heard with our ears and have observed in his life a reliance upon the hope which the Good Book affords. And surely it is fitting that we should continue to think of him in the language of that beautiful epitaph which Benjamin Franklin wrote for himself:

> The body of Benjamin Franklin, printer, like the cover of an old book, its contents torn out and stripped of its lettering and gilding, lies here food for worms; yet the work itself shall not be lost, for it will, as he believed, appear once more in a new and more beautiful edition, corrected and amended by the Author.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, we have met in solemn service to express as best we may our regret at the passing of our friend and colleague the Hon. CHARLES F. BOOHER. And, in the memorial exercises of this day, I wish I could adequately and eloquently picture of him the commendable things of which he was so worthy. The State and Nation have lost a true and loyal citizen, the community in which he lived, in Andrew County, Mo., a neighbor, a friend, a benefactor, in the passing of CHARLES F. BOOHER.

He was born January 31, 1848, at East Groveland, N. Y., and when a young man cast his energies and fixed his purposes upon the solution of life's problems within the great midwestern State of Missouri.

He in due time made his impress upon the community in which he had builded his home and established and drew about him many warm personal friends who remained loyal to him throughout life—the ties of friendship thus formed so often growing warmer and becoming more firm and steadfast as the type of man and character of CHARLES F. BOOHER unfolded and showed its real depths and splendid traits to those about him.

CHARLES F. BOOHER was a man of good judgment. He was more anxious to be right and to do the right thing and to render service to those whom he represented than he was to seek praise or seeming popularity.

He would rather subject himself to criticism and follow a course he believed to be right than to escape that criticism by following a doubtful course.

As a Representative in Congress he served his constituents faithfully and well. He commanded the friendship and respect of those with whom he served and I am sure that the membership of this House feels that in the passing of CHARLES F. BOOHER, a good man, a good Representative, and a good citizen has gone from us.

He was not a man who sought to make a show of himself but was content to serve his country well without any personal ambition to be praised for it.

The fourth Missouri district, one of the richest and most splendid in the United States, was well represented in Congress by CHARLES F. BOOHER, and his wise counsel and assistance in national legislation will be much missed by his colleagues in Congress.

His chief outstanding quality was his honesty and determination to do the right thing as a national legislator and toward his fellow man. He loved humanity and gave the best there was in himself for its cause.

He was a kind and considerate father and husband, devoted to his family and solicitous of their comfort and welfare. His children and grand children have been left a heritage in his life of which they may well be proud. The sturdy, rugged honesty and achievements of CHARLES F. BOOHER may well stand as an example of hope and encouragement to his posterity, accurately pointing them along the rightful highway of life.

Both life and death to we who are mortal have quite a seeming mystery, but I shall not doubt that the soul of man is permanent and everlasting, and when it has passed from these temporary bodies over into that "Great Beyond" I am convinced that it will be suited to a new existence and that a rich reward awaits those who have not lived this earthly life in vain.

So for our friend, our comrade, and our colleague, and in his memory I shall not hesitate to feel and believe that he has justly earned all the glories of the Divine Father's Providence for which you and I may hopefully strive.

And so to him, our departed friend, may I say in behalf of the membership of the House of Representatives, peace—peace—everlasting peace.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that I should let this occasion pass without saying a personal word in memory of Mr. BOOHER. I often think that the sweetest flowers that grow are those that bloom over the garden wall of party politics. While he and I were not of the same political faith, yet we were firm friends. He was born and brought up in the town of Groveland, Livingston County, N. Y., in the beautiful Genesee Valley country. I was born and brought up in the same town. Mr. BOOHER was one of the first men whom I met when I came to the House. I was informed that he was a fellow townsman of mine and I looked him up. He told me that he knew my father well, and that acquaintance with my father formed a firm bond of friendship between us that remained for the rest of his life. I used to enjoy going to his office and getting him to talk to me about the old days when he lived in that town. I want to say that I shall miss him very much.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I had no thought of saying anything on this occasion when I came to the House, but came from a drawing of my conscious friendship for Judge BOOHER to listen to those who knew him longer and perhaps more intimately than myself. But I can not withhold a brief tribute of my love and respect, and almost veneration, for his character. I have often discussed matters with him in times of stress, when public sentiment was moving the hearts and swaying the judgments of men and raising questions of political expediency, and I wish to say his outstanding characteristic was his intellectual as well as his moral integrity. He did not suffer his mind or heart to be swayed by the passing clamor into paths which his conscience, his calm consideration, could not approve. Not only had he the intellectual integrity to know how he stood, but he had the moral and the political courage to always let it be known to others where he stood.

CHARLES F. BOOHER, in his life and character, was a standing refutation of the oft-repeated criticisms of politicians as being truckling timeservers. No man who knew Mr. BOOHER could doubt that there were men in public life—and there are thousands like him—who stood above the storm and stress of the pressure of public clamor and who dared to do right, even as the old Roman did, though the heavens fall.

Mr. Speaker, CHARLES F. BOOHER was always in the highest sense true to himself, and to his noblest self. Being so true, he could not therefore be false to any man. He leaves a name and a memory with those who knew him best to be cherished while life with them shall last.

Sometimes standing here on these occasions, where we in a feeble way seek to perpetuate our thoughts and memories of those who have gone before us, remembering how often we have seen a familiar face and figure down there in the well to whom we meet to pay tribute, and remembering his voice giving expression to the thoughts of his mind to his colleagues of the House, we wonder, Is that all? Is it all ended? The places that knew him shall know him no more. But is it all ended? And the old, old question of the ages comes back to us, "If a man die, shall he live again?" In a sense he is not dead. His example lives. His voice, though silent, speaks to us from the grave. But there is another sense in which we believe that in the happy beyond the spirits of the just, not made perfect, but still progressive, will greet us and help to lead us in a never-ending and undying day, and CHARLES F. BOOHER will be one of those brighter spirits on the other shore leading to a loftier and a nobler sphere of existence.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I only ask a moment to say just a word relative to our dead friend in whose honor these services are held to-day. I came to Congress with Judge BOOHER 14 years ago. In the old days when each Member had a desk on this floor, I sat near him. I became acquainted with him by degrees. He was rather reticent and reserved, but as the years ran along I learned to know him well. I enjoyed numerous walks and talks with him and my admiration grew. He proved to be a genial, companionable friend, rather given to take the serious side of life, but possessed of the traits of character that make a lasting and helpful acquaintance. Few men among my acquaintances here were more fearless in discharging their duties. He was conscientious always. He believed he was right and let nothing swerve him. That firm, square jaw and deep-set eyes were true monitors of his life and character. He was rugged and immovable. As God gave him the light and vision to discharge his duties, he set manfully to do them. I venture that no dishonorable act was ever truthfully charged against him. He met the responsibilities of life in a brave and fearless manner, and leaves that most priceless heritage—a well spent life—to those who follow after him. I know that I was benefited by my acquaintance with Judge BOOHER and that his State and the Nation have sustained a real loss in his passing. The country and Congress need more men like him.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who desire to extend their remarks may have that privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that all Members may have leave to extend their remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE FRED L. BLACKMON.

Mr. ALMON assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the special order of this hour.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. DENT, by unanimous consent,
Ordered, That Sunday, February 20, 1921, be set apart for addresses on the life, character, and public service of Hon. FRED L. BLACKMON, late a Representative from the State of Alabama.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama offers the following resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 691.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. FRED L. BLACKMON, late a Member of this House from the State of Alabama.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House at the conclusion of these exercises shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will stand approved.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT].

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I hardly know whether I can trust myself to speak on this occasion in memory of my departed friend, Hon. FRED L. BLACKMON.

Neither Damon and Pythias nor David and Jonathan ever enjoyed a more intimate and unbroken friendship than that which existed between him and myself.

For 10 years we were closely associated under every conceivable circumstance that bring men together in the relation of friendship, and never during that entire period was there ever the slightest misunderstanding between us. It is, therefore, a very painful duty to speak in honor of his memory.

Mr. BLACKMON was born at Lime Branch, Polk County, Ga., on the 15th day of September, 1873. At the age of 10 years his parents moved to Calhoun County, Ala., and there he continued to reside until his untimely death. After receiving an education in the common schools of that county, he entered the University of Alabama, finally being graduated from there in law. He immediately entered perhaps the most prominent law firm in that section of the State and continued his connection until he entered Congress. From 1896 to 1900 he was city attorney of Anniston, Ala. From 1900 to 1910 he was State senator from Calhoun County. In 1910 he was elected to Congress from the Fourth Alabama District and was continuously reelected up to the time of his death, having been recently elected to another term in the next Congress.

It will thus be seen that he had practically held public office since his maturity, never having suffered a political defeat. During his entire political career he never at any time bowed to what was supposed to be popular clamor, but always stood steady to his convictions regardless of the popular tide. Such was his record for 10 years in the State senate and such also was his record for 10 years in the halls of Congress. He was a working Member of Congress and not an ostentatious one. He did things for his constituents. Camp McClellan, near Anniston, Ala., is a fitting testimonial to his usefulness as a Representative in Congress.

He was genial, affable, and cordial in manner. He had the faculty of making friends and holding them hard and fast. This faculty took a wide range among all classes of people. I doubt if any man ever possessed this faculty to a greater degree than did FRED BLACKMON. His affection for his mother, though natural in a son, was manifested to a marked degree. Indeed it was rare. He was a fond and devoted husband and his love for his two children, Fred L., jr., and Sara, was one among the many beautiful characteristics of his life.

A devoted husband, a tender and affectionate father, a true and loyal friend, a bold, courageous, and honest statesman, a splendid citizen has gone from among us. His death is mourned throughout the length and breadth of the State of Alabama, where he had a wide acquaintance, as well as among the many friends and associates whom he knew in Congress. Personally, I mourn his loss more deeply than I am able to express. If ever there was a true, loyal, and honest soul, it was in the bosom of FRED BLACKMON.

I seek some consolation in this sad hour in the following verses from the "Psalm of Life":

Tell me not in mournful numbers
Life is but an empty dream,
For the soul is dead that slumbers,
And things are not what they seem.

Life is real, life is earnest,
And the grave is not its goal:
"Dust thou art, to dust returnest"
Was not spoken of the soul.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, in the beginning I wish to ask leave to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do so, Mr. Speaker, because I wish to prepare some few remarks in addition to what I may here utter.

The one act more than any other that prompts my desire to pay a brief tribute to our departed colleague is that nearly eight years ago—eight years the 7th day of next month—he and I stood here on this floor and took the oath of office together; he for his second and I for my first term in this House. After we had done so he turned to me and introduced himself and shook hands with me—the first man outside of my own delegation that had done so in this body; and during all the years of our service I never saw him that he did not speak to me and shake hands with me—always with that smile which bespoke his goodness of soul. He never forgot my name, and I never forgot his. He made me feel as if we were friends of long standing and not acquaintances of but a few days.

I never saw him depressed and I never heard him utter a single expression of despair. He thought well of his fellow Members. He was passionately devoted to his country. He cherished a divine hope of the future. No utterance of his on this floor could be classed as demagogic. He spoke his convictions, and he voted them. He was no opportunist, no time-server. He never cast a vote in this House inspired by the hope that it would be helpful to him politically. He looked only to the one thing—was it wise, was it patriotic? If he decided those things in the affirmative, he thus voted, and then never apologized for the position he took. He was one of the few men with whom I have served in this body who had a clear conviction on every question that was presented for his consideration. I never saw him in doubt as to a course. I never heard him express any regret—I speak of it politically—that he was compelled to choose sides in any controversy that might be waged in this House. He was a man of courage, of conviction, tender-hearted, and a true friend. His services in this body I shall not now review, nor shall I extol his virtues, both as citizen and legislator. These I shall leave for those who knew him better. My remarks, feeble and few, shall be confined to the personality of the man whom all here knew and for which all loved him.

Kind, considerate, cheerful, full of compassion for the faults and foibles of his colleagues and all mankind—loving and loved, he lived and died. Somewhere his immortal spirit lives and loves and waits for those whom he here loved and who grieve because he is gone.

Peace be with those who remain; we know it abides with him.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, like a number of the other Members of the Sixty-sixth Congress I retire to private life in a few days. One of the sweetest things I shall carry back home with me is the memory of the acquaintances and friends that I have made during my 14 years of service here. I count myself fortunate, indeed, in having known FRED BLACKMON well. I considered him my friend—I know I was his friend—and when FRED BLACKMON was your friend he was a friend indeed. My acquaintance with him dated from the time he came to Congress and continued uninterruptedly most pleasant. I was with him much during his service in this body. I enjoyed his acquaintance and fellowship. I never heard him say an unkind word of anyone. He was always a gentleman. I never knew a man who had a sweeter, more gentle, and lovable disposition than FRED BLACKMON, and of all the friends and acquaintances I have made in this House none do I cherish higher than that of our friend in whose memory these services are held to-day. His untimely passing was a great shock to his large circle of friends. Three weeks ago to-day, Mr. Speaker, he occupied the chair which you now fill when like services were held for the late Senator Bankhead. A few days later, when yet scarce at the meridian of his usefulness, he was stricken down, and the place that knew him once will know him no more. But while we sincerely mourn his passing, we are cheered and comforted by the memory of this choice spirit, and rejoice that it was our privilege to have known FRED BLACKMON. Not soon will we forget him. Let us then seek to emulate his virtues, which so outshone his foibles, that our memory of him may be fragrant with the flowers of love and kind deeds.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, only a little more than an hour ago, in reading the RECORD of yesterday, I discovered that an order had been entered for memorial services to-day in behalf of the late Representative FRED L. BLACKMON, of Alabama. I came over to the Chamber to attend those exercises and attest by my presence my sincere regret at his demise. Since I have sat here an impulse has come to me and grown that I should say something on this occasion. It is true I speak without preparation, but preparation could aid me naught in the matter of expressing my friendship for FRED BLACKMON or my sympathy at his loss, except possibly to help me polish a phrase or two or to recall and utter some half remembered appropriate quotations. My feeling of friendship for him was deep and my appreciation of his character is lasting and basic, and though in this brief expression of sorrow I may not fittingly express those thoughts, still they are at the bottom of the words that well up from my heart to-day.

Ten years ago when FRED BLACKMON came here I was among the first to know him. I met him through my late beloved colleague, Bob Wickliffe, of Louisiana, who lived at the same hotel with him. I took a liking to him, and that liking developed into friendship. I sought his companionship, I was glad to be with him. He was a man whom I respected. He had bravery, he had kindness, he had gentleness, he had tolerance, "the milk of human kindness." He had all the elements that appeal to me in a man, so when I think of him gone, when I remember the wife and children whom he left behind to whom he was so devotedly attached, I can not help saying "he should have died hereafter."

If I recall aright, Webster, speaking of Calhoun, said:

> Nothing mean, low or groveling, ever came near his head or heart.

In all truth, one might say that of FRED BLACKMON.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, my relations with our departed friend, FRED L. BLACKMON, were such that I would feel that I had failed to perform a solemn duty were I not to add a respectful tribute to the eulogies that have already been offered on this occasion.

For 10 years, lacking a few days, we were colleagues in this great legislative body. During that time our relations had been very intimate and exceedingly pleasant. We spent many hours together. I learned to know him and to appreciate him for the many qualities that were characteristic of him.

He had a charming personality. He knew how to make himself thoroughly agreeable in any company.

He was an entertaining conversationalist, could tell an apt story, and never failed to enliven every occasion by his humor whenever it was seemly to do so.

He was a friend to the weak and lowly; his ear was ever open to their cry; his time was always theirs. Always courteous, considerate, and anxious to lend a helping hand, he made friends readily, and having once made a friend, he held him by the strength of his character, the charm of his personality, and his willingness to give much more than he demanded of his friend.

His was a strong intellect and he was always anxious to learn the reasons underlying and giving strength to any proposition. He was unwilling to be a mere follower. While willing to listen to suggestions from friends, he was unwilling to lend his support to any measure unless, in his judgment, it measured up to the standard of the fundamental political principles of our Government. When his judgment was convinced, he was as unyielding as any man I ever knew. He never left a position or surrendered an opinion simply because it did not meet with popular approval. However unpopular his position might be on any subject, those who knew him never doubted his honesty and they never censured him unduly.

FRED BLACKMON was an able lawyer, an earnest and faithful legislator, a lover of humanity, a devoted husband and father, a generous friend, and a noble soul. Representative Government is safe so long as the people choose such men for their servants.

I shall never forget him. When I shall think of him it will always be as one whose impelling idea was—

> Not only to keep down the base in man,
> But teach high thought and amiable words
> And courtesy and love of truth,
> And all that makes a man.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Speaker, I came into Congress five years ago, and among the first acquaintances which I made was one with Mr. BLACKMON. It happened that we were stopping at the same hotel, and we had offices close to one another in the House Office Building. And so I came to know him quite well and had an opportunity of forming some estimate of his character.

I do not know that I can add anything to what has been said. I can only emphasize what has been stated to have been his predominant characteristics. I think that what impressed me most about Mr. BLACKMON was his fundamental sincerity, which is but another way of saying his fundamental honesty. He was without pretense, without concealment. His nature and his mind were so organized that he could not be happy without being sincere, and that characteristic was a predominant one, not only in his daily life and conduct but also in his daily thinking. It characterized his service as a Member of the House. It is the explanation, I think, of the reason why in his service here apparently the only consideration which entered his mind and determined what position he would take was the consideration of what he honestly believed to be correct according to principle. It also served, I think, as the fundamental basis of his political thinking. I noticed in talking with him about the matters upon which we were called upon to vote that he instinctively tested the question by the criterion of some fundamental principle which he believed in and the preservation of which he thought would promote the good of the country. As I said, he could not be happy and be insincere. Therefore his very nature demanded that in his congressional service he should vote as he was led to believe to be for the best interests of the country according to the fundamental principles in which he believed. And his congressional service in that respect had a peculiar and outstanding consistency.

I do not know of a single vote that he cast since I have been in the Congress with him that varied from the principles in which he believed. His conception—and I think it is the true one—was that a Representative in Congress was not a mere delegate to voice a sentiment or an emotion of current character uninfluenced by the conclusions of his own intellect, but his conception of this Government was that it was representative in character and that representative government implied that the Representatives should exercise judgment, and not voice merely a current sentiment and current thought of the time. Therefore his positions, I think, were as little influenced by what might be considered the current and ephemeral thought of a moment as any man in the Congress, with the result that the people of his district always received in the decision of any public question the very best judgment as to their welfare that Mr. BLACKMON was capable of forming.

This sincerity of character, in my judgment, is the explanation of his remarkable political success. He impressed the people with that quality, and while they might from time to time differ with him upon a particular position, yet, having confidence in the integrity of his purposes, in the sincerity of his motives, occasional differences did not alienate their political friendship.

Another outstanding characteristic in Mr. BLACKMON was that he had, to a remarkable degree, that divine capacity for love which always calls to similar qualities in other people, and is a creative force to inspire similar emotions in others with whom such a man comes in contact. I was impressed in attending his funeral and watching the large crowd that had gathered to do him honor, to note that every class and kind of man was represented in the gathering.

Men of the most diverse attainments, men from differing environments, men far apart in station, all came and stood upon the common ground of a common affection for Mr. BLACKMON. There could be no explanation for it other than that the quality which he had and capacity which he had of love for his fellows inspired a corresponding love in them.

It is not surprising, then, that with this quality he was found to be kindly in spirit, gentle in manner, a good neighbor, a good citizen, a good husband, because to be otherwise would have contradicted and run counter to a predominant trait of his character. I can say, I think with truth, that few men will be missed more than he. Everyone who came in contact with him will feel a loss, and surely a man can pay no higher tribute to him than in saying that the predominant characteristic of FRED BLACKMON was the capacity for love, which has been given as the definition of Deity Himself.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, one of our colleagues, Mr. BANKHEAD, of Alabama, was called home yesterday very suddenly and speedily on account of the death of his sister, Mrs. George A. Lund, and he asked me to explain why he could not be here to-day. Also, Mr. RAINEY, of Alabama, was called home on account of very important business. So I ask unanimous consent that they be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. ALMON resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] is recognized.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, there are no circumstances that can reconcile us to the death of one we love. Always there are reasons which to our minds are sufficient to make us marvel. Most unfathomable of all is the Providence which removes from us one just approaching the period of his greatest power and usefulness. At such an hour death claimed FRED L. BLACKMON. The dread summons came in his forty-seventh year. He was born in Polk County, Ga., September 15, 1873. When he was a child his parents moved to Calhoun County and settled on a farm near Anniston, Ala. Here amid the humble scenes and surroundings of a modest farm among the mountains the son grew to manhood. He worked on a farm, attended a little country school, and fished and hunted along the streams and woods. The simple sports, the healthful habits of a boyhood spent in close contact with nature and her lessons were reflected in the development of a mind and body of remarkable superiority. The associations of his boyhood gave him an understanding of men and a democratic simplicity and sympathy which made it easy for him to win the friendship of his fellows. He attended the University of Alabama and studied law. Almost upon reaching his majority he was admitted to the bar and began at once to show qualities which marked him as one bound to succeed in his profession. Soon he became a member of the firm of Knox, Acker & Blackmon, of Anniston, which was generally regarded as the leading firm of lawyers in Alabama. He grew steadily as a lawyer, enjoying the unqualified confidence of his associates and the public. His first political honor was a nomination and election to a term of four years in the State Senate. He served so ably and well that he was elected again for another term. Before the expiration of his second term as State Senator he was nominated as the Democratic candidate for Representative in Congress from the fourth congressional district and elected in November, 1910. He served continuously from then until the time of his death. Last November he was reelected to the Sixty-seventh Congress.

I had known Mr. BLACKMON for about 15 years, but my first intimate acquaintance with him began when I entered upon my duties as a Member of this House six years ago. We were on the same floor, with only one door between our offices, in the House Office Building and our association was very intimate. I learned early to appreciate and admire deeply his many lovable traits. From my personal association with him I gathered a knowledge of his virtues which could not have been had from mere observation of his official acts. Mr. BLACKMON was one of the men with whom I have come in contact whose utterances and votes in the House tallied absolutely with the convictions and opinions which he expressed in the cloak room and to close personal friends in private conversation.

He was an unostentatious man and so intensely honest that he shrank from the suggestion of anything like mere show. He had a devotion to his convictions that superficial observation would not disclose. He was not noisy on the floor of the House. He did not indulge so frequently in debates as some Members, but there never was a time when he hesitated to make known or record his views when it became his duty to do so. This characteristic was well and appropriately described a few moments ago by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VENABLE]. Mr. BLACKMON was an intense Democrat—a devout believer in our representative system of government.

He believed in the distribution and division of powers which the fathers of the Republic attempted to establish for all time. He believed unfalteringly in the doctrine of State rights and unyielding opposition to the centralization of power in the Federal Government. It may be truly said that so well did he measure up to the highest standards as a Representative in Congress that his vote, with not a single exception during all his long service here, represented in his honest judgment his duty to his constituents and his country. If I were called upon to point out the greatest fault of Congress, it would be the frequency with which Members of Congress—not from bad motives, I am sure—listen to appeals which ought not to be heeded and fail sometimes to let their votes express their own judgment of what ought to be done by the representatives of the people in this great body. I believe sincerely that if the same courage and devotion to convictions which FRED BLACKMON possessed could be made the unvarying rule with Members of both branches of Congress, we should witness at once the obliteration of every weakness that threatens the perpetuity of the Republic. If only our legislation could be made to express the independent thought of the men who compose the membership of the House and Senate, thoughtful men could face the future unafraid.

A corresponding characteristic of his devotion to his convictions was his loyalty to his friends. He had a capacity for winning and holding the affections of men that I have seldom seen equaled. It happened to be my lot to convey to his friends here the shocking news of his death. The announcement came first to our colleague, Mr. DRANE, from a friend in Florida, and the message was handed me by Mr. DRANE. I began immediately to communicate the sad news, first to members of the Alabama delegation. In every instance, even among the humblest employees about the House Office Building, all who heard the message stopped to express their regret, and in many instances to evidence their grief with tears. I was a member of the Congressional party that attended the funeral. I do not think I ever observed more widespread manifestation of sorrow among the people of an entire community than was shown by the good people of Calhoun County and other sections of Alabama represented at the funeral.

I stood by the new-made grave on the mountain side and watched the vast throng gathered there. On one side there was an assemblage of colored people. They stood just beyond the grave from me and I saw them as, with tears rolling down their cheeks, they watched the casket borne forward amid a profusion of flowers to its last resting place. I thought of the many friends assembled, the respect paid by the Congress of the Nation, the grief shown in high official circles, the eloquent address of the minister still ringing in my ears. But, as I looked into the saddened faces of the Negroes in front of me I thought as I think now that, after all there can be no higher eulogy of any man than that the humblest who knew him should pay him the tribute of tears. These simple, humble people knew the big heart forever hushed and they knew they would miss the generosity and kindliness so long enjoyed.

I venture the statement that no Member of this House has greater personal hold upon the people of his district than had Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, we have had some strenuous and hard-fought issues in the politics of Alabama during the past 10 years. During a portion of this time Mr. BLACKMON was an avowed adherent of policies to which a majority of the people of his district were ardently opposed. They knew that he would not change his convictions to fit public opinion or follow the fortunes of politics. But, notwithstanding the issues that sometimes divided the electorate into hostile camps, he had always a personal following that made him invincible in his district.

Mr. BLACKMON loved the people who had honored him. He loved the scenes and associations of his native State and was impatiently planning, voluntarily to retire from public life and take up again the practice of law among his people at home. Above all he desired to resume life with his family, free from the interruptions and hindrances unavoidable on the part of Members of Congress. His devotion to his family was a matter of common comment among his friends and he often expressed his solicitude for them and his desire to have larger part in the education of his children. About a year and a half ago he came into my office one day and finding me alone sat down and handed me a paper which he said he wanted me to read. It was a letter addressed to his son filled with advice, based upon life experience and wide knowledge of men and affairs. He realized that his physical powers were not so strong as they had been. He even so expressed himself to me. I read and reread the letter which breathed the tenderest affection and solicitude for both his children and their mother. It was one of the most beautiful letters I have ever read and would adorn the library of any home. So it was at all times and everywhere. He loved those about him and thought always of their welfare and happiness. He spent his life in unselfish service, but he drew about him thousands and thousands who were happy to serve and honor him. Let us trust that the same generosity and charity which he practiced here may be shown him in his journey into the Great Beyond.

> Who seeks for heaven alone to save his soul
> Will keep the path, but will not reach the goal;
> While he who walks in love may wander far,
> But God will bring him where the blessed are.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, again and for the third time within two years the House of Representatives is meeting to pay tribute to the memory of a distinguished Alabaman.

We often wonder why the life of a strong and valuable man should be cut down in the very prime of its usefulness, yet this question can not be answered by human beings because to us it has not been given the power to understand, and we are only reminded that "even in the midst of life we are in death."

How difficult it is to realize that FRED L. BLACKMON has left the scenes of his earthly usefulness. But a few weeks ago he was amongst us with all his splendid cordiality and vigorous activity. To-day he sleeps beneath the sod of his home land on a beautiful hillside which overlooks the city of Anniston, Ala., whose people he loved, honored, and served so well.

The death of Mr. BLACKMON was to me a personal loss, and mere words are feeble and inadequate on this occasion. While I had known him for many years, and knew his reputation throughout Alabama as a man of superb intellect and splendid integrity, and as a great leader in the progress and development of our State, yet I was not closely associated with him until I came to serve in this House. Here our association became intimate. As a beginner in the work of Congress I often called for his wise counsel and sound judgment, and he always gave it cheerfully, patiently, and gladly. He seemed to find a pleasure in giving me the benefit of his advice and experience whenever I consulted him. Like all others who knew him I learned to love him for his genuineness and sincerity; I learned to admire him for his courage and loyalty to his convictions. He had the brain power to grapple with and settle the most difficult problems in his public service, and he had the courage to carry his ideas into effect.

Mr. Speaker, it is always easy for one in public life to drift with the current, but it is only the strong man who elects to stem the tide. The records of the Congress as well as the records of the Legislature of Alabama disclose the fact that FRED L. BLACKMON as State senator and as Member of Congress did not seek the lines of least resistance and drift with the current in order that he might curry temporary, popular favor. With his keen and powerful intellect he firmly visualized every proposition with which he was confronted as a public servant, and stood firmly and "four square," with a conviction that was honest, a purpose that was pure, and a heart that was big and generous. I never saw him lose his splendid poise. He was as solid as the rock of Gibraltar. It is no wonder, then, that even those who disagreed with him at times politically admired his courage and appreciated his sincerity. It is no wonder that he drew close to him and held firmly the friendship of strong men. It is no wonder that he had such a hold on the hearts of a grateful constituency. Mr. BLACKMON had real friends, and drew from them a quality of friendship which meant devotion, and even sacrifice, without the asking, if the necessity for sacrifice arose. That was the kind of friendship he gave and the same quality he received.

Being true and sincere himself he expected the same in others, and therefore he spurned that political activity which was even akin to that of the demagogue. Being well grounded in the fundamental principles of his party he served it unselfishly and faithfully. His every official act was done, and his every vote was cast, during more than 20 years of public service, with the highest sense of duty to his people, his State, and his Nation, serving each as only a patriot can serve.

Mr. BLACKMON was a great student of human nature. He seemed to understand men probably better than anyone else I ever knew. He was slow to pass judgment on his fellow man. Always giving the best he had, it was natural that he sought for the good rather than the evil in others. He preferred to seal his lips rather than speak of the faults and shortcomings of his fellow man. This characteristic was so noticeable in him that I mentioned it to him on one occasion, and how well do I remember his reply, which was, "As my little son grows into manhood and takes up his life's work, though I may be dead, I hope when he comes in contact with those who have known me they will associate with him only the good they may have found in his father." His devotion to his family was beautiful.

FRED BLACKMON admired men for their real worth regardless of their financial, social, or political position. At his funeral I saw hundreds and hundreds of men from field and factory, from shop and store, and from every walk in life, both white and colored, with heavy hearts and heads bowed down in grief. Every person, from the old colored servant, who in tears sobbed that she had lost the best friend she ever had, to strong men in high stations of life, seemed deeply and visibly affected by his death.

We mourn his loss here. Official Washington will miss his genial smile and hearty cordiality. The Alabama delegation will miss him. The Congress will miss him, and his death is a distinct loss to the people of his district, the State of Alabama, and the whole Nation. His memory will be cherished so long as we live. Truly it can be said of him, "His life was gentle, and all the elements so mixed in him that nature might stand up and say to all the world, this was a man."

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, when we analyze the character of our departed friend [Mr. BLACKMON], we come upon three beautiful qualities which he possessed to an extraordinary degree. They were his predominating characteristics. They mark his life and measure as a man.

First I place among Mr. BLACKMON'S characteristics his virtue of loyalty. Loyal men are born, they are not made. The instincts of loyalty are natural, they are not acquired. Loyalty is a sentiment of the heart, it is not an attribute of the mind. He was a loyal man in the best sense of that term. He was loyal to his home town and home community, to his district, to his State, and to our common country. He knew no divided nor qualified allegiance to the objects which he loyally cherished. In none of them could he find fault, and he would allow no other man to find fault in them in his presence. He was loyal to the institutions of the section in which he lived, to the traditions of the South, to its best, its noblest, its highest; to its dreams and to its ideals. He was loyal to what we know and speak of as American institutions, the old-fashioned things of our country, to its liberties, to its aspirations, and to its memories and its hopes.

Next I place among Mr. BLACKMON'S qualities his capacity for friendship. He loved his friends deeply. There was a delicacy and self-sacrifice in his attachment to them akin to that found in women. He loved his friends unselfishly always. He was willing to prefer them, their wishes, their inclinations, and their interests above his own. He who would have friends must show himself friendly. No man who loves and cherishes his friends truly and with singleness of heart ever finds himself without friends. Small wonder that a vast concourse of friends gathered at Mr. BLACKMON'S grave.

Mr. BLACKMON'S third great quality was generosity. He cherished no ill will. He forgave all. He overlooked the errors and shortcomings of all. He ever turned the actions of others to the best light. He interpreted the conduct of men in the light of his own sincerity of purpose. No word of criticism of any fellow Member of Congress was ever heard from him. To him they were ever patriotic and good men. Over their faults and mistakes he drew the veil of charity. He was incapable of small, mean thoughts or petty criticism. He wanted men to be noble and true, and sought always to believe them to be so.

We shall miss him. Alabama will miss him. The House of Representatives will miss him. The Nation will miss him. His great district will send one of its splendid citizens as his successor. That he may be comparable to our departed friend in these great qualities that mean so much to public virtue and to private worth is my deep hope. No man can ask for more.

Mr. BOWLING. Mr. Speaker, our lamented friend, Congressman BLACKMON, and I were boys together down in the beautiful Choccolocco Valley in Calhoun County, Ala. We attended the same church and went to the same school. Together we entered into the sports and diversions of the time. To-day, as I stand in this Hall and with his many other friends do honor to his memory, many happy recollections of incidents in the days of our youth and young manhood come to my mind as memory brings the light of other days around me.

He lived in a fine old southern mansion, the abode of culture and the home of a generous hospitality. A grove of great oaks about the home is known far and wide in Calhoun County as the Blackmon Grove. In years gone by it was a noted meeting place for political orators, and many times there were staged fierce political discussions. To all of these forensic contests Mr. BLACKMON, as boy and man, was an interested listener, and in his front yard, as it were, he learned his first lessons in political battle, the influence of which served to shape his life and fix his destiny.

After a while our lines diverged and for a number of years I saw him but little. I knew, of course, that he was an honored Member of Congress, playing well his part and reflecting credit upon the State of his adoption.

It has been a personal satisfaction for me to hear his fellow Members to-day pay tribute to the sterling qualities of his manhood, and his great worth as a legislator. That he was a friend faithful and true all who knew him will attest; that he served the Nation well in a great crisis is a part of the written record of our country, passed on for the benefit and the admiration of those who shall succeed us here.

The last public appearance of Mr. BLACKMON in the Hall of Congress was three weeks ago, when he presided as Speaker pro tempore at the memorial session in honor of the late Senator Bankhead. He was a stricken man then, but no one dreamed that the end was so near. That night he left this city to visit his home in search of health. In a few days, hoping that the balmy air of Florida would benefit him, he went to that State, but death was fast upon his footsteps, and the end came within a few hours after reaching the home of a kinsman in the land of flowers.

Of the events of his last hours no extended account has come to us; but we do know that with characteristic fortitude and tender remembrance of those he loved, he gave his directions touching matters close to his home and his heart. Of his immediate family none were present except his little son, Fred, jr., to whom he spoke his final word of cheer and love.

I doubt not that in those last hours, when the world was receding, when the light of this world faded from his dying eyes, he caught the gleam of the light that streams from the eternal city; and when his dying ear no longer heard the sounds of earth, he caught the strains of music proceeding from the great throne. A noble man has gone. Peace to his ashes; God rest his soul; and may those he loved ever abide within the shadow of the everlasting wing.

Here Mr. HUDDLESTON took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, this hour has been set aside by order of the House of Representatives for memorial addresses on the life, character, and public service of Hon. FRED L. BLACKMON. In this way we preserve the memory of our distinguished and beloved colleague through the permanent records of our Government, a distinction he merits not alone because he was a Member of this body at the time of his death, but more on account of his achievements in both private and public life.

Hon. FRED L. BLACKMON came up from the lowly walks of life to a place of power and influence in our National Government. By toil, privation, and industry he educated himself and was admitted to the bar. By his ability, perseverance, and integrity he won early recognition and success in his chosen profession. He was public spirited. He became a student of public questions. He was large hearted and sympathetic. The common people trusted him and elected him to the greatest legislative body in the world.

As a Member of this body most of us first learned to know him and to admire and respect him for his sterling qualities, his devotion to the public service, and his fidelity to his constituents whom he served in this House so faithfully and so ably.

I served with Mr. BLACKMON on one of the most important committees of this House for nearly four years. I learned to know him well. His life and character will be an inspiration to the young men of his district, State, and Nation. It was the lives of men such as that of Hon. FRED L. BLACKMON that Longfellow had in mind in the following lines:

Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime,
And departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time.

Footprints that perhaps another
Sailing o'er life's solemn main,
A forlorn and shipwrecked brother.
Seeing may take heart again.

Let us, then, be up and doing
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I have been especially requested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER], who is unavoidably absent, and who served with Mr. BLACKMON on the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to secure permission for him to extend his remarks in the RECORD. And I ask unanimous consent that the request be granted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DENT. And, Mr. Speaker, I am also especially requested to ask the same consent for the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BELL] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROUSE], both of whom served with our late friend on the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DENT. And, Mr. Speaker, I ask that all Members be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD on the life, character, and public services of the late Representative from Alabama, Mr. FRED L. BLACKMON.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. DENT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Thereupon, in accordance with the resolution previously adopted, the House (at 2 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) adjourned until Monday, February 21, 1921, at 12 o'clock m.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by W. H. Overhue, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15962) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes; had agreed to the conference requested by the Senate; and that Mr. GOOD, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. EVANS of Montana were appointed managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14461) to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes; had agreed to the conference requested by the Senate; and that Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, Mr. SIEGEL, Mr. VAILE, Mr. SABATH, and Mr. RAKER were appointed managers of the conference on the part of the House.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McLEAN presented a memorial of sundry members of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Mystic, Conn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for physical education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented memorials of the Woman's Club of Wallingford; the Cheshire Garden Club, of Cheshire; and the Women's Club of Norwalk, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against commercializing the national parks, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a petition of the New Haven Auto Dealers' Association, of New Haven, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to include a Federal highway commission in proposed legislation to extend Federal aid to the several States in the construction of roads, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Torrington, Conn., protesting against an appropriation being made in the agricultural appropriation bill for the investigation of and improvement of tobacco, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of Walter J. Smith Post, No. 511, Veterans of Foreign Wars, of New Britain, Conn., and W. T. Mr. KENDRICK presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of Wyoming, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, as follows:

THE STATE OF WYOMING,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Wyoming, ss:

I, W. E. Chaplin, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed copy of enrolled senate joint memorial No. 3, of the Sixteenth Legislature of the State of Wyoming, being original senate joint memorial No. 5, has been carefully compared with the original, filed in this office, and is a full, true, and correct transcript of the same and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 10th day of February, A. D. 1921.

[SEAL.]

W. E. CHAPLIN,
Secretary of State.
By H. M. SYMONS,
Deputy.

Enrolled joint memorial 3, Senate, Sixteenth Legislature of the State of Wyoming.

Memorial to the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States requesting of Congress prompt action on H. R. 15873, for extension of Federal aid for highway construction.

Whereas the Federal Government has heretofore and during the past years extended Federal aid to the several States of the Union for the purpose of constructing permanent highways; and

Whereas by reason of such Federal aid many of the States have begun the construction of permanent State and interstate highways which have been completed in part and the completion of which will necessitate further Federal aid; and

Whereas heretofore on the 25th day of January, 1921, the Roads Committee of the House of Representatives of the United States did unanimously recommend an authorization for the appropriation of $100,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, also the appropriation of $3,000,000 for the national forest roads and trails, which said recommendation is known as H. R. 15873, by the terms of which bill further Federal aid will be extended to the States of the Union for further permanent road construction and completion of roads under construction under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916; and

Whereas the Legislature of the State of Wyoming did heretofore pass and adopt a law assenting to and agreeing to conform to the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads and for other purposes," together with all acts and legislation amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, or which shall grant or authorize aid for the construction, improvement, maintenance, or repair of public roads or highways: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Wyoming (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to take favorable and prompt action and to pass H. R. 15873 as unanimously recommended by the Roads Committee of the House of Representatives of the United States; be it further

Resolved, that a copy of this memorial be sent to Senator FRANCIS E. WARREN, Senator JOHN B. KENDRICK, and Hon. FRANK W. MONDELL, Representative in Congress for the State of Wyoming.

W. W. DALEY,
President of the Senate.
L. R. EWART,
Speaker of the House.

Mr. WILLIS presented a resolution of the American Association of Flint and Lime Glass Manufacturers (Inc.), of Pittsburgh, Pa., favoring legislation to prohibit importation of products manufactured in whole or in part by child labor, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial of Company B, Old Guard, of Newark, Ohio, protesting against the enactment of legislation incorporating the Grand Army of the Republic, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a resolution of the Tri-State Development Congress, of St. Paul, Minn., favoring legislation extending the powers of the Mississippi River Commission as far north as the Twin Cities, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Charlevoix, Mich., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution of the Exchange Club, of Grand Haven, Mich., favoring legislation for a deep waterway via the St. Lawrence River, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of Michigan, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 11.

A concurrent resolution respectfully urging the Senate of the United States to enact legislation for the payment to each honorably discharged soldier, sailor, and marine of the bonus as passed by the United States House of Representatives.

Whereas there is a general desire on the part of an appreciative American public to show in a material way gratitude for the valiant work of our soldiers, sailors, and marines in the war against Germany and her allies; and

Whereas the general public feel that this Nation owes to its soldiers, sailors, and marines of the late war an everlasting debt of gratitude which financial aid can never repay; and

Whereas they believe there is justly due to those men who have made such noble sacrifices a greater measure of financial aid than provided for by existing laws; and

Whereas the subject of a soldier's bonus has been before the Federal Congress for some time, and the measure has passed the House of Representatives and will come up for consideration by the Senate of the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring) That the Legislature of the State of Michigan urge the Senate of the United States to pass the "bonus bill" as passed by the House of Representatives at Washington, D. C., at an early date, so that the boys who made such noble sacrifices may not have to wait any longer for this expression of the gratitude of the American people.

Resolved further, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the United States Senators from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND (for Mr. NEWBERRY) presented duplicate copy of the preceding resolution of the Legislature of Michigan, favoring legislation to pay an additional bonus to ex-service men, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also (for Mr. NEWBERRY) presented memorials of the St. Vincent de Paul Society, of Detroit, and the clergy of Ste. Anne de Detroit Catholic Church, of Detroit, all in the State of Michigan, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also (for Mr. NEWBERRY) presented a petition of Louisa St. Clair Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of Detroit, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the protection of maternity and infancy, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also (for Mr. NEWBERRY) presented a resolution of the Michigan State Farm Bureau, of Lansing, Mich., protesting against the enactment of legislation placing a tariff on Canadian lumber, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also (for Mr. NEWBERRY) presented a resolution of Sault Ste. Marie Civic and Commercial Association, of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., favoring an amendment to the seaman's act relative to traffic on the Great Lakes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GOODING presented a resolution adopted by the Idaho Mining Association, at Boise, Idaho, favoring immediate steps being taken by the carriers and ore producers and shippers, jointly, to secure such readjustment and revision of the present ore rates as will permit of the continued operation of the metal mines, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BALL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 5023) to provide for the closing of Cedar Road between Quincy Street and Shepherd Street NW., in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 807) thereon.

Mr. KENDRICK, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13402) for the purchase of land occupied by experiment vineyards near Fresno and Oakville, Calif., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 808) thereon.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. RANSDELL introduced a bill (S. 5030) authorizing the city of New Orleans, La., to extend Dauphine Street in said city across the United States military reservation known as the Jackson Barracks (with accompanying paper), which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment providing for a survey and investigation of the channel and anchorage basin of New Bedford (Mass.) Harbor, with a view to obtaining a depth of at least 35 feet, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. CALDER submitted an amendment proposing to pay Malcolm J. Hartman, lately a topographical draftsman in the Navy, $1,370.87 for actual expenses incurred while stationed at the naval ammunition depot, Iona Island, N. Y., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment providing that the Secretary of Agriculture, in cooperation with the State agricultural colleges and experiment stations and the United States Council of the World's Poultry Congress and other organizations, be authorized on behalf of the United States to make suitable exhibits at the World's Poultry Congress of the International Association of Poultry Instructors and Investigators, to be held at The Hague, Holland, September 6 to 13, 1921, and appropriating $15,000 therefor, intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA MUNICIPAL COURT.

Mr. KELLOGG submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 10074) to enlarge the jurisdiction of the municipal court of the District of Columbia, and to regulate appeals from the judgments of said court, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is the motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15812) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

Mr. GRONNA resumed and concluded the speech begun by him on Saturday. The speech entire is as follows:

Saturday, February 19, 1921.

Mr. President, when the bill providing for appropriations for the Postal Service was about to be taken up, I made an effort to call to the attention of the Senate the importance of passing the Agricultural appropriation bill. The bill reported by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was permitted to be taken up; justly so, of course. Later on the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations asked that the first deficiency bill might be disposed of before the Agricultural appropriation bill was taken up, and in the meantime the bill which was passed to-day while I was absent, the immigration bill, was made the unfinished business. That measure has been disposed of.

The bill to which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] has referred is a House bill, no amendment having been made to it by the Senate committee. I take it, therefore, that very little time will be required, as it does not go to conference. It is not so with the Agricultural appropriation bill. More than 70 amendments have been added to that bill by the committee. How many more will be offered and agreed to in the Senate I do not know. It is reasonable to believe that there will be 70 or 80 amendments to dispose of. Some of them are provisions which in their nature are legislation. They have to go not only to the Committee on Agriculture, but the bill will have to go to the Committee on Appropriations under the new rules of the House.

I do not intend to take the responsibility for defeating the Agricultural appropriation bill, but I am going to place the responsibility where it justly belongs. I have been in Congress long enough to know that when Congress wants to defeat a certain measure there is always a possibility to find an excuse to do so. I personally certainly will suffer no more nor less by the strangling or the defeating of the Agricultural appropriation bill than any other Member of this body, but the people of my State and the people of the entire drought-stricken area will suffer if the item providing for an appropriation of $50,000 is rejected, unless my bill can be passed as a separate measure.

But there are other provisions in the Agricultural appropriation bill in which I am deeply interested. Regardless of what may be said about the farmers of the West—how much wealth they possess and how much money they have made during the last few years—I find that in several sections of the West, in the drought-stricken area, they are not able to get even seed grain. Their credit is exhausted. The banks are unable to extend credit to them. On many occasions and in many localities the counties have extended credit for the purchase of seed grain, but in those localities they are no longer able to extend further credit, so that all these agencies have ceased to function.

I am glad to say the farmers are not affected in the eastern portion of North Dakota, or even in the central part of the State, but in the western part of the State, and over a large area in Montana, and in the western part of South Dakota, and in many other sections the farmers are absolutely helpless, and will not be able to purchase seed grain; and, of course, there will be vast areas in the spring-wheat belt, estimated all the way from two to four million acres, which will not be planted to any crops at all.

I can hardly believe that it is the wish of the Senate to continue those conditions, but, of course, it is for the Senate to take such action as it sees fit. But I do not want to shirk my responsibility, and I call attention to the absolute necessity of doing something for these people. There are many other things which I shall try to call attention to. I shall try to show that there is more urgency for the passing of the Agricultural appropriation bill than of the bill which the Senator from Michigan has referred to. I am not opposing that bill. But why did not the Senator bring up that bill instead of the Post Office appropriation bill if the country is to go to pieces without that legislation?

It seems to me to be unfair that just as soon as this measure, which affects the farmers throughout the entire country, is sought to be called up, we always find that some other measure is said to be more important. I do not believe that claim is proved. The time may come when the railroads who are now so poor, and who confess to this poverty-stricken condition, will have nothing to haul; they will have no tonnage. If we can not make conditions such that the people in the grain States and in the other sections of the country are able to carry on farming, it seems to me that the losses to the railroads will be greater from that cause than from the cause to which the Senator has called attention, because his bill only involves $350,000,000. Mr. President, that is not a drop in the bucket to be compared with the tremendous amount of freight, and the money involved in this bill.

It is true that the bill does not carry as large an appropriation as the bill now sought to be brought up by the Senator from Michigan, but the value of business which will be transacted through the operations of this bill amounts to many times more than the amount of money involved in the bill referred to by the Senator from Michigan.

I want for a few moments to take the time of the Senate to read a communication which I received this morning from a farmer in South Dakota, just to show the conditions throughout that section of the country. This letter is dated Britton, S. Dak., February 16, 1921, is addressed to me, and reads:

BRITTON, S. DAK., February 16, 1921.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
United States Senate Chamber,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Probably the most widely discussed topic now engaging the attention of the public here in the West at the present moment is the farming problem, particularly as it relates to the marketing of wheat and its price movements.

The writer, by reason of years experience in the flour milling and grain shipping business, subsequent close contact with farm conditions here in northeastern South Dakota in connection with the real estate and farm-loan business—and himself owner of land farmed by tenants—feels qualified to analyze the situation which now confronts the American wheat grower; and in pursuance of such a purpose has prepared an article, copy of which is inclosed herewith, in which the aim of the writer is to depict the actual conditions under which the wheat grower is laboring, to point out a few of the glaring inconsistencies in the wheat trade and otherwise which handicap his progress, and to suggest a tentative plan, subject to amplification, as a remedy for the existing evils of our system of distribution.

As the writer is aware that you are vitally concerned in betterment of farm conditions, both from the standpoint of a farmer yourself, and by reason of your honorable position on the Agricultural Committee of the Senate, this article is being submitted for your consideration in the hope that some portion of it, or an idea expressed therein, may serve a practical use or purpose at such times when the question is under consideration by your committee, or is being discussed on the floor of the Senate.

Trusting that time is near at hand when the estate of the wheat grower shall be elevated to a plane where chance in the matter of value of his product is eliminated, I beg to remain,

Yours, very truly,

FREDERIC J. BROWN.

Mr. Brown has submitted an estimate, which I ask to be permitted to read, because it bears directly upon the question which I called attention to, namely, the necessity of passing the Agricultural appropriation bill in order that the amount provided for in the bill, namely, $5,000,000, shall be appropriated and loaned to farmers in small amounts not to exceed $300 to any one farmer to purchase seed grain. That very thing was done two years ago, when the people in western Kansas, in a portion of Montana, and, I believe, in a few instances in the western part of my State, availed themselves of the opportunity of getting seed from the Government, or through the credit of the Government.

Mr. President, nearly all those loans have been paid back to the Government. It was not a subsidy to the farmer, as the bill of the Senator from Michigan now proposes a subsidy to the railroads. It was not taken out of the Treasury and given to the farmer, but it was paid back with interest. That is possibly why it is more important to pass the Senator's bill.

This estimate does not refer to my own State, but to conditions in the splendid, rich agricultural State of South Dakota, our neighbor to the south, a State which, in part, I had the honor when a young man to represent when it was a Territory.

This estimate is entitled:

Wheat, the lifeblood of the nations, the "handball" of commerce, the enigma of the farmer—A problem in political economy, on the proper solution of which depends the stability of America's most vital industry. By Frederic J. Brown.

If this were an old document I might apologize for reading it, but it is so new, so fresh, that the ink has hardly had time to try on the paper. It is a living issue before the country.

I read from Mr. Brown's paper:

The problem is stated:

* * * * * * *

Assuming the case of a young man having a wife and small family settled upon an improved and fully cultivated half section of land in Marshall County, S. Dak., and engaged in raising small grains exclusively—primarily wheat, rotating alternately with a combination of oats, barley, and flax, it is proposed to show the cost of producing a bushel of wheat for the season of 1920, based on the market value—September 15, 1920—of the other grains produced on this farm, thrashing having been completed in this case on August 30, 1920.

It should be borne in mind that this young man belongs strictly to the wheat-raising class of farmer, has up until now made no attempt at diversified farming or the production on a commercial scale of beef cattle or finished hogs, nor is he engaged in pure-bred stock raising. Such would be aside the purpose of this cost survey, which, as stated, is to arrive at the cost of wheat when raised as the staple crop. What may be its cost under the varying conditions of farming where other lines are specialized in will not be here considered. In fact, the writer is free to admit that to enter upon a cost analysis of wheat when raised as a minor crop and involved with the production cost of pork, beef, and mutton on the hoof, together with butter fat, poultry, eggs, corn, potatoes, flaxseed and the like, without statistics applicable to local conditions, would be like trying "to sail a vessel on an uncharted sea"; that is to say, the question of wheat cost under conditions that obtain on many of our present-day farms is by far too complex a problem to admit of analysis without reference to and study of reliable data covering a period of three to five years under the conditions here prevailing.

But to return to the question: Our young farmer is the owner of 320 acres of land, fenced, improved with a fairly complete set of farm buildings, and an artesian well. It is not fully paid for, yet his equity therein is substantial, and with energy and thrift in his favor—and the elements favoring—he will eventually pay off the mortgage and thereby reduce his fixed charges. His equipment consists of eight good work horses and a full set of farming tools adequate to farm the acreage under plow. Also he enters upon the season of farming with a supply of required seed grain to sow the allotted fields, and with a stock of feed and hay sufficient to carry him through the harvest.

The value of his land is fixed for the accounting period by the sale within the 12 months of an adjoining quarter section of bare land—same quality of soil and equal in fertility—at $75 per acre—half cash, balance at 7 per cent interest.

The area of this farm is practically all under plow, save only 15 acres for building site, yard, garden plot, feed lots, and hog pasture; and the fields were sown this year: Oats, 40 acres; barley, 80 acres; flax, 30 acres; wheat (Pearson durum), 155 acres.

The season was exceptionally favorable to the growth of the straw; but as time for maturity approached, excessive hot weather prevented the heads attaining full growth, thus reducing the promised yield of wheat by one-third to a half. However, his oats made 40 bushels average yield; barley, 28 bushels; flax, 15 bushels, while the wheat yielded a 14-bushel average—the latter being of the amber durum grade.

Let me say that that is not a small yield in the spring-wheat area and it will be found upon close examination of the statistics that it is a fairly good average crop.

The quality of his wheat was good, showed a test weight of 59½ pounds per bushel, docked 4 per cent, and on September 1—the day he finished thrashing—the local grain buyer offered him 3 cents over card price, or $2.20 per bushel.

As our farmer had to help a neighbor with his thrashing, he concluded to let his grain lay in the elevator, at least for the period of free storage. Promptly then, on September 15, he came to town to cash in on his crop and to settle up running accounts. In the interim, grain prices had "bulged" a little, so that he was enabled to cash in at $2.25 for his durum, $2.89 for his flaxseed, 78 cents for his barley, and 47 cents for his oats.

I will say that these prices are at least 40 per cent higher than the prevailing prices to-day for the same grain and seed.

Having paid up all of his local bills and paid interest on his notes at the bank, also a payment on principal (of bank loans), he is now ready to cast up his account of the season's work, which, to summarize, is as follows:

I might say that the price for flaxseed mentioned in these figures is more than $1 higher than the prevailing price for flaxseed.

I wish to assure the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] that I am not talking against time. I wish to assure every Senator that I am not talking against time. But I have been in the Senate now for 10 years, and I have on several occasions made an honest effort to better conditions on the farm. The Senate has never seen fit to give to the farmer that to which the farmer is entitled. Questions affecting the farming industry are like Greek to most people, and the main reason is that they are not interested in the subject; but if we continue along the line we have been pursuing we may find ourselves in the condition that Rome was when that nation went to pieces simply because the people were unable to supply the necessary food. That is not an impossibility in this country, because conditions are being imposed under which it is impossible for the farmers to produce.

I am deeply interested in this question. I do not wish to refer to my State in any uncomplimentary way, but 36 banking institutions have closed their doors. Senators are calling attention to conditions which they claim are bringing about the ruination of the railroads, but if they will take the time to investigate the condition of the farmers they will find their situation such that any man who opposes helping the farmers and bringing them out of the chaos in which they now are will feel ashamed of his work.

I know the conditions in the United States, not only in my State but in every State in the Union. As chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, it has been my business and my duty to make an examination of those conditions. I know the conditions in the South, and while I know that many Senators on the other side are interested in the other bill, because purchases have been made, as the Senator from Michigan has said, and those from whom the purchases have been made want their bills paid, let me tell them that the real interest of the people of the South in the Agricultural appropriation bill is a hundred times greater than is their interest in the railroad bill.

It worries me somewhat, Mr. President, when a Senator gently and kindly suggests to me that I am talking against time when he does not even do me the honor to listen to the poor words which I am uttering. Of course, we in the West feel the situation more keenly perhaps than do the people in any other section, but it is also being felt in the South. If the Senators from that section will return to their homes, they will find that nine-tenths of their people will say, "You are not trying to help us in the present deplorable condition." That is what they will tell you; and yet I have it suggested to me when I am addressing myself to a question greater than that affecting all the railroads with all their property thrown in that I talking against time; it is not true.

Monday, February 21, 1921.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I hope that I may have the attention of every Senator, as I shall take only a very few minutes to present the conditions among the farmers of the drought-stricken area of the West.

When the Senate took a recess on Saturday I was reading from a letter of Mr. Frederic J. Brown, of Britton, S. Dak., setting forth the conditions prevailing in the Northwest. I do not intend to read further from the letter. It is a long letter, and I shall simply ask to have it printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The letter referred to is as follows:

OBSERVATIONS.

The market price on No. 1 durum wheat at Britton on September 15, 1920 (the date of reckoning above cost), being $2.25, the proceeds of this wheat crop amounted only to $4,236.75—whereupon the account being closed, the net result of the farming operations in this case, for the year, showed a loss of $1,330.65, thus depriving the farmer of any return on his investment, but leaving him $1,159.35 for the farmer's own time and labor in conducting the farming operations.

Under the existing marketing system, this farmer was obliged to accept the price for his wheat paid by the local buyer, which, as we have seen, entailed a loss for the year of $1,330.65. In turn, the price offered by the local buyer reflected the value of wheat at primary markets on the day of sale, September 15. In the determination of those values, which fluctuate wildly at times, and continually record variations, both wide and narrow, from day to day and from hour to hour, it does not appear the producer, or grower of wheat, at any time is taken into account, nor is there any consideration given as to how much or how little it cost to produce the grain.

True, there is a time between March 1 and August 1, when the new winter and spring wheat crops are in the making and indications point to a greater or lessened acreage and production of wheat above or below the 10-year average, that the price actually is affected by the position or course of the farmer as to the total area of farm land sown to wheat—if the same shows a variation from the preceding year of not less than and more than a half million acres sown to wheat. As to the factor of production (and yields), those are matters largely of climatic conditions and over which the farmer has no control.

Plainly, then, this fixing the value on wheat—the great staple food of the American people—by the traders in the commodity after it has passed from the producer's control is vicious, is inimical to the interests of the American farmer, and accounts for thousands upon thousands unprofitable ventures in wheat raising, not only in the past year but in preceding years as well. Going somewhat further into the economy now responsible for price making on wheat, all informed minds are obliged to admit that these market values for this commodity are to a very great extent, if not wholly, the concomitant effect (of trading in wheat futures, in the pits of our grain exchanges) of the relative value of two forces playing against each other. On one side are the elevator interests controlling line and terminal elevators and speculators who may on occasion see an advantage in buying futures in wheat, both aiming to boost prices to secure a profit on their lines or holdings. Opposed to them are the commercial millers and flour jobbers (selling futures as a hedge against their wheat and flour stocks) and the professional speculators, selling short upon the first sign of business depression or slackening of export demand or on crop reports, many of which are unreliable. To this class also belongs the exporter—all endeavoring to depress futures to secure profits on their short sales. The course of the futures markets being affected and influenced by a preponderance of selling orders—more sellers than buyers—the range of prices is downward, which is followed always by a corresponding decline in cash wheat prices.

It is just that very thing that is breaking the back of the wheat raiser, enslaved to the iniquitous system wherein the grain futures markets rules and dominates the cash-grain prices. A beautiful illustration of one phase of our economic system where "the tail wags the dog."

Of late there has been considerable discussion of the value and necessity of future trading in wheat, on one side; and on the other, of the evil effect thereof, some even advocating that short selling of wheat should be prohibited by law. Aside from the moral viewpoint of the question, the fact of the matter is the farmer, in the capacity of a producer, is not at all concerned in what happens to the pit trading of the grain exchanges, once the marketing system is reconstructed and founded upon a sound and rational basis.

Another distressing feature attending our marketing system is the practice of reselling wheat. It is not so much the weight of the original supply of wheat coming on to the market—that it is heavier than it should be in the months of September, October, and November, and which excess supply would be obviated under a regulated system—that breaks the market price, and at other times prevents the market advancing; but the constant reselling that is taking place, from first-hand to seventh and eighth hand. The shifting of wheat from country elevator to Minneapolis, then to Duluth or Chicago, then to Buffalo, then to New York, then to Philadelphia or Baltimore, then to the interior miller, then into export channels, means that that particular parcel has been sold and resold many times over and every such sale is a market price factor, and as such—at each stage of the process—directly competes against the producer's own supply. Manifestly it is unfair and unjust to place the producer of a staple and vital commodity in a position where upon entering the market with his product he must be assailed by supplies of a like kind held speculatively and which from the beginning to almost the end of every season hang as a saturated cloud over our grain markets.

If the scheme of trading and price movements now in use admirably reflects the working of the law of supply and demand, as so many of the supporters of our boards of trade do contend, it can not be denied that supply thereby is greatly magnified and that demand, especially during the first half of the crop year, is literally deluged by the paradoxical oversupply. The effect of such a condition is to adversely affect the producer by tending to depress prices during that period when fully 75 per cent of his commodity must be liquidated in meeting credit obligations.

Except for the facilities now at our command and which have accrued as a result of modern inventions as applied to transportation and communication, our present-day distribution of wheat and its products is less efficient and productive of greater economic waste than that practiced by the Egyptians in the days of the Pharoahs, away back at the starting point in history. Wheat then, as now, it seems, was one of the prime necessities for human existence. Joseph, the ruler, being a just man and devout, was inspired—possessed genius—to perceive that in the days of plenty wisdom and prudence required that stores of food be laid up against the day of famine. And further, the record informs us, he did build storehouses to store in all the cities great quantities of wheat—he gathered corn as the sand of the sea, very much, until he left numbering, for it was without number. So that when famine spread over the earth, as it inevitably does follow plenty as night follows day, the people from far and near, in searching for food, came to trade with the Egyptians for their wheat. Though Joseph had a monopoly of the visible supply of food of the then known world, history does not record that the exchange rate was boosted as a result of the "corner," or that he added to the price of wheat all the traffic would stand. On the other hand, this was not an organized charity that the Egyptian ruler was conducting, for, howsoever the motive was founded on a beneficent purpose, we are obliged to accept the view that this garnering of the world wheat supply and the distribution thereof was conducted as a commercial enterprise and marked the inauguration of a commerce with the surrounding tribes, extending even to the tribes far to the north, and which eventually alleviated the suffering and distress of the widespread famine.

In the flight of the centuries following the epoch referred to it is not discoverable that the customs and manner of wheat trading have made any progress, and the only variation in our modern system that is discernible is chiefly in this respect: Accretions in the way of practices and abuses that may be summed up as a cycle of evils originating, emanating, and descending from the days and times and manners of the freebooter, the buccaneer, and the pirate.

Instead of the fictitious values placed on cash wheat from time to time, resulting in market rigging, manipulated markets, and the minute-to-minute variations in price of the futures, causing price fluctuations of the commodity in the course of 24 hours, amounting in instances to 10 per cent of its value, such price changes often being due or ascribed to causes wholly outside the wheat and flour trade, the farmer now is demanding the privilege of dealing in, for, and with his commodity on an equitable, rational, and legitimate basis. The cardinal point of that idea and plan is a single basic price, that for spot wheat, the actual commodity itself, and not for the options on that grain or what it may be worth for future delivery. As to the relative value of so-called December, March, or May wheat as now traded in on the exchanges, that is a matter entirely in the realm of speculation, will be operated and patronized by that element within and without the grain and milling trades which insists upon being accorded the privilege of placing its money on a "play with chance," and in which the farmer, in his capacity as producer, is not at all interested or concerned.

Naturally, this basic-price idea contemplates and would approximate the minimum cost of production of wheat as raised under ordinary farm methods in the heavy wheat-producing areas plus certain arbitraries adequate to place the grain in storage at seaboard, lake port, or milling centers, and for storage and interest charges accruing from and after September 1 down to July 1 succeeding, according to when delivery to miller or exporter is made.

No one seriously contends that American manufacturers of grain binders, grain drills, and plows under normal conditions sell their machines in Russia, Argentina, or Australia at prices which, when freights, commissions, and selling costs are deducted, constitute the price plus freight on identical machines sold to American farmers or that those export sales at all times reflect the full cost of manufacturing. If that were the case—no differential as applied to the home market—it is pretty safe to say that either labor and other costs would have to be cut nearly to the European level or all of our factories in those lines inside of one or two years close down or go into the hands of receivers. Instead what actually does transpire is this: The farmer pays for his machinery the manufacturer's price, and that price invariably includes cost of manufacture plus a profit, with the addition of an excess or reserve through and by which the manufacturer is enabled to dispose of his surplus output—the overproduction beyond the home demand—in foreign markets in competition with machinery and goods built and produced on lower cost bases. Hence it is an established policy that goods and, generally, commodities supplied to the American trade are sold outright on a cost-plus basis, while the exportable surplus only is consigned for sale at world-market or bidder's prices, a notable exception being the case of the wheat of the American farmer.

It is manifest to anyone making a study of the situation that if our farming industry is ever to be lifted from its present low estate, and if for the future that great basic industry is to be put on a plane with our great manufacturing and mercantile enterprises and be conducted along sound, economic lines, the present marketing and credit systems governing the production and sale of wheat must be discarded and a wholly different conception thereof adopted. In its stead and place one of two alternatives must follow: Either the Government must take over and work out the problem of distribution of wheat, as was done during the war, or the wheat growers themselves must combine and pool their commodity under a charter from Congress. The latter plan would contemplate the formation of a national merchandising agency under the supervision of a Government commission or under direction of the Department of Agriculture. Its scope would be to serve as the medium between the producer or the local cooperative elevator companies and the millers and exporters, and in pursuance of that purpose would acquire by lease or purchase existing terminal storage facilities in so far as they are necessary and modern from the standpoint of utility. The capital stock would be underwritten by the farmers on a basis of their acreage production of wheat, it being required that upward of 50 per cent of the annual acreage sown to wheat be represented by stock subscriptions before effecting organization. The plan would provide that no wheat be purchased from members when same is delivered, except upon demand, and then at export level, with handling charges deducted. That wheat be sold and delivered only into direct channels of consumption, viz, to millers, food manufacturers, feed merchants, and to exporters. Settlement with members for wheat delivered would be in the order of delivery, upon sale and delivery being made by the corporation to the trade, less whatever cash had been advanced to a member while his wheat lay in store.

The regulation of the selling price of wheat would be identical with that in any other branch of commerce of international scope. Such procedure would be analogous to the following method: From statistics available, let it be ascertained what is the exact proportion of the several outlets for wheat for the last preceding year and for the average of the last three preceding years. Approximately, and for the purpose of illustration, the relative figures of distribution are as follows: Out of every 8 bushels of wheat raised in the United States 1 bushel is retained on farms for seed, 5 bushels enter into domestic consumption, leaving a surplus of 2 bushels to be sold in foreign markets. Under our present system it is the value of the 2 bushels sold in export trade that controls and establishes the price on the 8 bushels, which, in a figurative sense, is our entire supply. But is there any reason under heaven why that principle should continue to govern our domestic prices, aside from the force of long-established custom, which originated under vastly different conditions than now confront the farming industry? To revert to the illustration: The 1 bushel seed requirement may be safely eliminated as a factor entering into the selling price of wheat. We then have to consider the proportion exported, 2 bushels, and the domestic proportion, or 5 bushels, and find the ratio there is 1 to 2½. Average production cost on farms can be determined for each season by September 1, and that cost, or base, would continue in effect for the ensuing 12 months, augmented month by month by carrying charges, commencing September 1. Then adding average freight to seaboard, elevating and cleaning charges, overhead charges, and profit to determine the seaboard base. Now, assuming our seaboard base is $2.60 per bushel and our export sales of wheat for a prescribed period of two weeks or four weeks average $2.40 per bushel at seaboard, then under our tentative formula the price of wheat to our domestic trade for a succeeding like period would have to be fixed at $2.68 per bushel at seaboard. Naturally there are other factors that affect the spread between export and domestic prices, and they would be given due value in determining prices for wheat sold to the domestic trade.

Here the question arises why should the American consumer thus pay tribute, or a tax, for the benefit of the farming industry? Is it not true that that same principle is invoked when we levy a protective tariff on our imports whereby our consumers are restrained from buying the cheaper foreign goods—except the tax thereon be paid—for the benefit of our manufacturing industries? Also, is it not a fact that labor is entrenched behind its trade-unions, with their collective bargaining, fixing their own wage scales and hours of labor per day, to which all employers, including the farmer, must submit and so pay a higher wage cost than if labor were unbound? In both cases cited our experience has proven that they are the concomitants of economic verities and are essential to the welfare of our industries and to the dignity of American labor. With equal force the same principle should be recognized and applied to the distribution of wheat—the prime food necessity of the white race—for the upbuilding of our American farm industry.

In the process of price deflation now going on in our country much superficial talk is going the rounds to the effect that manufacturers, jobbers, and retailers have taken their losses on shrunken inventories, and that therefore the farmer in this crisis should gracefully accept his loss as his quota of common fate. On the floor of the United States Senate, a Member is quoted as saying that losses of other lines of trade were equally as important as those of the farmer, and if the farmer was given a measure of relief, why not pension the unemployed. All such twaddle sounds fine and makes a hit with the unthinking; but pray when, in the past eight years, was there a year when the wheat raiser has not taken a loss from raising wheat, save and except the years 1915 and 1918, when, particularly in the latter year, wheat production reached the grand average of 15.6 bushels per acre throughout the United States, and prices of that year permitted cost and a profit to be realized on the basis of that year's yield.

The plain facts are that the farmer by practicing strictest economies in manner of living, with no indulgence in luxuries common to the middle class in other vocations, and by engaging in a multiplicity of operations all within the confines of his own domain has he succeeded at all in adding any increase to his invested capital; but not in all that period has such increase resulted from or could be attributed directly to a profit from raising wheat excepting in the two years mentioned.

Mr. GRONNA. On yesterday a representative from my State arrived in this city having credentials showing his appointment by the Legislature of North Dakota—the legislature now being in session—to present certain data with reference to the conditions in my State. I wish to say that the same conditions exist in the dry area in the State of Montana and in the western portion of the State of South Dakota. In order not to delay the Senate, I will merely state that the State administration of North Dakota has taken action and made a survey of the entire State. The commissioner of agriculture and forestry has taken up the matter with the officers of the various counties, namely, the county commissioners and the county auditors. I have a report covering the entire State showing that out of the 53 counties in my State that there are 35 counties where the farmers need aid in order to enable them to put in this year's crops. There are 53 counties in the State, and 18 counties are found not to be in need of aid. I do not say that all the farmers in the 35 counties need aid, but I have the exact number of farmers who do. There are 8,533 farmers who must have aid if they are to put in a crop this year at all, because the banks of the State are unable to give them further credit and the counties are bonded to the limit and are unable to extend any further aid.

I have here an estimate—and, of course, it is only an estimate—of the amount of money which will be required based upon this number of 8,533. I wish to say that the price for the grain seems to be a reasonable price. It is estimated that there will be required 675,000 bushels of seed wheat, at $1.65 a bushel, amounting to $1,084,075; 118,850 bushels of barley, at 60 cents a bushel, amounting to $71,310; 32,750 bushels of flax, at $2 per bushel, amounting to $65,500; 1,200 bushels of rye, at $1.30 per bushel, amounting to $1,560; and, together with other grain, the total estimate is $1,787,642.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will permit me to complete the statement, I shall then gladly yield to him.

I have made an estimate as to what other States will require. It may not be absolutely correct, but I believe the State of Montana will require at least two and a quarter million dollars, the State of North Dakota will require one and three-quarter million dollars, and the State of South Dakota will require at least one million dollars to help out in this great emergency.

Mr. President, this is no guesswork. I have letters from all the counties in the State, which, of course, I shall not take time to read, but I wish to be permitted to read just one of them. Bottineau County, which a few years ago was the banner county of the State, now needs Federal aid. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] asks me when do the farmers put in the crops? Unless this measure can be passed very soon it will be too late for those people to put in their crops, because it will take some time for the Secretary of Agriculture to make the necessary arrangements with the county authorities to distribute the funds to provide for the purchase of the seed necessary for seed grain. The letter to which I have referred is as follows:

BOTTINEAU COUNTY,
Bottineau, N. Dak., February 17, 1921.

Senator A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: On investigation our board of county commissioners find that a larger number of farmers need aid than at first supposed, 340 having asked for aid inside of one week. We estimate that the total number needing aid will be at least 600.

The situation will be desperate if we do not get Federal aid, as the banks are not in a position to loan a dollar. Aid must come from somewhere outside the State or thousands of farms in the spring-wheat belt will lay idle this season. Failure to raise a crop will send thousands of farmers out of the Northwest this coming season never to return.

On receipt of this, please wire me what the present prospect is of the bill going through that will give us aid. I ask this at the request of the chairman of our board.

Would wire you for this information, but the blizzard yesterday put the wires out of commission, and I can't get a message out for a day or so.

Hoping to hear from you favorably, I am,
Very truly,

WM. M. MARTIN,
County Auditor.

That is only a sample of the letters which I have received from the other counties of the State. Now I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the question I had in mind to ask the Senator from North Dakota was suggested by the figures which he gave out. He had stated certain estimates of the amount of wheat and flax and barley seed which would be needed. The question I intended to ask then was whether or not the estimate came from the Agricultural Department or what was the source from which the Senator gleaned the information?

Mr. GRONNA. The information comes from the agricultural department of the State of North Dakota, from our commissioner of agriculture and forestry. A representative was appointed by him, who came here yesterday morning and brought me these data. The name of this gentleman is M. O. Hall, of Mohall, N. Dak.

I have taken the matter up with the Agricultural Department, I will say to the Senator, and the Agricultural Department, of course, is favorable to it. I have the Secretary's letter, but I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate to read it now. I will only say that the Secretary states that it is for the Congress to take such action as it sees fit, but he also states that he knows an emergency exists and that something ought to be done to relieve the situation.

Mr. President, it is not a pleasant duty for a Representative from any State to acknowledge that his people are in such financial embarrassment as is here indicated; but this is the true condition, and unless aid is extended in the form of a loan, thousands of farmers will have to leave their farms.

I might add that the Government of Canada has men throughout the Northwest who are encouraging people to come to Canada, and statements have been made to them that the Government of Canada will not only furnish them seed but help them to purchase live stock. It seems to me that the Government of the United States ought to be willing to extend its credit to the extent of $5,000,000 to these poverty-stricken people.

Senators will all remember that two years ago the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] and other Senators were interested in an exactly similar question. The western portion of Kansas at that time had suffered a number of crop failures. A loan was made to those farmers; and I wish to ask the Senator from Kansas if it is not true that practically all of that loan has been paid back into the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, in reply to the question of the Senator from North Dakota, I will say that I presented the data at the last session of Congress, and my recollection is that the contributions of those who produced over 15 bushels of grain to the acre practically made up the loss of those who produced less than 5 bushels to the acre. This was true in the division in which Kansas and Oklahoma were located. I did not have the data for the other districts.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, that is as I understand it. All we ask for here is a loan of $5,000,000 to go to this vast area. In some counties the farmers have had a failure for the last five years.

Mr. President, if there is any other question that any Senator wishes to ask me, I am perfectly willing and glad to give any information that I can, as I have a great deal of data here before me and a great many letters. In order to expedite the matter, however, I shall not take any more time of the Senate this morning, but simply ask for a vote upon my motion to take up the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. TOWNSEND. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I understand that there is a contest about which measure shall be taken up first—the Agricultural appropriation bill or the railroad indemnity bill. I know that both bills are very important, and I am in favor of the Senate remaining in continuous session until both the bills shall have been passed this week.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the demand for the yeas and nays seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe that my pair, the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], is absent. Not being able to obtain a transfer, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], which I transfer to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. WATSON (after having voted in the negative). My general pair, the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], is absent, but I am informed that if present he would vote as I have voted. Therefore I will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. HENDERSON. Has the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. HENDERSON. Announcing my pair with that Senator, I transfer it to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GLASS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON (after having voted in the affirmative). I find that I have a pair for the day with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], and, as I am unable to obtain a transfer, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. KENDRICK (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. KENDRICK. I have a pair with that Senator. In his absence, I am obliged to withdraw my vote.

Mr. POMERENE. I have a general pair temporarily with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMOOT. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—35.

Ashurst	Gore	La Follette	Sheppard
Borah	Gronna	Lenroot	Simmons
Capper	Harris	McCumber	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Heflin	McKellar	Sterling

So Mr. GRONNA's motion was rejected.

PAYMENTS DUE RAILROAD COMPANIES.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the so-called partial payment bill to the railroads, being the bill (H. R. 15836) to amend the transportation act, 1920.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, in view of the action taken by the Senate, I hope I may have the unanimous consent of the Senate to pass as a separate measure the item carried in the Agricultural appropriation bill providing for a $5,000,000 appropriation. By a unanimous vote I was authorized by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to report out the bill, and also to insert the provision in the agricultural appropriation bill. I desire to be permitted to have the bill read at the desk. I do not think it will take any time at all.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I should like to have my motion put, and then, after the motion has been agreed to and while the bill is pending, I shall be willing to listen to what the Senator has to say. I have no disposition at all to delay any of the business of the Senate, and I do not propose that anything I shall do, or anything done by any other Senator, in so far as I can prevent it, shall delay matters, because I am just as much in favor of passing the Agricultural appropriation bill as is the Senator from North Dakota, and we are going to pass it. My object in moving to take up this bill was stated the other day, and stated in good faith.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that what I am asking can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Let us get the partial payment bill before the Senate. I should like to have a vote on that proposition, and then I shall be willing to yield for unanimous consent if there is no objection to the Senator's request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Michigan, of course, is the motion that is in order now.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; that is what I understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

THE PATENT OFFICE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I understand that that is a debatable question, and before the vote is taken I wish to say just a few words.

I have not been able to give to the bill that the Senator from Michigan has moved to take up the attention that I admit it deserves for the purpose of reaching a conclusion as to my own vote. I do not know now whether I shall vote for the bill or against it. I may not be able to be here when it is voted on; but I might say that for the reasons that I have stated, and that I shall give, I intend to vote against the motion, although it is perfectly apparent that it will prevail, because the Senate has just voted down a motion to take up an appropriation bill.

I have heretofore called the attention of the Senate to a conference report that is before the Senate on H. R. 11984, the bill providing for the reorganization of the Patent Office, to increase the force and the salaries of the employees of the Patent Office. The Patent Office is in a state of collapse right now. It is in a deplorable condition. The Patent Office bill has been under consideration by the Patent Committees of the House and the Senate for nearly a year. In all respects, until we reached the conference report, the action of the two committees was unanimous.

I realized a day or two after the conference report was made to the Senate that there was to be a filibuster against the conference report. It is very likely, perhaps probable, that the forces against it will defeat the conference report. It has been acted on by the House and approved by them.

I voted with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] to take up the Post Office appropriation bill. I was one of the Senators who believed from the beginning that we ought to clear the decks of the appropriation bills. The Senator from Michigan finally succeeded in getting up the Post Office appropriation bill, and it has been disposed of. I voted to-day to take up the Agricultural appropriation bill. The Senate has decided not to take it up. It has seemed to me, Mr. President, that in all fairness the Senate ought to vote on the conference report on House bill 11984, the Patent Office bill.

I do not ask, and can not be expected to ask, that the conference report be approved, but I have a right, in all fairness, it seems to me, to ask that it be voted on. I have said before, and I repeat now, I am willing, if a time can be fixed for voting on it, that those who are opposed to it may fix the time. I am willing to vote on it without any argument whatever. I am willing to do anything which will bring about a decision of the question. It means a great deal to the Patent Office. Now, it seems that the Senator from Michigan, on the question of getting appropriation bills out of the way, has changed his mind.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I am sorry the Senator was not here last Saturday evening.

Mr. NORRIS. I am sorry too. I was not able to be here.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I explained my attitude fully on that question. I have been in favor of taking up appropriation bills. I was very much opposed to the wasting of the time of the Senate for days and weeks in the consideration of a bill which I knew, and everybody knew, was vain.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator entirely.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Now, we have reached a point in the consideration of the legislative business of the Senate when the bill which I have moved to take up now must be acted upon promptly, the great majority of Senators feeling as I do about it, that it is necessary that it should be enacted now, if we are to get it on the statute books.

I have thought, too, to ask the Senate to remain in session, not only for the purpose of getting action on the conference report the Senator has in charge, but on any other measure which should be enacted, and if necessary to remain in continuous session. I am for that policy; but I have felt that this railroad bill ought to be taken up, because a large majority of the Senate are in favor of it, as was a large majority of the House, which has passed it. So I thought that if we got it before the Senate, those who felt they wanted to make long speeches upon the subject should be given an opportunity to do it, in order that we could pass it possibly by to-morrow night.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am not finding fault with anything the Senator from Michigan has said. I do not know as to the merits of that particular bill, but I know that what he said, he said in good faith, and I am not complaining about it at all. But there has always been, I think, a justifiable feeling that when a bill has progressed so far that it has reached the stage of a conference report, it ought to be passed on. In the House of Representatives the motion to take up a conference report is a privileged motion; but it is not in the Senate. When a Senator says that he wants to take a conference report up, under ordinary circumstances that is done. This particular case is rather an exception to that rule.

All Senators have a general knowledge of most of the bills, but they have not so much of a detailed knowledge of the Patent Office bill. To some extent it is technical. The Committee on Patents of the Senate were unanimous in reporting the bill to the Senate practically in the form in which it now is. Since that time one of the members of the committee, who was one of the conferees, has changed his mind, so that the conferees agreed 5 to 1 on this report. If I were not able to be here, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] would perhaps be the only Member on this side of the Chamber who could take charge of the conference report, and if he felt that he was sufficiently familiar with the details of it, I would not care if it were taken up and debated as long as anyone wanted to debate it. But I think he feels that because of the greater time I have given to it, I ought to be here, and I realize that I should be here. When it is said that it will be taken up and continued from day to day, in this particular case, as far as I am concerned, it does not mean very much, because I can not be here every day, and if I knew when the vote was coming, I would arrange, if I could, to be here to vote.

I only appeal to the Senate that between now and the 4th of March there shall be a vote on this conference report. I am willing now, and I have been all the time, to agree that the vote should be taken on the 3d day of March or any other time between this and that. I do not believe we ought to take up the railroad bill when this conference report is ready to be taken up, as it has been for some time. I realize it would be useless to take it up after this bill is laid before the Senate.

So I feel that I am justified in breaking the policy of letting appropriation bills have their way all the time, since the Senate has refused to take up an appropriation bill for the purpose of taking up a bill that is not an appropriation bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that if he will recall the conference report and strike from it the old section 9, which is in the conference report section 11, referring to the Federal Trade Commission accepting patents and virtually entering upon the patent business, I will not have an objection to the conference report. If the Senator desires now to assist the Patent Office in getting the additional force and increased salaries and all they have been asking for, as far as I am personally concerned, if he will withdraw the conference report and the conferees will disagree to section 11 of the conference report, I shall not have any objection whatever to its passing immediately.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me say a word in regard to section 9 of the bill and what in the conference report is section 11. It is a provision which when printed will not be much longer than a man's finger, and it provides that any employee of the Government having made an invention or obtained a patent can turn it over, if he desires, to the Federal Trade Commission.

The Federal Trade Commission is authorized to license corporations or individuals or partnerships to manufacture patents on the terms fixed in the license. The license fee is to be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and out of that sum so paid into the Treasury of the United States the President is authorized to give what, in his judgment, he thinks is a fair and proper compensation to the employee who made the invention.

It is not compulsory upon the part of the employee to turn it over. He can do it if he wants to, and need not do it if he does not want to. He can do what they do now, which means nothing, practically, on the part of the employees. If he desires to turn it over, the Federal Trade Commission can still refuse to accept it, if they think it would not be for the public benefit for them to do so. That, in substance, is the provision of section 11 in the conference report or section 9 in the bill.

Mr. President, in my judgment a great deal of good will come from that particular provision. Let me say, first, that a provision a little broader than I have stated it, and broader than that in the report, was passed as a separate bill in the Senate. That bill provided that any person, whether he was a Government employee or not, having such an invention, could turn it over, if he desired, and they desired to accept it. Later on, when this House bill was up for consideration in the Senate, I offered that amendment to the bill, a committee amendment. There was a unanimous report from the committee originally, when it was broader than it is now, after extensive hearings, and it was put into the bill, but narrowed down so that it applied only to employees of the Government. In that shape it went to conference. The conferees narrowed it still further, very properly, I think, by excluding from it the employees of the Patent Office. So that as it stands now it applies to employees of the Government excepting employees of the Patent Office.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. While it does not strike me just right that the Federal Trade Commission should be permitted to take over patents, I want to ask the Senator if there is any provision in the bill under which, after it has taken a patent over, it can go to developing the patent. For instance, if it is a machine, is there anything that permits them to go to manufacturing it?

Mr. NORRIS. No; there is not.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Would it not have to come to Congress for appropriations and further authority before it could go into actual manufacture of a patent?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. Mr. President, when the bill originally passed the House and came back, and that was offered as a committee amendment, that objection was made to it. The committee never had that idea. We did not believe that the language permitted it. But to show that we did not want to do anything of that kind ourselves, we struck out of the original bill the language which, it seemed to me and to other Senators, would raise the question at least whether it did give it. We struck that out, and we added an affirmative provision, which is now in the bill, which strictly provided that under no circumstances would anything herein give authority to them to manufacture a patent or go into the business in any way.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. REED. At the present moment Government employees have the same opportunity as the ordinary citizen to take out patents, have they not, outside of members of the Army and Navy?

Mr. NORRIS. Technically that is possibly true. Let me show what happens in that connection. The particular employees of whom the committee were thinking more than any others were those in the Bureau of Chemistry in the Department of Agriculture, in the Bureau of Mines, and the Bureau of Standards. Most of those men are wedded to their professions. They are scientists. In the Bureau of Chemistry, for example, an employee, we will say, discovers an improvement on existing conditions in some step in the manufacture of some article—fertilizer, for instance. Standing alone, it would not be a practical proposition, but must be used in connection with other things that are now used by those who manufacture fertilizer. These men do not care for the money, for, if they did, they would all resign from the Government service and all get increased compensation for their services in other fields. They are interested in having their improvements put into actual practice, and sometimes it comes about in that way.

But what happens? If they throw one of these open to the public, as they usually do, it may on the face of it be a laboratory proposition which will work out in the laboratory to perfection, but it is often found when they come to carry on the laboratory test in the commercial world and manufacture the product in commercial quantities that it does not work. It requires a great deal of experimentation and involves a great deal of expense. If it is open to the public, and some individual or corporation in the business expends the money, perhaps several hundred thousand dollars, in experimentation and in constructing the necessary machinery, and so forth, to manufacture it, and it works, it is open to their competitors to get the same advantage of it without expending any money. The result is that as a practical proposition a patent or an invention of that kind is not developed at all. Unless they will have some protection, a concern will not expend the money that is necessary to develop it.

If this particular proposition were a law, and the Federal Trade Commission were given the authority that is herein provided, they would protect the country and the people in it by proper license that would give to the person or the corporation that did develop it a monopoly, the same as a patent does, or a monopoly at least to the extent provided for in the license.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator yield again?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I think that in asking the question a moment ago whether all employees of the Government except those in the Army and Navy could take out patents, I should have said all except the employees of the Patent Office.

I do not wish to prolong the debate, because there are bills here that ought to receive attention, but if the Senator will permit me just a moment I desire to say that every argument he has made with reference to the employees of the Government not being able to protect their patents or to have their patents tested out applies to every inventor in the country. He has exactly the same difficulty. He has the opportunity to take out a patent and the employees of the Government have the same opportunity. If the outsider, the ordinary citizen, takes out a patent which is a mere improvement, adopting the illustration of the Senator, then he has the same difficulty in having that improvement tested exactly as he would have, no greater and no less, if he happened to be an agent of the Government.

I wish to say this and then I shall not further interrupt the Senator. The bill will not go through at this session with section 11 in it if I can prevent it. I will not by my vote, so far as it counts, confer on the Federal Trade Commission any such authority as is here proposed. I will not, so far as my vote goes, confer this authority on the President. I am utterly dissatisfied, not to say disgusted, with the process of legislation which we adopted, perhaps not without reason, during the war, of Congress shifting all its burdens over on the President and saying that the President can do this or that or the other thing. If we propose to turn over to the President of the United States the details of looking after patents, it will not be very long until he will be required to examine nursing bottles and things of that kind. It is not his business and ought not to be imposed upon him.

I wish to see the Patent Office bill pass in so far as it permits payment of proper compensation to the men in the Patent Office, for I understand the pay there is very inadequate, at least as to certain of the experts whose services we need to retain; but I am not, so far as I am concerned, going to pay the price of putting the patent business into the hands of the Federal Trade Commission or into the hands of the President, and I am not, so far as I am concerned, going to adopt the principle of licensing by the Federal Government in this country, special licenses to special people, by a board as incompetent to pass upon patents as I am to pass upon music, and I could not to save my life whistle Yankee Doodle so that anyone could recognize it. The Federal Trade Commission has been a failure in everything it has undertaken except the mere collection of statistics, and we have to check those up.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator makes one objection to the particular provision with which I agree. He does not want to confer upon the employee of the Government a privilege that he does not confer upon the ordinary citizen. As I introduced the bill originally, and as it originally passed the Senate, it was not limited to employees of the Government but applied to everybody. If I had my way, it would be that way still, although if Senators would take the time to look it up they would find that 90 per cent of the business with which this would have to do would apply to employees of the Government, and particularly those three branches I have mentioned. If they do not want to do it, they are not compelled by the bill to do it. It is done with the idea of putting into practical use thousands of inventions and patents that go into pigeonholes of corporations and individuals that already have a monopoly of their particular line, or nearly so. That is the object of it.

Now, the Federal Trade Commission, a year or perhaps longer ago, when the first joint hearings were held by the two committees, was considered in this connection. We realized that there was a prejudice in the Senate on behalf of some Senators against the Federal Trade Commission. I do not share that prejudice. I think it is one of the best commissions and has done some of the best work of any of our bureaus, commissions, or departments of the Government. I do not share in that feeling of prejudice.

We said all the way through, "Who will take it? Where shall this power be lodged?" It was suggested originally, when the bill was first up for discussion, I think by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], that it ought to be given to the Secretary of the Interior. I would rather have it there than not have it at all; but everybody knows that in the various departments of the Government where these scientific bureaus exist there is a prejudice against other departments of the Government. If we put it in the control of the Secretary of the Interior there would be a certain prejudice existing in the Department of Agriculture from the Bureau of Chemistry, so it would not do to put it in either place. I have asked in the hearings where it could best be placed, and suggested that it go to various other places, and other members of the committee have done the same thing.

We did not care to place it in the Federal Trade Commission because of a desire to confer on the Federal Trade Commission more jurisdiction, but when we came to narrow it down it was found that there is no other place to put it unless we provided for a new and independent commission, which we did not think Congress wanted to do and which we did not want to do. The Federal Trade Commission is not under the jurisdiction of any department. It is under the jurisdiction of Congress. It is similar to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and everybody would concede that it ought not to go there.

Another thing. During the war, when we took over the German patents, this authority was by the trading with the enemy act lodged in the Federal Trade Commission, and they have had charge of that work from the time the act was passed until the work was completed, and have been successful in it. Those who have received licenses from them have, as far as I know, without any exception, testified to the efficiency that was manifested. It resulted in turning over to the Treasury in that short time fees of more than a million dollars.

Mr. REED. Were they not on foreign patents?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; confined mostly to German dyestuffs.

Mr. REED. Approved foreign patents which our people had to use, and all they had to do was to select the one they wanted to use?

Mr. NORRIS. They had to do a little more.

The person to whom a license was issued had to do the experimenting that I have mentioned. Although they had before them the patent itself and everything pertaining to it, they often found it would not work when they endeavored to carry it out. The difference between success and failure might be in the mixing proposition, the difference between mixing at 200 revolutions a minute and 1,000 revolutions a minute. So there were a lot of experiments that had to be carried on. The licensees had to expend their money to do that, and I do not know that they succeeded even then in all cases. I am rather inclined to think that they did not. But there never was, so far as I have been able to discover, a single complaint made in the administration of that part of the trading with the enemy act by the Federal Trade Commission.

All that the Senator from Missouri has said or that anyone else can say does not do away with the proposition that the Senate ought to be permitted to vote on the proposition. If Senators think the conference report ought not to be agreed to, let it be voted down. If we had had a vote long ago when I had the matter up, there would have been plenty of opportunity for the conferees to get together and reach some agreement, but I have been blocked every place and every time I have tried to bring it up, not so much as to its consideration as to prevent a vote at all. In common justice that ought to take place, no matter what Senators may think in regard to the merits of the measure.

Mr. President, it is not my purpose further to defend the Federal Trade Commission. If there were any other body in whom the power could be reposed where the objection would not apply, I should be glad to have that body selected. Let me call the attention of Senators now to the objection which was made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and compare the objections made at the time we passed the bill with their present position. At the time we passed the bill with this amendment in it the objection made by the Senator from Utah and a few other Senators was practically confined to the increase of salaries and the increase of employees. Now, the same Senators say, "We have not any objection to that feature of the bill," although the provisions of the conference report in that respect are the same as those of the bill when it was originally reported to the Senate. It is now discovered, however, that, after all, the objection is to section 9 as the bill was originally framed, or to section 11 as it is now. At least that is an inconsistent attitude for Senators to assume.

The facts are, Mr. President, that when we had the hearings it was there disclosed, without any question, that the man who now makes an invention or an improvement in connection with some particular article that is being manufactured can be absolutely robbed of it under existing law unless he has sufficient money to back him up in making two trips to the Supreme Court of the United States. Those who are opposed to this legislation, including some patent attorneys representing great corporations which are opposed to it, admit that. If I make or some other person makes an invention as to the legality of which, let us assume, for the sake of argument, there is no question, and some very wealthy individual, partnership, or corporation infringes it with impunity, what is the remedy?

In the first place, the inventor would begin by an injunction restraining them. He would start in the district court of the United States; he would, we will say, win the case there. It would then be taken to the court of appeals. He would win it again, and the case would go to the Supreme Court of the United States. Admit that he wins his case there, then what? The next action is one of damages for the infringement. So he commences a new action in the district court of the United States. A commissioner is appointed to take testimony, and he follows him, perhaps, all over the United States. When he gets through there, the case is again taken to the court of appeals. After he wins it there it again goes to the Supreme Court of the United States.

One of the greatest patent attorneys of the United States in making an argument on the bill was asked the question, "What will a man who is not wealthy do with a valuable patent which is infringed with impunity by somebody who is wealthy?" He said—and they all agreed to that—there was only one thing for the inventor to do, and that was to sell his patent for whatever he could get, because otherwise he would be worn out in the courts, even though it were conceded that his patent was valid. While the hearing was going on a representative of the Bell Telephone Co. who was present immediately rose at that point and said: "I wish to give the assurance that anybody who makes an invention pertaining to the telephone may sell it to the Bell Telephone Co." In that case, however, the Bell Telephone Co. fixes the price; it is absolutely supreme. If it buys an invention and finds that it is more profitable to suppress it than it would be to use it, that company having, to a great extent, a monopoly of the telephone business, would suppress it. Therefore, the inventor will be compelled to accept whatever the telephone company will pay to acquire an invention and suppress it in order to prevent competition in their line; in other words, the very theory on which a patent is granted in this country is subverted to a purpose entirely contrary to that intended. The Government gives a monopoly to a man who makes an invention on the theory that it will be used by the people; but if some one who is already in the business can make more money by suppressing it than by utilizing it—and that is very often the case; there are thousands of patents which are now suppressed and have been suppressed for years—it is not used, and the very monopoly that the people give for their own benefit is used to their own detriment and expense.

This proposed legislation will not completely remedy the present situation, but it will do so to a great extent; it is one step in that direction.

I wish to say again that if the proposed legislation is passed as it now stands, increasing the salaries of those employed in the Patent Office, it will not cost the taxpayers of the United States a cent. The measure provides for an increase of fees that will more than cover the additional expense.

Of course, I can not find fault with Senators who are opposed to the legislation; that is their privilege and right; but I do again say, Mr. President, that the Senate ought to be allowed to vote on the proposition. It looks as though, in view of the fact that we were nearing the end of the session and there are a number of appropriation bills as yet not passed which ought to receive at least the fair consideration to which they are entitled at the hands of the Senate, that unless some agreement can be reached by which a vote may be had on the conference report, it will be defeated merely for the reason that we are not able to get a vote upon it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if what the Senator from Nebraska has just said is correct, namely, that patents are issued and then bought up and suppressed by interested parties, this bill will not remedy that difficulty. If the Senator's position is right in regard to the matter I have just mentioned, then this bill ought to provide that all patents applied for shall take the same course as the patents which may be applied for by a few Government employees. There is no argument the Senator has made in favor of taking over the patents of Government employees that does not apply to every patent application filed in the United States Patent Office. It is an attempt to take a class of people already in the employ of the Government and put them under a particular governmental protection, and to do that when, as a principle of equity, their inventions, made through their contact with the Government business for which the Government pays them, ought of right to belong to the Government. If an employee of the Bureau of Standards investigating a problem which the United States employed him to investigate discovers some improvement through the use of the very instruments and chemicals and materials of the Government, it is a question in my mind whether, under the law, that discovery does not belong to the Government. I would be perfectly willing to permit such a man to take out a patent, because it would stimulate him to exertion, but when he takes out his patent he ought to stand on the same footing as other men. If I draw a Government salary and John Smith is working in a garret, I ought not to take any advantage over John Smith because I already have the advantage of a Government place.

The talk about these men being too sensitive to apply for a patent or to sell it, is all right coming from the Senator from Nebraska, for whom I have the most profound respect; he is a man of such keen sensibilities and of such idealism that a consideration of that kind might interfere with him if he were working for the Government; but I think he stands in a class entirely by himself; I do not think there is another man of just that kind in the world. I should like to be introduced to the man who comes down to Washington and gets a Government job because it is the best job he can find—and that is the reason he comes here—and who then is suddenly lifted above the sordid sphere of earthly action so far that he would not take a patent on something he had invented and sell it to the highest bidder for cash in hand. I should like to be introduced to the gentleman; I should like to examine him and find out how far his wings have grown and how soon he will be ready to take his flight into the higher heavens. There is not anything in it.

If there is anything to this bill, it is the camel's nose under the tent; it is the proposition of initiating a system of governmental licenses which is being clamored for so much just now. There are men who would have every great business licensed, and that, of course, means in itself the control of all small business; but in a little while they will find the small business licensed, and in a little while this Government, founded upon the principle of individual liberty, will be a Government more thoroughly controlling the action of the individual than any tyranny that has ever disgraced the scroll of history.

There can be a tyranny under a republic in name just as well as under an autocrat. Tyranny consists in the Government depriving the individual of his natural rights. It does not make any difference whether that government is called a republic or a democracy or a monarchy or an empire. All such bills come forward as beneficences; they are supposed to be for the sake of some reform, some benefit; but when analyzed it comes down to this, that almost every time we pass a law we are taking over more power to the Government.

Now, let us see. The patent laws have been on our statute books since the very dawn of our national existence. Under them hundreds of thousands and millions of patents have been applied for. They are open to all the citizens of the United States alike, to the Government employee and to the man who has to make his own living by his own exertions. Why should the Government employee be singled out for special protection and benefit? Above all, why should we vest in the Federal Trade Commission the authority that is placed in it by section 9 of this bill?

The Federal Trade Commission is to take over these patents. The Federal Trade Commission is to license and collect the fees and royalties. The President is to fix the amounts, and of the total amount of such fees and royalties so deposited a certain per cent, to be determined by the President, is to be reserved and set aside and appropriated as a special fund to be disbursed as directed by the President to remunerate the inventors.

Mr. President, if the Senator from Nebraska wants this bill passed in order to protect the Patent Office, to keep the experts who are there, I want to aid him in that; but this section has no business here. If this scheme is to be entered upon, let it be brought forward as a separate bill, and let the Congress have an opportunity to consider it upon its merits.

PURCHASE OF SEED GRAIN.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I wish to say another word with reference to the vote just taken. I assume that it was not a vote against the Agricultural appropriation bill, nor against any particular item in that bill, but that it was thought best to consider the railroad bill before the Agricultural appropriation bill is taken up.

Of course, I gracefully submit to the majority of one; but before the vote is taken upon the motion to take up this bill I want to say to the Senate that a serious emergency exists, and if the bill which I shall ask permission to report can be disposed of to-day and sent over to the other House we can be assured of its passage during this session of Congress. The Agricultural appropriation bill may or may not be passed. It may fail; but I hope there will be no objection to the report which I shall present, either now or after the bill has been laid before the Senate, because I know of no reason why there should be opposition to it.

There can not possibly be any good reason for opposition to an emergency bill such as this, where 8,533 farmers in one State alone are without seed grain. In the State west of us, the State of Montana, a more serious condition exists. In the State south of us a serious condition exists in the western portion of the State. All that we are asking is for the Government to loan its credit or its money for one year to supply these unfortunate people with seed grain.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what the States themselves have done, or are attempting to do, in supplying their citizens with seed grain?

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that in certain counties in my State we have had a crop failure for five years. In the State of Montana I believe they have had a failure for some three years on account of drought. The counties, as I understand, during some of these years have furnished the settlers and the farmers with seed grain. The banks in many instances have furnished credit, not only for seed grain, but credit for other purposes; but the situation is such that the banks are absolutely unable to extend any further aid, and so are the counties, because they are bonded to the limit. It is proposed in this bill to take a seed lien, which in all these States becomes a prior lien.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I have read the bill.

Mr. GRONNA. And I do not believe that the Government will sustain any great loss.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no doubt that next year or the year after Congress will be besieged to release these liens. That is generally the next step in a matter of this sort. We had occasion in our State once before to meet this situation, and our people then themselves furnished the farmers with seed grain. It seems to me to be a purely local matter. While the need may be very great, and doubtless is, it is the establishment of another precedent here that will lead to the continued expansion of Government aid for all the misfortunes of mankind.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I wish to assure him that the vote against taking up the Agricultural appropriation bill was not, on the part of a number of Senators who voted against it, in any spirit of hostility. I among others had promised to vote to take up the railroad bill next, not knowing that the Agricultural bill was coming up; and really I believed it was desirable to take up the railroad bill and get it out of the way, feeling absolutely sure that the Agricultural bill would come up promptly and be disposed of.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Absolutely.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I hope we will stay here with the railroad bill until we pass it if we have to sit all night, and if there is any effort on the part of Senators to check it by unnecessary talk, I hope we will sit and listen until they get tired. I want to say further that I shall vote next to take up the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. GRONNA. I thank the Senator. I have just stated that I do not believe the vote recently taken was based upon any hostility to the Agricultural bill. It was simply because a majority of the Senate wanted to take up the railroad bill at this particular time.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. KNOX. I want to say to my friend from North Dakota that in voting not to take up the Agricultural bill at this time I was inspired by no antagonism to that bill. The Senator, of course, does not pretend that he alone is sympathetic with the needs of the agricultural classes.

Mr. GRONNA. I have never made that statement.

Mr. KNOX. No; I am sure the Senator did not, and I do not think he assumes anything of the kind.

Mr. GRONNA. If I did, the farmer would be worse off than he is now.

Mr. KNOX. I think not; but that is all right. I want to say, however, that in my own State we have 202,000 farms, which I suppose is four or five times as many farms as there are in the State of North Dakota, and the value of the agricultural products of Pennsylvania is between four and five hundred million dollars.

There seems to be a rather superficial impression in some quarters about my great State. People imagine that it is practically a State of urban population. It is one of the greatest agricultural States of the Union. I think we raised, according to the last census, some 30,000,000 bushels of wheat. Of course, that is nothing like the fertile plains of North Dakota produce, but I presume North Dakota concentrates principally on the raising of wheat, whereas our agricultural products are varied.

I am going to support the Agricultural bill in practically every detail, and I want the Senator to understand it.

Mr. GRONNA. I thank the Senator. I am sure he will do so. I want to say to him, though, that the condition is somewhat different in my State. We raise grain and cattle exclusively. We have no manufacturing. We have very little mining. We shall in the future have mining, but we have not mining at this particular time; and for that reason this is a matter that affects every farmer and business in the State, because they all raise grain. In the State which the Senator so ably represents they have more diversified farming.

Mr. KNOX. I appreciate those difierences, and for that reason I am disposed to the utmost liberality in dealing with States so situated.

Mr. GRONNA. Then, if it is in order, I will ask unanimous consent——

The VICE PRESIDENT. We must put the motion first.

Mr. GRONNA. Very well.

PAYMENTS DUE RAILROAD COMPANIES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan to proceed to the consideration of House bill 15836.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15836) to amend the transportation act, 1920.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Now, if the Senator wants to ask unanimous consent, I yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask unanimous consent to make a report of the bill which I have sent to the Secretary's desk, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have stated to the Senator from North Dakota that if it is true that there is to be no debate upon that bill, and the whole Senate is in favor of passing it, as I am willing to vote to pass it myself, I shall not object; but I can not consent to taking up any matter which will delay the consideration of the bill now before the Senate. I have discovered that the only way to legislate here is to legislate, and to proceed with the consideration of the matter before the Senate. I propose to ask, as early as possible, unanimous consent to fix a date, not later than some time to-morrow afternoon, when we can vote on the railroad bill. If that consent is granted, then Senators can proceed, when no one wants the floor on this measure, to discuss or dispose of any bill which they see fit; but until that is granted I can not consent to lay it aside for the consideration of any measure that is going to lead to any debate.

Mr. GRONNA. If I may be permitted to say so to the Senator, I do not believe it will lead to any extended debate. I realize that it is subject to a point of order, and that if one objection is made it will have to go over. I should like to have the bill read, so that Senators may know what it is, and then if anyone wishes to object, of course he has that right under the rule.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I want to say one thing further in reference to the Agricultural appropriation bill. If that bill fails of passage at this session of the Congress, it will be because of the friends of the bill, those who advocate it. The Senate is not opposed to the Agricultural bill. The Senate wants to consider it, and will consider it if the Senate is willing to stay here and consider the business of the Senate.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Michigan that he prefer now his request to fix a time certain on the railroad bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I should be very glad to do that, but the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] told me that he does not want to have me to prefer that request at the very beginning, as he thought that after we had run along a little while we could agree to it. I should be glad and had intended to prefer the request now, but I have stated why I can not do so.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I want to suggest that perhaps it would be agreeable to the Senator from Michigan to have a unanimous-consent agreement carrying a stipulation to the effect that if the bill should lead to debate, the bill would be laid aside on his suggestion.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have just been in communication with the Secretary of Agriculture, and he advises me that there have been advanced for the purchase of seed wheat authorized three years ago $4,199,632.70. That is the amount advanced by the Government of the United States, to be paid back in one year. The United States has collected of that amount, to date, $1,436,450.51.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. The provisions of the bill which passed Congress three years ago were much broader than this. This provides only for the purchase of seed grain.

Mr. SMOOT. That will not make any difference in the payment back to the Government.

Mr. GRONNA. It will make a great deal of difference, because you can always get the best security. The seed lien is the best security you can get. It makes a great difference.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just one-third of the amount has been paid back in three years. The legislatures of nearly all the States are in session, and it seems to me the legislatures of the States ought to make appropriations for this purpose. My own State has done so in the past, and I can not see why they should not do it again, if there is a condition existing such as did exist about five or six years ago. Is it not proper and is it not right to have the States make the appropriations for this purpose, and not the Government of the United States?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. When the earthquake came to San Francisco the Federal Government went to the aid of the people there. When fire swept Salem, Mass., the Government appropriated money for the relief of the people there. Why should not the Federal Government go to the aid of people who have been afflicted by drought, and their property destroyed?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I shall not take the time of the Senate to discuss that question. There is quite a difference.

I might say, though, that one of the officials of the department told me that whatever money is advanced now for this purpose will go to the banks of the States in which the money is to be advanced to release the wheat they are holding now as security. I do not know whether that is true or not. I can not say whether it is.

Mr. GRONNA. I can not let that statement go unchallenged.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not made it as a positive statement, I will say to the Senator. I am simply saying that my informant was an official of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. GRONNA. Whoever made that statement is absolutely mistaken. It is intended that the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe such rules as he may see fit, and that it will all be done through the officers of the counties, the board of county commissioners, and I can not conceive any better agency than that particular agency. I can say that the official who reported to the Senator that it would release any wheat is absolutely mistaken. There is no such thing to be undertaken as that.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator was just as positive that the money had been paid back, when I called his attention to it, as he is in this matter. I get it from one of the head officials of the Agricultural Department; but, as I say, I do not know whether it is so. But I do know the amount paid back, because I got it not only from the Agricultural Department but I asked the Treasury Department to let me know the exact amount, and these are the exact figures reported.

There is no use in objecting; it will pass, anyhow, so I shall not object to it. I simply want to record my position on such a matter as this, that I think the States ought to take care of questions of this character. I know that legislatures of most of the States are in session now, and I think it would be very much better for the people of the States to do it than to have it come out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. REED. I would like to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question, with the permission of the Senator from Utah. I am very kindly disposed toward this bill; I understand the awful condition which exists in North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. North Dakota, Montana, South Dakota, and possibly one or two other States; but it is most disastrous in the three States I have named.

Mr. REED. I would like to inquire whether the Nonpartisan League has not been in control in the State of North Dakota, and if that is not the organization which told the farmers that it would relieve them of all possible adversities for the future?

Mr. GRONNA. I will admit, Mr. President, that there is a troublesome condition; but I will also say for the State administration that they have taken a great deal of time and expended money to get the data.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair ventures to suggest that the bill be read, and if there is to be discussion, the Senator from Michigan can object, and if not, the bill can be passed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I just wanted to ask a question of the Chair, suggested by the Senator from Montana. If unanimous consent is given to take this bill up, would it be in order and effective for the Senator from Michigan to object to further consideration and ask that the regular order be laid before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that unanimous consent can be given to temporarily lay aside House bill 15836, with the understanding that the Senator from Michigan can call it up at any time he pleases.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then the bill may be read, as far as I am concerned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

PURCHASE OF SEED GRAIN.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] reports from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry favorably, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, the bill (S. 2508) to appropriate $5,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain and feed for live stock, to be supplied to farmers and stockmen in the drought-stricken areas of the United States, said amount to be expended under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask unanimous consent that the regular order may be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of considering the bill just reported, under the condition as stated by the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2508) to appropriate $5,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain and feed for live stock, to be supplied to farmers and stockmen in the drought-stricken areas of the United States, said amount to be expended under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment.

The amendment was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, for the crop of 1921, to make advances or loans to farmers in the drought-stricken areas of the United States, where he shall find that special need for such assistance exists, for the purchase of wheat, oats, barley, and flaxseed for seed purposes when necessary, to procure such seed and sell same to such farmers. Such advances, loans, or sales shall be made upon such terms and conditions and subject to such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe, including an agreement by each farmer to use the seed thus obtained by him for the production of grain. A first lien on the crop to be produced from seed obtained through a loan, advance, or sale made under this section shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be deemed sufficient security therefor. The total amount of such advances, loans, or sales to any one farmer shall not exceed the sum of $300. All such advances or loans shall be made through such agencies as the Secretary of Agriculture shall designate. For carrying out the purposes of this section there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000,000, to be immediately available.

SEC. 2. That any person who shall knowingly make any false representation for the purpose of obtaining an advance, loan, or sale under this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to appropriate $5,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain to be supplied to farmers in the drought-stricken areas of the United States; said amount to be expended under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture."

PAYMENTS DUE RAILROAD COMPANIES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15836) to amend the transportation act, 1920.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Amend, by adding a new subdivision, after line 21, on page 2, as follows:

(c) Section 422, section 15a, of said transportation act approved February 28, 1920, is hereby repealed.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I opposed the passage of the transportation act throughout. I recognized that the condition was bad at the time, but knew the law would operate injuriously to the public. When the transportation act, turning the railroads back to their owners, was passed, States were thereby deprived of their regulatory powers, and the people were, in effect, deprived of their reciprocal and correlative rights under the law to reasonable and just rates of transportation.

Under the transportation act, as I understand it, the correlative and reciprocal rights of the public to reasonable and just rates for the transportation of freight and passengers has been absolutely and effectually destroyed. I do not believe that the transportation act has operated beneficially. That it has resulted injuriously and disastrously to the people of this country there is no question, and that it has resulted disastrously to the railroads themselves is conclusively shown by their appearance here to-day asking further favors of the Government.

We took the railroads over in the first instance, during the war, because the public necessity required it. The law guaranteed as an income to the railroads the average of three years' earnings before they were taken over, a period when the earnings of the railroads were higher than they ever were before in the United States. This income guaranty amounted to 10, 20, 30, 40, and I understand in one instance 65 per cent upon the capital invested in the railroad.

During the whole war that income was paid to the railroads. When it came time to release them to their owners the transportation act was proposed, and by that act Congress said to the railroad owners: "We will give you as a gratuity another six months' guaranty of this high rate of income after the roads have been turned over to you. In addition to that, we will give you 10 years in which to pay back the $900,000,000 the Government has expended in the betterment of your roads during Federal control. In addition to that, we will put in the Public Treasury, of the people's tax money, a revolving fund of $300,000,000, which you may come and borrow and use at your convenience."

In addition to that, the law provided that these railroads should be divided into certain groups throughout this country, that they should be valued in such groups, and then have the right to come to the Interstate Commerce Commission and demand under the law that freight and passenger rates be increased to such an extent that they should receive a guaranteed income of 6 per cent upon all the property invested in the particular business.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. KIRBY. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly the Senator does not wish to misrepresent the facts in that behalf?

Mr. KIRBY. Certainly not.

Mr. POMERENE. There is no guaranty of any return under the railroad act. The only thing in it in that behalf is this: There is a rule laid down to guide the Interstate Commerce Commission in fixing the rates. It was provided in substance that in fixing reasonable rates they should be made so as to earn a fair return on the aggregate value of the railway property and named 5½ per cent as such fair return on the railroad property in the country as a whole or in sections. They can in their discretion arrange the rates so as to earn an income of 6 per cent, but if the returns should fall to 2 per cent or nothing, there is no liability on the part of the Government. In other words, there is no guaranty, and I think we ought to understand that as the debate proceeds.

Mr. KIRBY. I think my statement is accurate. I do not dispute the statement made by the Senator. The Interstate Commerce Commission under the law is required on the valuations made to allow them to levy such rates of transportation as will produce 5½ to 6 per cent net income. I believe the Senator will not dispute that. If that income is not produced, of course the Government does not have to pay it. I do not contend that it does, but under the law all the people of the United States are required to pay transportation charges that will produce 5½ to 6 per cent income upon the valuation of the roads in the separate sections or groups or upon the whole mileage. No one disputes that proposition.

When the bill was passed I said that if the legislation should be enacted the people of the United States under its operation would be charged $1,250,000,000 more for transportation than they were paying before. I objected to it then. Voted against its passage. What has been the effect of it? After the bill became the law the railroad executives went to the Interstate Commerce Commission and said, "Under the law we are entitled to a good increase in freight rates," and demanded and were given authority to put them into effect. The Director General of the Railroad Administration of the United States while the railroads were under Federal control testified and stated officially that if the 25 per cent increase in rates inaugurated and instituted during the period of Federal control had been instituted at the beginning of such control, there would have been no deficit from the Government operation of the railroads, and consequently no liability for a deficit upon the part of the Government. Those increased rates obtained when we turned the railroads back to their owners.

What has been the result? Notwithstanding the law provided for the revolving fund, that the railroads might be loaned tax money from the Treasury, notwithstanding it made provision for this particular method of 6 per cent guaranteed compensation to them, and notwithstanding the Interstate Commerce Commission under said provision taxed all the people of the United States, or rather allowed the railroads to do so, as was done by increased transportation rates levied to produce said income, now the railroads come to the United States Government and say, "We are broke. The plan has operated injuriously. We must have this money that you provided should be paid to us as a gratuity before it becomes due under the law giving it to us." Under the law we agreed to pay them the money only after it was finally determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission how much the Government ought to pay, how much it owed under the law providing six months' guaranty of income under private control, and until that has been determined the railroads can not be paid the gratuity. The law is clear. The law granted the railroads all these rights and privileges, made all these provisions that were expected to furnish adequate relief for them, and now they ask for this payment out of time.

I say here and now that I am not going to oppose the passage of this bill. I voted against the transportation bill because I thought it was unfair, unjust, iniquitous, and because the guaranties were all to the railroads and none to provide the people with reasonable and just rates of transportation nor protect them in the enjoyment thereof. I said it would operate injuriously to the people. What has been the effect of it? It has increased the rates to such an extent that the people are required to pay $1,250,000,000 more of revenue to the railroads. What net revenue has been produced? Has the Government or the people benefited at all? Let us see. I will read one section of the transportation act. There is a provision in the act requiring that the roads shall be grouped and that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall allow to be levied rates sufficiently high to produce 5½ to 6 per cent dividends upon the valuation of the roads grouped in a particular district. That was provided; yes; but it is true the law did not guarantee the Government would pay the roads the 5½ or 6 per cent income, but only that the Interstate Commerce Commission would permit them to charge such rates as were expected to produce that amount. We all knew that under this system of rates the great roads are carrying three-quarters of the traffic over their lines at such exorbitant rates as are manifestly unreasonable, unfair, and flagrantly unjust to the public; that the whole system of rates is so unreasonable and unjust as to be well-nigh prohibitive—more than the traffic will bear—and has brought ruin to the farmer and producer as well as to the carriers themselves.

There was a provision incorporated requiring the big lines to pay a certain amount of their income over the 6 per cent fixed by the law as reasonable into a trust fund to be loaned back to the railroads or to be distributed by the Government in accordance with the provisions of the act.

Let me read the section of the act. All recognized that it would be unfair to the public to allow the big lines to charge a system of rates that would produce a fixed net income of 6 per cent on all the valuation of all the roads in any particular group. Let us read this provision—subdivision 5, section 15a of the railroad transportation act, page 36:

(5) Inasmuch as it is impossible (without regulation and control in the interest of the commerce of the United States considered as a whole) to establish uniform rates upon competitive traffic which will adequately sustain all the carriers which are engaged in such traffic and which are indispensable to the communities to which they render the service of transportation, without enabling some of such carriers to receive a net railway operating income substantially and unreasonably in excess of a fair return upon the value of their railway property held for and used in the service of transportation, it is hereby declared that any carrier which receives such an income so in excess of a fair return shall hold such part of the excess, as hereinafter prescribed, as trustee for and shall pay it to the United States.

It was recognized by all in the consideration of the legislation that that would be manifestly unfair to the people for whose convenience the railroads are supposed to exist. What has been the result? Under the exorbitant rates that were conceded by all would produce more revenue than any large railroad was entitled to have, many of the big railroads having been guaranteed and paid during Federal control 10, 20, 30, 40, 45, and in one case as much, I think, as 65 per cent upon their invested capital, notwithstanding the rates were increased 25 per cent under Government administration, notwithstanding this further increase in rates under this transportation act of over 25 and 30 per cent, have we heard where even one big railroad in the whole United States of America has allowed one single cent to go into this trust fund? Is there one road that has done it? If there is, let some Senator rise in his place who knows about it and say which road it is. The law recognized under the rates allowed on the fixed percentage increase basis that there would of necessity be a surplus to be paid into said trust fund. It has been put into operation, but I challenge any Senator to rise in the Senate and name one single railroad that has laid aside one single dollar to go into that trust fund.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. KIRBY. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator state what railroads have earned a surplus since the law has gone into effect?

Mr. KIRBY. I do not know what roads have, but I am telling what was said or provided or what would be the effect of the operation of the law and that no railroad had paid anything into said trust fund.

Mr. POMERENE. While the Senator is speaking of the increase in freight rates—and that is admitted—has he taken into account the increase in expenditures because of advance in material and advance in wages? I think when the Senator takes into consideration the other side of the ledger account he will find the situation somewhat different.

Mr. KIRBY. I do not say all those things should not be considered, but they do not have to be considered in connection with the proposition I am arguing here. That is the condition that we foresaw along that line. We recognized in passing the law that all of the great railroads would transport three-quarters of the traffic over their lines at greatly enhanced rates over what would be a fair and reasonable and just charge to the public, and not a single one has yet, as I understand, reported where it has laid aside one single penny for this trust fund. If one railroad has done so and any Senator knows it, I say let him rise in his place and name which one it is.

Mr. POMERENE. I am trying to trace it. I am interested in getting the facts. If the Senator can trace this for me and give me the names of roads that have earned a surplus, I would be most happy to know whether they have complied with the provisions of the law. If they have not, I am as much interested in having them comply as the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. KIRBY. I have never been in the confidence of the railroads nor their operating boards. I do not know what their books will show, but I do understand that they have not paid anything into this trust fund, as I have stated. No Senator knows where one has done it. When the law providing this gratuity was passed—and I am not talking against paying it, but about another proposition—to guarantee the railroads for six months under private control the same rate of income paid them under Government operation there was only one railroad company in the United States that said, "No; the Government has done enough to us. Give back our railroad under the rates that are already established, and we will carry the public and its freight and risk making a proper compensation." That was the "Cotton Belt." The St. Louis-Southwestern Railway, that runs down through my country, accepted no Government guaranty, and it is not here to-day demanding any further gratuities or favors from the Government. If the Cotton Belt Railroad running through Arkansas and Missouri could do that—and it has done it—then why have not these great railroads that are carrying three times as much commerce as that road, at the 30 per cent increase in rates, been able to put something into this Government trust fund? There is something wrong somewhere.

I say that by the passage of the bill, section 15a of which I am asking to have repealed now, we absolutely destroyed the reciprocal rights of the public to have fair and just and reasonable rates of transportation established. There is no question that under the law the railroads are allowed to charge such rates as will yield a reasonable and just return upon the money invested in the transportation agencies; but there is an equal and correlative and reciprocal right upon the part of the public to have provided just and fair and reasonable rates of freight and transportation. Under the bill that right has been absolutely destroyed. It is said that we have only provided under the law that the railroads shall be divided into districts or groups and valued in that way, and that on the value of the property in the various districts the Interstate Commerce Commission shall allow them to levy such rates of freight as will produce 5½ to 6 per cent income, and when it exceeds that they will pay the overplus back into the trust fund of the Government.

Yes; and there we have provided by an unbending rule of law what is a reasonable rate of income for the railroad companies, and we have absolutely destroyed the possibility of the people having any consideration of the establishment of reasonable and just rates of transportation, unless and until the railroads first get their income as fixed by the law. Is there anyone here who will deny that? We have taken the power and discretion away from the Interstate Commerce Commission to treat the public fairly under the law, as it always has been administered before this section was enacted.

In addition to that the law destroys absolutely and effectively the power and the right to regulate rates by the States. That is done by this law, which I think is unconstitutional in that regard, but unless and until it is declared unconstitutional said rate-making agencies are absolutely destroyed. There is no hope of relief to the people from that source. There is no hope of relief to the people from the Interstate Commerce Commission. Why? Because it is bound hand and foot by the law which says that the railroads shall have the right to a certain fixed rate of return upon the valuations made. Is there anyone here who will dispute that proposition? Then, where are the public to get their relief?

What has been the effect of the operation of the law? As I said, this railroad down in Arkansas stated that they did not need the Government guaranty, that they did not want any favors from the Governmnet, but merely asked that their property be turned back to them and that they be given an opportunity to proceed under the law and they would make money. We have not heard any complaint from them. That is a little system, as compared with these others, and its guaranteed income during the war was low and small, as compared with the roads that had 10, 20, 30, 40, 45, and even 65 per cent return guaranteed, but that railroad has taken that position. Where are the public going to get any relief?

There is no relief unless the Supreme Court shall declare the other law unconstitutional on that point, or unless Congress shall repeal this section of the law and give the people an opportunity to be heard before the Interstate Commerce Commission, which I believe is the most beneficial agency that ever has been established by the Government for the protection of the people in these matters and for the protection of the carriers as well. Let us repeal this law and restore the status where the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be left discretion to fix reasonable rates both for the carriers and the people. Then the public will at least have a chance to complain that they have not been given just and fair and reasonable rates, and to have the matter tried by a tribunal which is established by law for that purpose. In that way they may secure some relief.

It is asked, however, Does the public need any relief? For the farmers of Texas and Oklahoma and other States of the Southwest and the farmers of the Northwest the freight rates have been increased so unreasonably high that their products in the market are hardly worth shipping. On account of the small net return under the conditions as they now exist, the farmers, the producers, and the stock raisers have been virtually ruined by the increased robber freight rates which have been fixed directly by authority of this law of Congress.

What is the condition of the railroads? The railroads say, "We as well have been ruined; we are not making any money; we are broke; we come to the Congress and we ask Congress to give us this money before it is due, before under the terms of the gratuity we are entitled to receive it; we want this money; we have got to have it; we ask the Government now for that favor."

Senators know that the smoke from the chimneys of many factories does not any longer ascend; they know that the fire smolders in many forges in this country of ours; they know that the farmers in the South and West have been so handicapped, so injured, so discriminated against by the railroads that they face disaster.

What good has this legislation done the railroads? If they are reporting the truth, they, as well as the agricultural and industrial communities, are ruined. They come and say frankly, "We are ruined," and this is one of the prime factors contributing to their present condition.

Now, do not Senators think we had better repeal that section of the law? We have already passed the other law. I opposed it; I said it would operate in this way to the injury of all the public, who had a right to expect reasonable and fair freight rates, and that their Congress at least would not preclude them from the right which they had always enjoyed. Let us repeal this other section.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. KIRBY. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to say to the Senator from Arkansas that what he has said with reference to the heavy freight charges on bulky freight is absolutely true, so far as it applies to the section of country from which I come.

Mr. KIRBY. I am glad to have the Senator say that.

Mr. GRONNA. In the case of hay, for instance, the hay market to the farmer in my section of the country has been destroyed by virtue of high freight rates, and, as the Senator from Arkansas has well said, the business does not seem to pay the railroads. In that aspect of the case, it seems that the whole machinery which was set up was unscientific and has produced deplorable conditions among farmers and, I understand, among the railroads.

Mr. KIRBY. I am glad to have the Senator's confirmation of my statement.

Senators will remember the live-stock situation and what representatives of the live-stock industry have stated. They will remember how live-stock men have stated that when they ship their stock to market, after paying transportation charges, they receive virtually nothing for the stock. The railroads say, "We, too, are broke." Then there is something wrong with the system.

Let us repeal section 15a of the law; let us hand back to this agency, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the power to say to the railroads, "You shall have reasonable and just rates for service," and also to say to the public, "You shall have reasonable and just rates of transportation."

But, it is asked, "Is it possible that the law operates in that way?" I have set forth the condition. It is further asked, "Will it operate in that way in the future?" It has so operated to this time, and why would it improve in the future?

Whenever the rates of carriage are fixed so high that commerce can not move, then commerce is destroyed and the carriers are destroyed. It is asked, "Is it possible that the carrier would so far disregard its own interest as that it would take the benefit of a provision of law that might prove injurious to the carrier?" The Government stood behind them here by a guaranty of 10, 20, 30, 40, or 45 per cent income for six months. The carrier took the chance in the other matter and said to the Government, "We want a guaranty under the law; we want such rates as we are entitled to prescribe under this 6 per cent income law," and we said, "We will see what can be done about it." Now the carriers come and say, "We are broke. What are you going to do about it?"

The Senate of the United States represents the whole people of the United States. The Government and the public do not exist for the benefit of the railroads; the Senate Chamber was not built for the benefit of Senators; the courthouse was not built for the benefit of the judges; the schoolhouse was not built for the benefit of the teachers. These are all agencies in the development of our progress and civilization; agencies for the service of the people and the promotion of their welfare. We are certainly as much obligated to protect the public interest as we are to protect the interest of any special class of our citizenship or corporations. Is that not true? Then, it has not been done and the law conclusively shows it by its having operated injuriously to the public and disastrously to the railroad companies.

I think these matters ought to be considered, and I think the time has come here and now when relief should be afforded. Just so long as we continue to have group rates and arbitrary valuations fixed and then allow the railroads by a system of bookkeeping to add two or three items, that long we are going to have this condition. There will be lethargy; yes, there will be disappointment to the public; there will be gloom among the producers. That is the condition which we have to-day, and we do not propose to remedy it one single farthing by taking the people's money out of the Treasury and handing it to the railroads. Why? Because the railroads are broke and because it is necessary that the people have transportation.

We have already passed that law, and having passed it I say let us go ahead—it will make but little difference—and give the railroads what we have said they are entitled to under the law; but let us remedy the condition, let us give the people an even and fair chance or some chance, at any rate, for the determination of their rights; give them an opportunity to have equal, fair, and just and reasonable rates of transportation, which never can be done under this section of the law.

Senators, I am not disposed to discuss this matter longer; I could say a great deal about it; but we have seen the effect of operation of that section, and you know what I have said here is true. I do not believe there is a single proposition that I have made that can be disputed; I think everything I have stated is in accordance with the facts and is definite and accurate, so far as the general matter and statement is concerned.

Now, there ought to be something done to bring relief. That can be done by the repeal of that particular section, which will leave the Interstate Commerce Commission where it has always been, with the power to fix just and reasonable rates to the public and with the power to grant rates that will provide reasonable and just compensation to the carriers. That is where it ought to be left; it ought to be left within the discretion of this agency which Congress has created for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I should like to have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, after line 21, it is proposed to amend by adding a new subdivision which will read:

(c) Section 422, section 15a, of said transportation act approved February 28, 1920, is hereby repealed.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I am very heartily in sympathy with the object and purpose of the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas. When we were considering the present law governing our railroads and transportation I was thoroughly impressed and convinced that its provisions in regard to rate making were going to operate very harshly; that in many instances they would result in the imposition of railroad rates which would be almost prohibitive and which in a great many instances would result in retarding certain industries, and more particularly agricultural industries. For this reason I opposed and voted against the present railroad law. My forecast upon that subject, so far as the State of Florida is concerned, has proven true. I have received a great many reports from those engaged in the citrus-fruit industry, those engaged in staple farming and in the production of vegetables and in other products, complaining most bitterly against the present rates imposed upon those industries. The difference between what may be reasonable rates and the rates that are being charged at the present time upon many of these products represent to the grower an element of safety against loss.

As an illustration of the excessive rates, I may call attention to a freight charge brought to my attention by a farmer from a small town near Tampa, the town of Wimauma. This farmer shipped to Philadelphia a carload of lettuce consisting of 374 hampers, and upon that carload of produce the freight was $411.11 for a haul of, say, from 1,200 to 1,250 miles. The freight charge, as I have said, on that haul was $411.11. Under the prewar rate, which was certainly sufficient, the farmer would have paid probably $300 for his freight, and he would have had $111.11 left to stand between him and an actual loss upon the fruit of his labor and his investment; but as a consequence of this excessive rate he received only $3.80 net for his carload of lettuce.

Another case brought to my attention was the shipment of a carload of cabbage from the same point to Philadelphia. On 396 crates of cabbage, constituting one carload, the freight was $434.15, and the farmer received $10.86 net.

Mr. President, the industries of the country will not prosper, will not be continued, and will not be enlarged if the freight rates are excessive. The result has been in my State, and doubtless in many other States, that they are plowing in their fields of lettuce, they are letting their fields of cabbage go to waste; and the producers of citrus fruits, with the present market and the present excessive freight rates, are hesitating about shipping a considerable part of the crop that has not yet been marketed. The rate burden has practically destroyed the production of watermelons.

I took up the question of obtaining a freight rate reduction with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the commission took it up with the railroads, with a view to trying to get some amicable adjustment of the freight rates on citrus fruits and vegetables. The reply came back that the rates could not be made any less, and that the trouble was in the markets at the present time; that the products were not bringing a reasonable price in the markets. I frankly admit the market is bad, but, at the same time, that does not remove the fact that the freight rates and the express rates are excessive. That does not remove the fact that the railroads of the country could make reasonable returns upon the products of the grove and of the farm by imposing a reasonable rate and lessen the loss to the grower of my State and other States. The idea of one carload of cabbage requiring a freight charge of $434 for a distance of 1,200 miles! Anybody knows that that is not reasonable.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DIAL. In connection with what the Senator says I will say to him that I saw the other day a bill for a carload of merchandise shipped from Winston-Salem to Washington, a distance of about 400 miles, and the freight bill was around $445.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is just in confirmation of my position that the rates are entirely too high. They are unreasonable. They result in retarding business, they result in reducing the tonnage to the railroads, and in that way affect the income of the railroads of the country and at the same time paralyze industry.

Take the express rates: Only this morning I received a letter from a farmer of my State saying that he had shipped 12 crates of vegetables to Savannah, Ga., a distance of some 500 miles, and that the charges upon the 12 crates were $24, $2 a crate. Why, the people that are carrying on the citrus-fruit industry and the farming industry of this country can not survive rates of that kind.

There are two different lines of thought among the railroad people of the country. Some seem to think that you can put on almost any kind of a rate charge you want and that that makes the railroad more prosperous; but, as stated by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], it has been developed that that is not true. They asked for an increase of their rates, and they got an increase, and yet they claim that their roads are not prosperous, that they are not making money. Well, one thing is certain. The people who are furnishing the freight and paying the freight rates are not making money, and a great many of them are losing money on account of the excessive charges.

Among railroad people there is another line of thought—that if you make your rail rates reasonable you encourage industry, you encourage agriculture, you increase railroad tonnage, and that your railroad is made more prosperous by the adoption of a policy of that kind than by imposing such very high rates as are imposed under the present law.

I am thoroughly in sympathy with the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Assume that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas is adopted. Will the Senator explain how that will bring relief?

The commerce act provides, in substance, that the rates shall be just and reasonable. The only addition, so far as the particular section is concerned which it is proposed to repeal, is this: First, that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have before them a rule in rate making which will net to the railroads in the entire country—or, if it is divided into groups—5½ per cent on the railway investment. This is for a period of two years only; and they can, in their discretion, if they think necessary, add to that another half of 1 per cent, which shall be used in the betterment of the railroads. Now, of course, the Senator must recognize the fact that we have good roads and we have bad roads and we have roads which are in an indifferent condition, considered from an earning standpoint; so we have provided, if there is an excess earning, how this excess earning shall be divided.

I am not prepared to discuss with the Senator the question as to whether or not the rates to which he refers are too high. I am impressed with the fact that they are somewhat exorbitant; but the Congress of the United States does not fix rates. The Interstate Commerce Commission fixes them. If they are too high, or higher than a given commodity ought to bear, of course they ought to be reduced; but surely the Senator is not going to take the position that we ought not to provide in some way for some return on investments in railroad property. Otherwise, you are going to wreck the entire system, and I should like to know how the Senator expects to improve the condition of the shippers by repealing this particular section of the railroad act.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, it is somewhat a case of "any port in time of storm." It could not be any worse than it is at present, and we could only have a little ray of hope if we repealed the present limitations which allow them to make a certain percentage.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. KIRBY. I should like to make a suggestion there. If we repeal this law that says to the Interstate Commerce Commission, "You shall allow the railroads rates that will produce this amount of revenue," then the discretion will have been left with this agency just as it always was before we made a rule that operated as this one has been shown to have operated.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator know that the rates have been made so as to produce this return?

Mr. KIRBY. Why, they said so.

Mr. POMERENE. I beg the Senator's pardon; they have not said so.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. KIRBY. Just a minute. The railroads came and asked rates that would produce an additional revenue of $1,250,000,000, and the railroads under this rule of law, I understand, were granted those rates.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am afraid the Senator from Arkansas has not gone to headquarters to get information with regard to that matter.

Mr. KIRBY. Then will the Senator be so kind as to furnish the information from headquarters?

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator had told me what he was going to discuss this morning, I should have tried to have it here. The Interstate Commerce Commission went into this subject for the purpose of improving conditions, and saw that certain increases in rates were necessary; but I challenge the Senator to point out one word which has been uttered by the Interstate Commerce Commission to the effect that under these rates these returns would be guaranteed.

Mr. KIRBY. Nobody claims that.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I think I can give the Senator the information he asks for right now.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. The commission did fix the value of the roads under the La Follette Act, they having reached a stage in their valuation where they could make a fair and reasonable estimate of it. They did make rates which they thought, under the existing conditions, would produce the 5½ per cent return.

Mr. KIRBY. In accordance with this law.

Mr. KELLOGG. As a matter of fact, they did not do it, and I will give the Senator the exact figures.

Mr. KIRBY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to complete the statement, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. KIRBY. I just want to say to the Senator before he finishes his statement that I do not claim that the railroads made so much, but I say that under the law the Interstate Commerce Commission was bound to allow them rates that they thought would enable them to make that much.

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; as nearly as may be.

Mr. KIRBY. And we took away from them the discretion to say that the rates should be reasonable to the public or to the railroad companies.

Mr. KELLOGG. But it was not a guaranty, and as a matter of fact the statistics of the Interstate Commerce Commission show that in September after these rates were fixed the roads earned 4.1 per cent upon the valuation fixed by the commission; in October, 4.6 per cent; in November, 3.3 per cent; in December, 1.1 per cent; or an average of 3.3 per cent; and the results for January are not as good as those for December. That is what they actually did earn.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That shows all the more necessity for repealing this law, because, if we do not repeal it, if they think it is the proper thing to do, they will be appearing before the Interstate Commerce Commission within a very short time asking for another advance of 25 per cent or 50 per cent in freight and passenger rates. I think it is all the more necessary to repeal this provision or else to cut down the rate of return they shall be allowed to make on their investment.

Mr. KELLOGG. I understand that it is not their intention to ask for any increase, and that the railroads themselves do not feel that any increase should be granted.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I think they have reached a very wise conclusion. If they pursue the present destructive policy of charging excessive rates, their tonnage is going to be very materially reduced; so, as a question of preserving a house that is rapidly tumbling, I hope they will see fit not to attempt to advance rates and, on the other hand, will reduce them.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do.

Mr. DIAL. Is it not true that the railroads have already lost a great deal of the short-haul tonnage in favor of trucks? In my State the rates are so high now that on the short hauls they are hauling freight by truck.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is true. They are losing in that way, and they are losing on account of curtailment in crop production; and if the present rates remain, judging from the situation in my State, their tonnage will be reduced probably 25 to 33⅓ per cent in another year, because the farmers of the country are growing weary of the idea of spending their time and giving their labor and their money in the production of crops when they have to contribute more than half of what they receive for them for freight charges.

Mr. President, I think it is high time that Congress was taking some action against the excessive freight charges that are in existence under the present law, and I hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] will be agreed to. I have sought to reach the same condition by introducing some three or four weeks ago a bill to reduce the percentage of earnings that the railroads are allowed under the existing law, but it seems now that they claim they are not making that percentage, so I am after the effective remedy for a reduction in freight rates and in express rates. If we do not get them our agricultural interest is going to be very much hampered and the business of the railroads is not going to be what it would be if they would make reasonable rates and do business upon a policy of "live and let live."

I hope the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY].

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harris	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.
Ball	Harrison	McKellar	Smith, Md.
Borah	Heflin	McLean	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Henderson	McNary	Smoot.
Calder	Hitchcock	Moses	Spencer
Capper	Johnson, Calif.	Nelson	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Swanson
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Thomas
Dial	Kellogg	Phelan	Townsend
Fernald	Kendrick	Phipps	Trammell
France	Kenyon	Poindexter	Underwood
Frelinghuysen	King	Pomerene	Walsh, Mont.
Gay	Kirby	Ransdell	Watson
Gerry	Knox	Reed	Willis
Gooding	La Follette	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gronna	Lenroot	Shields
Hale	Lodge	Simmons

Mr. GERRY. I have been requested to announce the absence of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. TOWNSEND. All I desire to say, Mr. President, is that the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] is not pertinent to this bill; that it has not been considered by the committee; and it ought not to complicate the question which we are here trying to settle.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I wish to speak on the amendment very briefly, as only a few Senators were present when I offered it.

I do not think the objection raised by the Senator from Michigan is tenable. This is a House bill, general legislation, in effect, and I have offered an amendment to it, as I had a right to do, to repeal that section of the transportation act which requires the Interstate Commerce Commission to value the roads in groups, and to permit the railroads to levy enough additional freight rates to give them a return of 5½ to 6 per cent upon the property investment, as valued by the commission. That is the present law. Under that law the railroads were valued, and an increase of 25 to 30 per cent in freight rates was granted. I say the effect of that law has been ruin to the productive industries of the country and almost ruin to the carriers themselves.

It seems to me that under the old law, under the law as it is supposed to exist to-day, the railroads are entitled to only a reasonable return upon their investment. The law says that 5½ to 6 per cent upon the valuation is a reasonable return. Under the law, shippers are entitled to reasonable and just rates of transportation. Now, the Interstate Commerce Commission is precluded, by this section of the law, from considering the reasonable and just freight rates upon the part of the people until they have levied rates high enough to return 5½ and 6 per cent income upon the property as valued by the Interstate Commerce Commission. In other words, the public right to reasonable and just rates of transportation is absolutely destroyed unless and until the rates charged produce 5½ and 6 per cent income to the railroads as fixed by law and not by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], and in his absence am compelled to withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], but through the courtesy of that Senator I am released on this bill and all amendments thereto. Therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. POMERENE (when his name was called). While I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], I understand that on this amendment he would vote as I intend to vote. I therefore feel privileged to vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. GLASS. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to state that I am paired with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], but I am confident that if he were present he would vote "nay" on this proposition. So I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HARRISON. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. Not being able to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MOSES. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. KEYES] on official business. If present, on this question he would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]; and

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 59, as follows:

YEAS—14.

Ashurst	Harris	La Follette	Sheppard
Fletcher	Kenyon	McKellar	Trammell
Gore	King	Overman
Gronna	Kirby	Phelan

NAYS—59.

Ball	Gooding	Myers	Spencer
Beckham	Hale	Nelson	Stanley
Brandegee	Heflin	New	Sterling
Calder	Henderson	Phipps	Sutherland
Capper	Hitchcock	Poindexter	Swanson
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Pomerene	Thomas
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Ransdell	Townsend
Dial	Kellogg	Reed	Underwood
Dillingham	Knox	Shields	Wadsworth
Fernald	Lenroot	Simmons	Walsh, Mont.
France	Lodge	Smith, Ariz.	Warren
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Smith, Ga.	Watson
Gay	McLean	Smith, Md.	Willis
Gerry	McNary	Smith, S. C.	Wolcott
Glass	Moses	Smoot

NOT VOTING—23.

Borah	Fall	McCormick	Pittman
Chamberlain	Harrison	Newberry	Robinson
Culberson	Johnson, Calif.	Norris	Sherman
Cummins	Johnson, S. Dak.	Owen	Walsh, Mass.
Edge	Kendrick	Page	Williams.
Elkins	Keyes	Penrose

So Mr. KIRBY's amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I have just sent a page for an amendment which I desire to propose to the pending railroad law, reducing the authorization of return on rates from 5½ to 3 per cent.

We are passing now upon the question of a bill granting relief to the railroads. I was very forcibly impressed by the result of the last vote as to the attitude, upon the one hand, of granting relief to the railroads and, upon the other hand, of granting relief to the agricultural and shipping interests of the country. The railroads come to Congress and knock at the door, and they do not knock in vain, but, in a very large majority of the instances at least, the producers, the operators of industries of the country, when they appeal to Congress appeal to deaf ears. It seemed to be all right to pass legislation granting to the railroads financial assistance. They succeeded admirably; they got just what they wanted. I recall more or less railroad lobbyists being around the Capitol advocating bills providing for the return of the railroad properties to private ownership, and so far as suggestions made by them within my knowledge, they obtained from Congress everything they asked. They made a mistake as to what they would accomplish or what they thought they would accomplish. The imposition of the excessive rates has worked a great hardship upon the freight-shipping public of the country.

The railroads did not ask only for financial assistance, but also to be given very high rates, based not upon the actual value of the stock but upon the investment in the railroads. They said, "We are an infant industry in this country and will have to have financial assistance." Congress came to the rescue and gave them all the financial assistance they wanted. They made some miscalculation as to the length of time of the loan they desired. They only asked for three and one-half years at first, but some three or four weeks subsequent it dawned upon the railroads that they wanted the loan and the financial aid for a little longer period. Again they came and knocked at the door of Congress, asking that the period for the loan be extended. There was great responsiveness, and the request was promptly granted.

But when the agricultural interests of the country, the fruit growers of the country—of my section and other parts of the Union—appeal to Congress and try to get some relief against excessive freight and express rates, which are working so disastrously to those industries, then other business is too important and we have not time to conider those questions just at present. We can lay aside the Agricultural appropriation bill to provide some relief for the railroads, but the idea of laying aside a railroad bill to provide some relief to the overtaxed industries and agricultural interests of the country on account of excessive freight rates and express rates is thought preposterous, by some at least.

There is an upheaval of sentiment in the country against the present system of excessive rate making on the part of the railroads. From my own State I am receiving almost daily communications from farmers' organizations, commercial organizations, merchant associations, and from the private truck farmer and private citrous-fruit grower in protest against the present rates. It is asked here, "Are we not going to give the railroads a reasonable rate?" Yes; I think they are entitled to a reasonable rate, and that is what we are pleading for—reasonable rates; but we think also that the industries of the country, which are the support of the railroads, are entitled to reasonable rates, and that in the rate structure the condition of the industries should be considered and the rates should be so fixed as to allow those industries to prosper, instead of having rates fixed that will stifle them and destroy them.

Down in my State we produce great quantities of perishable products. Under the old régime of the railroads years ago, with high and excessive rates, the trucking industry and the citrous-fruit industry amounted to very little. It was only some 10 or 15 years ago, when the railroads adopted the wise policy of trying to give rates that would encourage those industries, that we began to see expansion and development in the citrous-fruit industry and in the truck farming of the State. Under the prewar rates, which are ample and sufficient for present conditions, our citrous-fruit industry was spreading most rapidly. Thousands and thousands of acres of additional groves were being planted each year. In localities suited for vegetable growing, instead of there being probably only 100 or 200 acres, we found the industry expanding until there were thousands and thousands of acres utilized in the production of all kinds of truck.

However, Mr. President, to-day, when the farmer has to pay $434 freight to get a carload of lettuce for a distance of 1,200 miles, there is but little hope for him; there is but little hope for the expansion; yea, there is but little hope for the maintenance of the existing conditions in my State, so far as truck farming is concerned. The same thing is true of the citrous-fruit industry.

The railroads of certain sections of this country exercise some wisdom in the fixing of their rates and try to accommodate themselves to the situation. As an illustration, take the rate upon citrous fruit from California to the East. I have had some tables compiled upon the subject.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Florida has called attention to the freight charge on a carload of fresh vegetables. Will the Senator kindly give us the information as to what the producer got out of that carload?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have the report here giving that information. The producer received $10.86. He received less than 4 cents a crate for his cabbage and lettuce, and the railroad received for the freight on the cabbage and lettuce about $1.15 a crate.

Mr. President, I repeat the previous statement of my position, that the difference between the excessive rate and what would be a reasonable rate for the moving of such products gives an element of safety to the producer against loss. I think that a system of rates that would protect the producer and at the same time leave a reasonable return to the railroad operator for his service would be an equitable and just system, and one to which the industries of the country are entitled.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly, Mr. President.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Florida proposes by his amendment to change the rule which was fixed for the Interstate Commerce Commission in the determination of rates by reducing the net return from 5½ per cent on the aggregate value of their property to 3½ per cent. That 5½ per cent means the average rate on the aggregate value of the railway property in all the country or in groups. If the return is to be reduced to 3½ per cent, then there will be some railroads as to which the earnings will be very much less than 3½ per cent and a few, perhaps, whose earnings would be more than 3½ per cent.

As I recall, during the hearings it was established that there are railroad bonds maturing which are drawing from 4 to 5 per cent, which will aggregate during the current year something in the neighborhood of $300,000,000. Similar amounts will be maturing for some years in the future. If the Senator desires to reduce the average earnings of the railroads to 3½ per cent, can he tell the Senate where they would get money with which to refund those bonds now, and which draw 4 or 4½ per cent?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I should like to ask the Senator if he can tell me where the farmers and fruit growers in my State can get the money with which to pay for their fertilizer and to meet the obligations which they have assumed on account of their crops under the present existing freight rates?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida knows he is not answering my question. My position is that if freight rates are excessive, then there is an Interstate Commerce Commission whose duty it is to reduce them; and no doubt, if they are excessive, the Interstate Commerce Commission will reduce them. Of course, if the Senator from Florida has no concern for the transportation systems, if he would rather have the railroads in the hands of receivers so that there would be no means of shipment for citrus fruits—if that is the way he desires to serve his constituents, then I have nothing further to say.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I have not intimated that, but if we are to engage in conjecture I might as well indulge the thought, from the position taken by the Senator from Ohio, that if there is any crushing done he wants to crush the agricultural interests of the country and to preserve the railroad interests. So far as I am concerned, I say that if we are going to preserve any particular interest we should preserve the agricultural interest of the country and the other industries of the country. I know some seem to take the position that the railroads have built up the country. The railroads have been wonderful factors in its development, and on that account they have received decided advantages over the general public in a great many States of the Union; but, Mr. President, without the industries to support the railroads the railroads would necessarily go into bankruptcy. My idea is that we should harmonize the interests of both; that we must not place upon a pedestal the interests of the railroads of the country and entirely ignore the interests of the people upon whom the burden of their rates is imposed. This bill no more nor less than authorizes the railroads to become a taxing power against the American people. That is what it authorizes.

Senators talk about the returns to the bondholders and stockholders of the railroads. One of the difficulties we face to-day when it comes to the question of dealing with railroad rates is the overcapitalization of the railroads. There are many roads in the United States which are capitalized per mile at two, three, and even quadruple the actual expenditures on those properties; and yet, forsooth, when it is said that they should not have 5½ per cent on their watered stock, their speculative stock, and all other kinds of stock which they have authorized, then some one gets up and says that we wish to crush the railroads; we want to put them into bankruptcy. Nobody wants to put them into bankruptcy; but we want a fair deal for the people of this country who have to bear the burden of the maintenance of the railroads. I say that if under present existing rates the railroads are not earning more than 3½ per cent, then I propose to offer an amendment to the present bill to cut down their earnings to 3 per cent, and if it comes to a question of what will become of the stockholders of the railroads, they will take care of themselves; they will then, if we allow them 3 per cent, have more net earnings than the people of the country, generally speaking, who are supporting the railroads.

Take, for instance, the grower of agricultural products, citrus fruits and vegetables, in my State. When he ships a carload of his product and gets back a net return of $10.86, or $15 or $20, he is not receiving nearly as much as the railroad receives for hauling the car of freight.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator what has been done in his State in regard to intrastate rates? Has the Interstate Commerce Commission sought to fix intrastate rates in the State of Florida?

Mr. TRAMMELL. It is my understanding that they have sought to fix them, but I think our railroad commission has been resisting that effort. I understand the Senator has an amendment dealing with that aspect of the question.

Mr. KENYON. I offered an amendment to the original railroad bill in the form of a new bill, but I do not know whether or not I shall offer it to this bill; I think, perhaps, I shall.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I am heartily in sympathy with that; I think that the Interstate Commerce Commission should not control intrastate rates.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator believe that it was the intention of Congress in passing the Cummins-Esch bill to give the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to fix intrastate rates?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I am quite sure that some of those who importuned me to support the bill and who themselves were supporting it said that that power would not be given in the case of intrastate rates. I expressed some apprehension at the time the bill was pending upon that very point, but I was assured by the advocates of the bill—at least, by some of them—that it would not interfere with intrastate rates. I hope that such an amendment will be adopted. In the case of my State, for instance, one of our largest railroad systems is entirely an intrastate railroad, and it is a great injustice for the Interstate Commerce Commission to come into my State and, dealing with one of our three largest systems, the largest one being entirely an intrastate carrier, to attempt to fix our intrastate rates.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether they attempt to fix rates where a railroad, or some of its branches, at least, passes beyond the boundaries of the State, but where the commodities have their origin within the State and are shipped to a destination within the State?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I am not familiar with the status in my State at the present time, but I know there has been some effort made to fix intrastate rates. As to the details I am not positive; I know the effort has been resisted by our State railroad commission.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, in the press reports, I think of yesterday, I saw that in the State of North Carolina it was reported that the Interstate Commerce Commission had fixed intrastate rates and in doing so had increased them over what they were previous to that action on the part of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Their claim is, as I understand, that where the intrastate rates affect the interstate rates they have a right to control the intrastate rates. That is about the contention.

Mr. KING. I was about to inquire of the Senator from Florida, with his permission, if that view was not taken, how could they control the system and insure the returns which are provided in the Esch-Cummins bill? If they did not have control, then one State might establish such low freight and passenger charges as to make the operation of a road unprofitable, and an additional burden would then be laid upon people within other States. So it seems to me that the whole system as devised by the Esch-Cummins bill is wrong. It is foredoomed to failure, and we will soon be confronted with a railroad catastrophe the extent of which will exceed the gloomy forebodings of many persons to-day.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I will not attempt to go into the question of intrastate rates and the conflict which arises between State railroad commissions and the Interstate Commerce Commission. I will say, however, that prior to the existing law, or prior to the war, at least, when all control over intrastate rates by State railroad commissions was suspended, the policy of State control of intrastate rates was in existence in the country. In my own State and in other States of the Union the State commissions controlled the intrastate rates and the Interstate Commerce Commission controlled the interstate rates.

Mr. President, I was diverted a few moments ago when I had entered upon the question of the disposition, at least on the part of some of the railroads of the country, to act wisely in making rates and to try to make those rates conform somewhat to the needs of the industries involved; and yet sometimes when that is done it is in conflict with other particular sections of the country. As illustrative of what I mean, take the western roads.

The western roads haul oranges and grapefruit from the citrus-fruit centers of California to Philadelphia, New York, and the principal eastern markets at $1.53 a crate, when the railroads in the East and in the South charge an average of about $1.25 or $1.30 per crate for hauling a box of fruit for only about one-third of the same distance. So this demonstrates the fact that railroads can haul the citrus fruits, at least from my own section of the country, cheaper than they are doing it and pursue thereby a policy of "live and let live." If that is not true, why is it that they haul them from California clear across the continent to the eastern markets for about 20 or 25 cents a crate more than is charged from the citrus-fruit localities of the South, which are almost at the door of these eastern markets?

We have another illustration of what railroads can do when they want to try to assist the industries of the country, either agricultural or otherwise, in my own State. Take the Florida East Coast Railroad. The Florida East Coast Railroad, being desirous of encouraging tonnage from Cuba, fixes a rate upon pineapples and oranges and other products from Key West, Fla., to Jacksonville that is practically the same as it is from Miami, Fort Lauderdale, West Palm Beach, Fort Pierce, and other Florida towns ranging from 100 to 200 miles nearer to Jacksonville than Key West.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. PITTMAN. That illustrates the necessity of depriving the Interstate Commerce Commission of the right to permit a greater charge for a short haul than for a long haul. We have been suffering from that discrimination in the West for years, and are now. I am very pleased to have the Senator from Florida recognize the same discrimination in his own State, and I think that if Senators will look over their own States they will find that this discrimination exists in every State.

I have introduced a bill, which is now before the Interstate Commerce Committee, striking out the proviso which grants authority to the Interstate Commerce Commission to permit railroads to charge more for a short haul than for a long haul along the same line of transportation. I have that bill here now, and it is my purpose to offer it as an amendment to this bill when the proper time arrives. If that amendment is adopted, then, under the general act, that discrimination could not be consummated.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I was just speaking about the disposition of railroads to accommodate themselves to conditions when they wish to do so, and to haul from Key West to Jacksonville as cheaply as they haul from points 100 or 200 miles north of that within our own State. Of course, in that instance the advantage is given to the products of Cuba as against the products of the United States. That is what that means. It means that the railroads can bring in the Cuban oranges, the Cuban pineapples, and any other products that they haul, and put them on the northern markets and the eastern markets at a freight rate that is about equal to what our Florida people have to pay upon their similar products—a discrimination against Florida and the United States in the interest of Cuba on the part of this railroad company.

Mr. President, I propose that a new section be added to this bill. I send to the desk the amendment that I desire to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator desire its immediate consideration?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to offer it to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do not think this amendment accomplishes the purpose so well as the amendment presented by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY]. I believe that to repeal the law which fixes the amount that may be allowed would be better than to attempt to prescribe a maximum; but, as we can accomplish nothing along that line, I am intensely interested in the matter of trying to get better freight rates. Therefore I offer the amendment to cut down the percentage that they shall be authorized to make. If we can not get at this proposition in one way, then I want to get at it in another way, and therefore I propose this amendment.

Mr. President, I want it distinctly understood that there is no disposition on my part to keep the railroads from making a reasonable return upon their actual investment, but I do not believe that in order to have prosperity in this country you have got to allow the railroad interests to control and to dominate on the question of freight rates, on the question of passenger rates, and every other problem in which they are interested. I want to be fair with them, but I want them to be treated just as we treat every other interest in the country, and there are two sides to this question. You have got to consider the interests of the man who is to contribute the funds to support and maintain the railroads. If you crush him, if you crush his industry, then you have certainly killed and destroyed the goose that lays the golden egg.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, after line 21, it is proposed to insert the following:

That paragraph 3 of section 15a of the Interstate Commerce act of February 4, 1887, as amended by an act approved February 28, 1920, be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows:

In paragraph 3, strike out the figure "5½" and insert in lieu thereof "3."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, we can all remember the pressure under which the Esch-Cummins bill was passed. My recollection is that the President had announced a fixed purpose of returning the railroads to their owners on the 1st of March, and we were only two or three days from the 1st of March when this conference report came in.

I understood at the time that an effort was made to induce the President to postpone his order until July 1 that further time might be had to study this measure, and to put it in more satisfactory shape.

I found at the time many things in the bill that I did not approve, and the more I have studied it since the more things I have found in it that to me are very objectionable. I hope that Congress will take up that measure and remodel it in the near future under such circumstances that they can take their time and act in view of the experience we have had under the measure.

Passenger rates have gone up nearly 100 per cent above what they were in 1914. Freight rates have gone up enormously, and the freight rates now have almost passed the point where the traffic can bear them.

Passenger travel is lessening on account of the excessive rates, and I should not be at all surprised if the revenue of the railroads were decreased by the passenger rates charged. I know it must be decreased by the freight rates charged.

The freight rates on many commodities now are such that they can not be handled to market and be sold there. There are many commodities on which the freight rates are so high that the producer gets nothing if he ships them.

These are serious questions. If the railroads are obliged to have these excessive rates, then there is some trouble somewhere. On the one hand, it is charged that the managements are not efficient. We all know that the wages paid to some of the employees are excessive. If the employees, under a good management, are being paid more than the traffic can bear, then the employees ought to realize that they must be willing to reduce their compensation or give up their jobs, because the business will stop.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator is aware, is he not, that the rates of pay of the employees are fixed by the Railroad Wage Board?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. And that the wages of employees on the railroads have increased since 1917 from $1,739,000,000 to $3,800,000,000—more than 100 per cent?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. And that the railroads themselves have no control over those wages; that control is in the hands of the wage board?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; but let me ask the Senator a question: Is not two-thirds of the wage board made up of employees and employers, or the majority, at least, made up of employers and employees?

Mr. KELLOGG. Two-thirds of the board were appointed from nominees by the employees and the employers; but there are three representatives of the public, and one of those must concur in order to raise wages, and they were raised last June $625,000,000 above what they were before.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Now, if we guarantee to the operators a certain per cent of profit, and the operators and the employees make up a majority of the board, can they not cooperate to put up the pay of both?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not think any such thing has been done. I think they are doing everything they can to reduce them. In fact, many of the railroads have discharged something like 20 per cent of the extra employees. The number of employees during Government operation, without any increase of business, was increased 237,000, which means an added charge of over $300,000,000 a year, and those unnecessary employees are being discharged now.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Who did that?

Mr. KELLOGG. The Government operation increased the number something like 237,000 employees.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have no doubt that many of the troubles grew out of Government operation. I never thought it necessary. I never thought there was any law under which they could be legally taken over.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator is aware that this 5½ per cent is not a guaranty. They are required to fix the rates as nearly as may be to produce that, but they do not produce such a sum, and I know that the commission and railroads realize that they can not make rates now which will produce 5½ per cent. As I suggested—and I do not know whether the Senator was in the Chamber or not—the actual income of the roads since the rates were increased last September is as follows:

In September, 1920, they earned 4.1 per cent upon the value fixed by the commission; in October, 4.6; in November, 3.3; in December, 1.1; or an average of 3.3 per cent.

Everybody realizes that they can not get the balance. Does the Senator believe Congress has any power to say that 3 per cent is a fair return upon property devoted to public use?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No.

Mr. KELLOGG. Has Congress any power to say that 3 per cent is a fair return?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No. But the Senator has been a student of this problem, and I want to ask him what the trouble is.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I think if business in this country had kept up as it was in August and September and October of last year, the railroads would have been earning a fair and reasonable return. But, as the Senator knows, in November the bottom dropped out of business in this country. In my section of the country many of the roads' tonnage decreased almost 50 per cent. I think it is an extraordinary period, and I know that the railroads believe and the Interstate Commerce Commission believe that the traffic will come back, and when it comes back, with the gradual reduction of the operating expenses, they will be able and hope to reduce rates, and readjust the rates.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But does not the Senator think that the present rates are so high that they are an excessive burden upon commerce?

Mr. KELLOGG. I think in some instances they are, and I think they will be changed; but, as the Senator knows, we can not fix a schedule of rates by legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Taking the whole scale of employees' pay, does the Senator think their pay is reasonable or excessive?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not think the wages of some of the standard employees are too high, considering the cost of living. I think one of the great mistakes made by the director general was standardizing all wages of the United States. In other words, a man who is working upon the track in a country district in the South does not need, in order to live, the wages required by one working in New York City. A station agent on a railroad having one train a day should not be paid what a station agent who devotes his entire time to it in a thickly populated district having a heavy traffic gets. I think that has cost millions and millions of dollars, and that has to be readjusted. Of course, it is easy to look back and criticize, I realize, but another thing I think the director general made a mistake in was in unreasonably increasing the number of employees. Many of the heads of unions have told me and have written me that that was a fact, and many of the railroads have been enabled to largely cut down the number of their employees, some of them as high as 20 per cent, in certain branches of their business.

The standardization, which means in all industry stagnation, has cost the railroads of this country an enormous amount of money. But that can not be worked out in a day. They are doing all they can, I think, to work out that problem. This bill is to pay a debt which the Government owes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I shall vote for this bill, although I find much to condemn in the Esch-Cummins Act.

Mr. KELLOGG. Furthermore, although I do not wish to take too much of the Senator's time, he must realize that when the roads were turned back, in March, 1920, they were practically not earning one dollar, and they were not allowed to decrease the pay of their employees for six months, or to increase their rates until the commission considered the whole subject. Not only that, but immediately after they were turned back, or a short time after, the wage board added $625,000,000 more.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Why was that done?

Mr. KELLOGG. The wage board thought that the class of employees who were embraced in their order ought to have an increase, as I understand, and they granted it.

The Senator must realize that when the roads were taken over, after nine months' operation by the Government during the war, they were earning a gross income of about $4,000,000,000 and a net income of $898,000,000, enough to pay the interest on all their bonds, and many of them enough to pay a reasonable dividend and some of them a large dividend. In two years every dollar of the net earnings had been taken up in operating expenses, so that they were turned back without practically a dollar's income. I think the last month they were in the Government's hands they earned 0.94 of 1 per cent of their value as fixed by the commission.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yielded to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KIRBY. I want to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Arkansas would like to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question, and if the Senator from Minnesota agrees I yield for that purpose.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will answer it if I can.

Mr. KIRBY. The Senator mentioned the wage board just now.

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes.

Mr. KIRBY. Is there any fair analogy between the wage board and the Interstate Commerce Commission, when this law required the Interstate Commerce Commission to allow the levy of rates high enough to pay 5½ per cent? Would the Senator think it was fair to say to the wage board that they should allow wages which would amount to a certain percentage? We did not prescribe anything in the wage law as to the percentage they should allow, but we prescribed in the case of the Interstate Commerce Commission that they should allow a rate which would return 5½ per cent, and that takes away the discretion of the Interstate Commerce Commission and destroys the right of the public to demand reasonable adjustments of compensation.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator will realize the fact that the 5½ per cent was put in for two years in order that the commission should have a standard to go by. Congress has power to provide that a public utility shall receive only a fair rate of income; for instance, we will say a fair rate of interest on its investment. That is the extent to which the power of Congress goes. Congress has no power to say that 2 per cent or 1 per cent or no per cent is a fair rate. The Wage Board was given power to consider all the wages and working conditions, and it did. I think perhaps they did not have the time to give it the careful study they should have given it, but they felt as though the increase which they gave in June, I think it was, was as to the class of employees which they considered entitled to a fair increase, and I am not in any position to dispute their judgment on that subject.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I agree with much the Senator from Minnesota has said. I realize the seriousness of the situation. I only wanted to emphasize, in behalf of those who are carried as passengers and those who furnish the freight, that they are now bearing burdens which they can not stand. Passenger travel is decreasing on account of excessive rates, and the freight traffic to-day can not stand the charges which are being put upon it. Transportation will be cut down and business be lessened unless rates are lowered.

It may be, it is entirely probable, that the Senator is right, that one of the blunders made was undertaking to standardize compensation everywhere. For instance, in the southern part of my State, where the climate is very mild and where but little coal is needed in the winter, and where lands are quite reasonable, section hands can pick up a living on a little piece of land almost while they do their regular work upon the roads, and yet they are being paid, I understand, over $100 a month, when the same labor works upon the farm for $30 a month.

If it was the standardization and unnecessary employments which have brought such burdens upon the traveling and freight-paying public, then there should be speedy changes to bring relief.

One thing is true, and owners and operatives of railroads might as well get it into their minds, something must be done to lessen the cost of carrying passengers and freight, or the business of the country will be paralyzed, and, in my opinion, part of the depression which rests upon business to-day is the excessive burden of transportation. I trust the railroad problem may at an early day receive full consideration, when the Esch-Cummins Act will be substantially changed. When that time comes I trust the rights of the great consuming and producing public may receive more consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with reference to my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], I withhold my vote.

Mr. POMERENE (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], I am advised that he would if present vote the same way that I intend to vote. I therefore feel privileged to vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HENDERSON. Making the same announcement with reference to my pair, I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND. I wish to announce again that it is my understanding that the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], with whom I am paired, would vote "nay" on this question, and I therefore feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]; and

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

The result was announced—yeas 7, nays 61, as follows:

YEAS—7.

So Mr. TRAMMELL's amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to offer the same amendment, limiting the income to 4 per cent instead of 3 per cent, as proposed in the last amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Florida whether his amendment limits it to 4 per cent or limits the practical guarantee to 4 per cent?

Mr. TRAMMELL. It seeks to reduce the income from 5½ to 4 per cent.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It limits the figure at which the Interstate Commerce Commission must fix the freight rates so as to cover probably that amount?

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is my understanding of it. The present law does not prescribe a maximum, except in that it provides that after they earn more than a certain amount the excess shall be placed in the betterment fund. That is really the only maximum of limitation upon the amount that may be earned. The object of the law specifically sets forth that 5½ per cent would be considered a reasonable return, the standard being fixed, as I understood it, at the suggestion of the railroads of the country, doubtless because those interests were apprehensive that if this rate was not prescribed as a just and reasonable rate, then the Interstate Commerce Commission, exercising its jurisdiction in the matter of fixing just and reasonable rates, might see fit to fix a lesser rate. Of course, I know when we say the Interstate Commerce Commission may fix a rate as low as 3 per cent that they may, in their discretion, in the adjustment of rates, allow more than 3 per cent, and that means substantially more, as far as percentage is concerned.

I offer the amendment in the light of the disclosure here to-day that the railroads under the present rates claim they are not making more than 3 per cent. If they are not making over 3 per cent at the present time, we do not want to authorize them to extend or increase the existing rates. Instead, the rates, both freight and passenger, should be reduced.

It was based upon the information furnished by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] that the present rates were not producing 3 per cent, or very little over, that I offered the amendment to strike out 5½ per cent and to insert 3, and I now propose to strike out 5½ per cent and insert 4. I am not quibbling over percentages, but striking at the main issue involved, and that is whether the present existing rates shall be increased if the railroads desire to increase them. I say that it appears to me they can not increase them even if they have a desire to increase them. On the other hand, I insist, if the industries of the country which are supporting the railroads are to prosper, that the rates should be reduced, and if we bring about prosperity to the industries we contribute to the earnings of the railroads, and instead of crushing those industries we will benefit them and the railroads themselves will be more prosperous.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. A majority of the railroads in the country now are not paying expenses and are not making enough to meet running expenses and the interest on their obligations. If the Senator is going to cut down the amount of revenue that they may earn upon their business, where would he have the money come from to pay the railroads' expenses and a reasonable rate of interest? Where will it come from? Where will they get it?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I suppose the query is based on the thought of the Senator that it should be done by increased freight rates and passenger rates.

Mr. MYERS. I am asking where the Senator would get the money? In what way could it be gotten?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I am not a railroad expert or an expert in the matter of freight rates, but I know, from the object lesson that we have before us, that the greatly increased rates do not produce an increased net income to the railroads. The fact is stated here by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] that they have earned very little over 3 per cent under the present basis of increased rates. Some one else will have to find a remedy and a means whereby to increase the percentage of earnings of the railroads that will be more successful than the present exorbitant rates. They have not brought about that result. In my opinion more reasonable rates would increase the volume of railroad business and that would increase the net earnings of the roads. Certainly when the rates are so high that they cause a great reduction in the tonnage moved you do not help the finances of the roads.

Mr. MYERS. Does the Senator know the reason why the railroads are not making operating expenses and a reasonable rate of interest?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do not know all the reasons why they are not doing it. One strong reason is their earnings have been very much reduced because they are paralyzing great industries, simply paralyzing them, by overtaxation in the nature of exorbitant rates. In my own State fields of lettuce and other crops are going to waste, and in some instances the farmers have become disgusted and disheartened and are plowing them up because they can not afford to pay $400 or $500 freight on a carload of produce shipped to Philadelphia or New York, a distance of twelve or fourteen hundred miles.

Mr. MYERS. I would suggest to the Senator that one very cogent reason is the fact that the railroads are paying their employees now more than $2,000,000,000 per year in excess of what they did before the Government took the railroads over before the war.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is very true, and the railroads are wanting greater earnings than they ever had heretofore. They have more than doubled their rates. That seems to be the trend and tendency of the times, as I think it has been in all other times, for almost everybody to get everything they can. Of course, the employees have had their wages increased, and in a great many instances very justly so and probably in some instances not justly so, but that does not relieve the fact that a great part of the increase in freight rates does not go to the employees. Recently, in traveling, I have heard much complaint about passenger and Pullman charges. Those kicking almost invariably ascribe all of the increase absolutely to labor. It seems to me that that is the disposition of my friend from Montana; that is, I infer so from his suggestion.

Mr. MYERS. I named that as being one of the principal factors, and I think it is.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is by no means the only one, but it is very seldom that I ever hear of others.

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator has in mind others, I wish he would name them.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The freight rates under the present law was increased ranging from 25 to 43 per cent, and, with juggling, I believe, in many instances, the increase ran up to 50 per cent, absolutely paralyzing many of the industries of the country. The whole increase has been ascribed to the burden imposed by the expense for labor; it was said by some that labor caused all the increase.

This can not be true. As a matter of fact, it was published in the Washington newspapers at the time that of the last rate increase about 16 per cent represented the increased wages of labor, and 84 per cent was due to other causes, such as expenditures for improvements, and engines, betterments, and I do not know what all; but, at any rate, labor was having to answer for the whole hundred per cent increase, when it was demonstrated that only 16 per cent of it was due to the increased price of wages. Let us be fair.

I do not know the details of the amounts paid to the different employees of the railroads. I know that it is claimed that some of them are getting too much under present conditions; but in a great many instances, probably in a majority of instances, for the class of work they do, for the responsible positions which they occupy, for the danger to which they are subjected, they are not receiving too much compensation, considering the present high costs of living. I do not think that we should in protesting against excessive railroad rates assume that they are excessive because of the fact that the laboring man's wages have been increased. Every element bringing about the high rates should be considered. That is the only fair way to look upon the question.

Mr. MYERS. I do not think that any of them are getting too much, but I merely mentioned that fact to show that that is where more than $2,000,000,000 a year go in excess of the amount paid two years ago.

Mr. TRAMMELL. If we wish to take up the question of slicing wages, let us start at the head of the list; let us eliminate the salaries of $50,000 and $100,000 which are now paid to railroad presidents and directors. I hear talk about the flagman and the conductor and the engineer and the trainman, who occupy the more humble positions, getting too much wages, but for the first time I have to hear the Senator who complains at this rise in the Senate and condemn the practice of paying excessive salaries to the big officials of the railroads.

I believe in starting at the top of the list when we come to trim. I remember one instance during my official connection with a public position in my State. It was when the European war came on and the cry of the times was "Reduce wages; trim your sails and get ready for hard times." So it was suggested that wages on certain public work be reduced 10 per cent. We had probably 300 or 400 men engaged in that particular work. That is where they wanted to start. It was proposed to start by reducing the salaries of those poor fellows, a great many of them wading around in the mud, a great many of them sleeping with a lightwood knot for a pillow at night. They proposed a 10 per cent reduction in the wages of that kind of employees. I said, "Gentlemen, if you want to cut down wages 10 per cent, let us start at the top of the ladder, with those who are receiving the largest salaries. Suppose we reduce the salary of each one of the State officials, including myself, 10 per cent and put into the State treasury the amount thus saved. It goes without saying that the salaries were not reduced. I have not gone into the wage question of the railroads with any minuteness, but I say, Mr. President, that in justice and in fairness if we are going to talk about excessive amounts being paid for wages to those who are operating and maintaining our railroads, then we might say a little something with some sense of propriety about those receiving the enormous salaries of $50,000, $75,000, and $100,000 to direct these great enterprises; but we never hear anything about that.

I offer the amendment, Mr. President. I am not stickling on the question, as I have said, of percentages. I know 3 per cent sounds small, 4 per cent sounds small, but the present freight rates which are being imposed upon the people do not sound small, and in their burdens they are not light and frivolous, but they are imposing taxes upon the people of the country that are practically beyond endurance. I think the rates should be revised and made so equitable and reasonable that industry, agricultural and otherwise, would be encouraged instead of hampered as at present under existing rates.

It has been stated here upon the floor that the present schedule of rates earns but a very small fraction over 3 per cent. The question has been asked how are the railroads going to pay their bonds? Well, how are they paying them now? Is it proposed to increase the rates and decrease business? That has been about the result of it. We had better have a little decrease of rates and an increase of tonnage to the railroads and an increase of fostering and prospering of the industries of the country which necessarily have to contribute to the freight burden. Again I say I want to be fair to the railroads but I want them to be fair to those who pay the freight. The present high rates have not made the railroads prosper and I would like to see them prosperous, and with nothing accomplished for the companies disaster has fallen upon many of the industries of the country as a result of the high rates. We need a remedy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, several weeks ago I took up the question of railroad rates with the Interstate Commerce Commission. I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to print in the RECORD the correspondence with the commission on the subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DECEMBER 21, 1920.

Hon. EDGAR E. CLARK,
Chairman Interstate Commerce Commission,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: It has been brought to my attention by many people in Georgia and those whom I see here that the present high passenger and freight rates are doing more to decrease the amount of income received by the railroads than if a lower rate was in effect, which would cause more freight to move and more people to travel. In other words, the railroads are not carrying an average maximum of freight and passengers since the increase in rates. Of course, the commission doubtless has figures on this question which throw more light than I can by general observations.

It is needless for me to point out to you and the commission that the railroad situation is a problem which has not been solved to any great degree by the transportation act of 1920. The thing which I am greatly interested in is the matter of freight and passenger rates to be placed within reach of the average person, and at the same time give the railroads a reasonable income for their investment. Both the public and the roads deserve an honest living, but I fear that both are now suffering. Because of high freight rates there are products in my State which are now being shipped in such small quantities in comparison with production and demand.

I hope that an adjustment can soon be made which will bring down the rates, and I would thank you to let me have any information on the matter at your convenience which may have been gathered or published by the commission.

With high esteem, I am,

Very sincerely, yours,

WM. J. HARRIS.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, December 22, 1920.

Hon. WILLIAM J. HARRIS,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: I have your letter of the 21st, referring to expressions that have reached you to the effect that the existing passenger fares and freight rates are so high as to reduce travel and traffic, and consequently the revenues of the carriers.

Your expressed desire to see freight rates and passenger fares "placed within reach of the average person and at the same time give the railroads a reasonable income for their investment" is one in which we all cordially join. The railroad owners and managements naturally put the maximum estimate upon their necessities and deserts. The average shipper or traveler naturally minimizes the necessities and deserts of the roads and puts the maximum estimate upon his own interests and rights. It is no simple problem to strike the balance of right and equity as between the two. Times are abnormal and conditions generally are affected by the aftermath of the war. It is trite to say that the country must get back to a more normal condition and more normal bases for commerce, industry, and transportation. It is not to be expected that we will get back to prewar prices for labor, commodities, or for transportation, but it is to be expected and really is necessary to get back to a situation in which the prices of labor, commodities, and transportation will bear proper relative proportions.

The transportation act became law coincidentally with the termination of Federal control of the roads. The period within which the readjustment of rates contemplated by that act and recognized as necessary by everybody must be made was short, and the matter had to be dealt with in a broad and somewhat general way. The propriety of that line of action was recognized by those interested on both sides, as was also the necessity for readjustments. Naturally in those readjustments the interests of the carriers and of their patrons are in conflict and their views diverge. The financial results from operation of the roads by the Government are well known, as is also the fact that the level of operating expenses had risen out of all proportion to the revenues from the then existing rates. The operating ratios were and still are abnormally high, and it is by no means certain that even with the existing level of rates the carriers can under the existing level of operating expenses, the principal items of which are wages and fuel, earn a "reasonable income for their investment." We are endeavoring to keep abreast of the situation. We are exercising our powers in so far as seems appropriate to prevent unreasonable or inappropriate increases in charges by the carriers and cooperating with the carriers and the shippers in bringing about appropriate readjustments through reductions in charges, especially where it appears that the existing charges are such as to prevent the movement of the traffic. I think you are entirely correct when you say "both the public and the roads deserve an honest living, but I fear that both are now suffering."

There has been a substantial reduction in the amount of freight offered for transportation. This has resulted in large part from the closing down of industries, prominent among which may be mentioned iron blast furnaces, woolen mills, and automobile factories, and to the shortening of time of operation in many other manufacturing and industrial enterprises. We know that the grain crop of the West has not moved this year in normal quantities, and that an unusual proportion of the crop remains on the farms. This is because of unsatisfactory prices and the holding back of grain in the hope of improvement. I think that in a general way the same is true with regard to the movement of the cotton crop.

On the question of whether or not readjustment is proceeding too rapidly or too slowly, diametrically opposed views are entertained by different ones. Many suggestions for relief through Federal aid and otherwise are brought forward, and each has its advocates and its opponents. The times are such as call for the best thought on the part of all thinking men in order that the best advice may be given to those who are not in a normal frame of mind and who are disposed to act without carefully thinking through the proposition which they support.

The commission has not published any information as to these matters other than that contained in its thirty-fourth annual report, which was submitted to the Congress in the early part of this month, excepting that which is contained in our statistical periodical reports relative to earnings, expenses, and movement of traffic by the railroads. Copy of our annual report was sent to you. If you would be interested in our statistical sheets, I shall be glad, upon such advice from you, to furnish you with them.

I thank you for, and cordially reciprocate, your good personal wishes, and I am,

Yours, very truly, EDGAR E. CLARK,
Chairman.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the pending bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 21, it is proposed to insert the following:

(C) That no payment of money shall be made to any railroad company under this act except and until it shall be determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission, upon full investigation, and finding duly entered thereon, certifying (1) that such railroad company has not, since March 1, 1920, paid or contracted to pay unreasonable and extravagant prices for railway supplies, equipment, repairs, and renewals charged to its maintenance account, or (2) that it has not paid or agreed to pay unreasonable sums as salaries to its officers or directors, or (3) that it has not otherwise managed and conducted its business in a dishonest, inefficient, or uneconomical manner in violation of the terms of the transportation act of 1920.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE addressed the Senate. After having spoken for nearly an hour and a half, he said:

May I ask the Senator from Michigan how long he proposes to have the Senate sit this evening?

Mr. TOWNSEND. If I can have my way about it, I want the Senate to stay in session until this bill is disposed of, or until a unanimous-consent agreement is made to vote upon it some time to-morrow. I am willing to submit a proposed agreement at any time the Senator desires, if he will permit us to fix an hour to-morrow, however late. If we can agree upon an hour to vote, I am willing to lay the bill aside at any time when the Senator gets tired and wants to stop. But I do feel that unless such a consent agreement can be made the Senate ought to remain in session.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am willing to go on for a while longer.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I feel, in deference to the Senator from Wisconsin, that I ought to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate at this time to fix an hour to vote to-morrow, and if I can do that, I shall be perfectly willing to take a recess, and allow the Senator from Wisconsin to proceed in the morning at 11 o'clock.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I shall be very glad to proceed at that time. I am a little weary.

[Mr. LA FOLLETTE's speech will be published after it shall have been concluded.]

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have not the form, but I think it will be well to determine first whether anyone is going to object to it. If not, I will submit the regular form, which will require, of course, a call of the roll, in order to take the sense of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. What is the request?

Mr. TOWNSEND. To fix an hour to-morrow at which we can vote on this bill. I will try to fix the hour to accommodate the Senate, because it does not make a bit of difference to me what hour is fixed.

I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow at 5 o'clock this bill and all amendments made or pending thereto shall come to a vote.

Mr. POMERENE. Without further debate?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Without further debate after 5 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is necessary that the roll shall be called.

Mr. GRONNA. Would the Senator from Michigan have any objection to the Senate taking up the Agricultural appropriation bill for an hour or so this evening, with the assurance that the railroad bill will be the unfinished business?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no objection at all.

Mr. GRONNA. I believe we could work for an hour to-day on the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no objection to that.

Mr. GRONNA. I assure the Senator that his bill will be put back as the unfinished business.

Mr. CURTIS. That can be done by temporarily laying the pending bill aside.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I shall ask to have the bill laid aside as soon as this unanimous-consent agreement is entered into, so that the Senate can take up the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent that at not later than 5 o'clock to-morrow the Senate shall vote on the pending bill and all amendments thereto. The Secretary will call the roll to ascertain the presence of a quorum.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brandegee	Harris	Nelson	Spencer
Calder	Harrison	New	Stanley
Capper	Heflin	Overman	Sterling
Curtis	Johnson, Calif.	Owen	Sutherland
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Phipps	Swanson
Dillingham	Kellogg	Pittman	Thomas
Edge	Kendrick	Poindexter	Townsend
Fernald	Kirby	Pomerene	Trammell
Fletcher	Knox	Ransdell	Underwood
Frelinghuysen	La Follette	Reed	Wadsworth
Gay	Lenroot	Sheppard	Walsh, Mont.
Gerry	McKellar	Shields	Warren
Glass	McLean	Simmons	Willis
Gooding	McNary	Smith, Md.	Wolcott
Gronna	Moses	Smith, S. C.
Hale	Myers	Smoot

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I now present the following unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed unanimous-consent agreement will be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 5 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Tuesday, February 22, 1921, the Senate will proceed to vote without further debate upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill (H. R. 15836) to amend the transportation act, 1920, through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. on said calendar day no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 20 minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] may move to take up the Agricultural appropriation bill. I do this on the assumption that no one wishes to speak on the railroad partial-payment bill this evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would suggest to the Senator from Michigan, in order that the unfinished business may be before the Senate, that we agree at this time to take a recess instead of an adjournment.

Mr. GRONNA. I have assured the Senator from Wisconsin that I will move a recess.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But we might fail to get a quorum later.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its session this evening, it will take a recess until tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15812) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill H. R. 15812, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if, without prejudicing the position that his bill occupies, he will allow me to call up now the motion made the other day by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate at that time unanimously authorized the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to make certain investigations. I do not think it will take very long. The matter is of vital importance to the agricultural interests and will be in charge of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and they will use such wisdom and discretion regarding the investigations as they may think the circumstances justify.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to show all the courtesy possible to every Member of the Senate. Will it, in the opinion of the Senator, lead to any discussion?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think not. The Senator from Washington seemed the other day to feel that perhaps he had not been given an opportunity to express himself on the resolution. I wish to assure him now that I did not understand that he desired to have anything to say upon it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senate desires to consider the matter at this time, I shall not object to its coming up, and so far as I am concerned, I do not expect to take more than 5 or 10 minutes in discussing it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I hope the Senator from North Dakota will allow us to consider the motion to reconsider, and if it takes any length of time, of course, I will ask to have it postponed again.

Mr. GRONNA. I hope the Senator will not insist on considering the resolution and motion if it takes more than 10 or 15 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I shall not, because I assure the Senator that I am as anxious for the passage of the Agricultural appropriation bill as he is, and it is in accord with that bill and in the interest of agricultural communities that I am asking that the resolution be disposed of now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Agricultural appropriation bill will be temporarily laid aside.

THE COTTON AND WHEAT SITUATION.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The READING CLERK. Senate resolution 443, by Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, agreed to on the 17th instant, and on the 18th instant the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to. The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized to make an investigation to ascertain the amount and grades of cotton and wheat now held in this country; to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1.25 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection therewith, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, when the resolution came up the other day I was in the Committee on Appropriations. I had had some talk with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] with reference to it. I had objected to the passage of the resolution when it was reported. Finally, I told the Senator from South Carolina that I would withdraw my objection to the consideration of the resolution, but I thought I made it perfectly plain to him that I desired to be present when the resolution was considered, because I wanted to ask some questions about it. He evidently misunderstood my position. I have no idea that he intended to take advantage of my absence at all, but I did desire to be here when the resolution was considered.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the character of the resolution and the scope of it, and then if the Senate thinks that it ought to be passed, or rather, that the motion to reconsider ought not to prevail, I shall have no complaint, so far as the action of the Senate is concerned.

In the first place, when I objected to the resolution, the Senator from South Carolina stated that it would expire with this Congress; that it could not cost very much; that it could not take very much time; and there could not be any very extended investigation made because it must expire with the present Congress. When it was called up it was amended so that the resolution as passed by the Senate is far more objectionable to me, so far as I am concerned, than it was in the first instance. It is now unlimited in time, and the committee may take all the time that it considers necessary in investigating the matter.

The resolution as passed authorizes the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any subcommittee thereof, to make an investigation to ascertain the amount and grades of cotton and wheat now held in this country.

That is a broad authority—"to make an investigation to ascertain the amount and grades of cotton and wheat now held in this country." How long it will take them to do that nobody can tell; how many agents they may employ to gather this information no one can tell. They are authorized to employ all the agents they deem to be necessary to get the information that is desired.

Mr. President, in order to make this information of any particular value it must be complete and accurate. What use can be made of information that is not certain with reference to the amount of cotton in the country or that is not certain with reference to the amount of wheat there is in the country? What use of any value can be made of such information I can not see.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if this work might not well be done, if it is reasonably necessary, by the Department of Agriculture rather than by a committee of the Senate?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think so. As a matter of fact, I know that at certain intervals the Department of Agriculture gives out a statement as to the amount of wheat and the amount of cotton on hand. I am not a member of the Agricultural Committee; I do not know very much about the details of this matter. I have myself often thought instead of being a benefit that the giving out of such statements is an injury to the cotton growers and the wheat growers of this country, and that it simply plays into the hands of speculators and allows them to manipulate the market. I may be wrong about that; I do not know; but that is the way it has appeared to me.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Does it not also appear to the Senator from Washington that if the reports to which he refers as being given out by the Agricultural Department are not correct, we ought entirely to stop appropriating money for them?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think so.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Bureau of Markets, which collects these statistics, reports conditions which do not exist and their reports can not be relied upon, they are worse than no reports at all; and yet it costs thousands and tens of thousands of dollars to get those reports.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I understand, the Department of Agriculture has agents in every county throughout the United States to send in reports with reference to the amount of wheat and cotton, and so forth, in the United States which is on hand. Now, what is it that is proposed to be done by this resolution? It is proposed by the resolution to authorize the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to ascertain the same facts. If the Agricultural Department, represented by an agent in every county in the country, can not get accurate information, how many agents will the Committee on Agriculture have to employ in order to secure accurate information as to the amount of cotton or the amount of wheat which is on hand? Mr. President, it seems to me that to do effectively and properly what the resolution calls upon the Agricultural Committee to do will cost thousands upon thousands of dollars.

Does the Senate desire in the closing hours of this Congress to authorize an investigation of that character? I did not think that it ought to be done; I did not think that the committee, even during the remainder of this session, should try to obtain this information; I did not think they could get information that would really be of value before this Congress closed; and it seemed to me that if the Agricultural Department, for which we have been furnishing appropriations for years and years—and I have always been glad to vote for those appropriations to perform these services in the interest of the farmer—could not secure the information which this resolution seeks, it would be impossible for the Committee on Agriculture to get the information, at any rate, at any reasonable expense.

By the resolution the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is authorized to call for persons and books and papers and all that sort of thing; in other words, it is given all the power that we have given various committees in connection with investigations which have cost the Government many thousands of dollars. I do not know what showing was made to the Committee on Agriculture in reference to the resolution. I think I shall ask the Senator from South Carolina if the resolution was acted upon at a regular session of the Committee on Agriculture when there was a quorum of the committee present?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I introduced the resolution in the Senate and asked for its immediate consideration. That was objected to by the Senator from Washington, who now occupies the floor. The resolution did not have to go to a committee, but it was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

I tried to point out at the time I introduced the resolution, as I have since pointed out, that there is such a duplication of work in our departments, such a conflict in the statistics that are given out, that the public at large, neither the consumers nor the producers of these two commodities—I know of my own knowledge as to cotton—nor anyone else knows accurately in reference to the matter. We have no information that is reliable on the subject.

As I pointed out here, they claim that among their sources of information are the Liverpool Gazette, the Liverpool Association, and the New Orleans Cotton Exchange.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Who claims that?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Bureau of the Census, which brings in these figures.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What about the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Department of Agriculture furnishes some figures, the Bureau of the Census furnishes some, and the Bureau of Markets furnishes some. The result is that there is "confusion worse confounded." In the meantime those who are producing the crops have no accurate knowledge of what will be the condition of their market. I thought that an impartial body, like the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate, could obtain information from every source, could sift it down, find the facts, and let the public know them without fear of duplicating the work of anyone else. It was for that reason that I introduced the resolution.

I state here and now that I appreciate the position which the Senator from Washington takes; that having certain departments and bureaus we should call upon them for the desired information; but time and again I have called upon them and there would come in a report from one, and then it would be found that the source of their information was so unsatisfactory and the information itself was in such shape as to be of little, if any, value. Surely, the committee may call these officials and ascertain the sources of their information and get to the bottom of the situation, which spells millions upon millions of dollars to the people of the country.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I take it from what the Senator from South Carolina says that the resolution has not gone to the Committee on Agriculture at all?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The resolution did not have to go to the committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know it did not have to go to the committee, but often such resolutions very properly go to a committee; and a resolution that involves so much as this certainly ought to have gone to the Committee on Agriculture, and that committee ought to have considered whether or not it should pass, and whether there was such lack of information on the part of the Department of Agriculture as necessitated investigation by the Committee on Agriculture. The Senator from South Carolina would discredit the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Department of Agriculture is not the agency that sends in these statistics; it is the Census Bureau.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Bureau of Markets gathers such information, does it not?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Bureau of Markets does not cover this information except in part. The Bureau of the Census, the Bureau of Markets, and the Agricultural Department all contribute a part of the information.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does not the Bureau of Markets give out estimates from time to time as to the amount of crops, the amount of corn, the amount of wheat, the amount of cotton, and all that sort of thing?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Sometimes they give a preliminary estimate, but the Census Bureau is the organization charged with gathering the statistics as to the amount of the supply and the distribution of grain and other crops.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator, then, would discredit the Census Bureau and the figures and facts which it reports?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Precisely; but it is not a question of discrediting anybody; it is a question of the conflicting reports coming from the different agencies of the Government.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They are all discredited, then.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Exactly; but by an investigation on the part of the committee the facts would be disclosed and that situation would be changed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the committee should bring in a report showing a different amount from that shown by the figures reported by any of the agencies named by the Senator, then they would all be discredited.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Department of Commerce is charged with the duty of investigating matters in connection with the coal industry; but at the present time the Senate has a special committee investigating that same subject. Does the Senator pretend to say that no good has come out of the investigation of the Senate committee?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, Mr. President, that investigation was not to find the amount of coal on hand; the purpose of that investigation was entirely different from the purpose of the investigation proposed by the resolution of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The purpose of the investigation proposed by the Senator is to ascertain the amount of certain products on hand.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The investigation of the coal situation on the part of the Senate committee had to do with the supply and distribution of coal.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand that; but the purpose of that investigation was entirely different from the one proposed by the resolution of the Senator from South Carolina; it had an entirely different object, and its scope was of an entirely different character. I take it that the Senator has not very much confidence in these governmental agencies which we have been supporting here for so many years. If he desires an investigation of the Census Bureau, or an investigation of the Bureau of Markets, or an investigation of the Agricultural Department, that is another matter.

The Senator suggests that the Committee on Agriculture could call the representatives of the Department of Agriculture before it and ask them where they got their information. It can do that without adopting the resolution, and that is what ought to be done. Instead of coming in here and asking authority on the part of the Senate to make a nation-wide investigation to ascertain the amount of wheat and the amount of cotton on hand, we ought to let the Committee on Agriculture call in the representatives of the department and ask them how they got their information, where they got it, and whether or not it is reliable. Then would come the time to determine, if the committee was not satisfied with the sources of information or the manner in which it was gathered, whether or not it wanted to make an independent investigation itself.

Mr. President, I think that is all that I care to say. It looks to me as though the resolution proposes an unnecessary investigation, that it will be a very expensive one, and that when the information is obtained it will not be of any value.

Let me add a word further. Suppose the committee should report to-morrow that there are 100,000,000 bushels of wheat on hand in this country, what value would that be in a week from now, or two weeks from now, or a month from now? Suppose it should report in a month from now that there is so much cotton on hand at that time, what value would that be in a month from that time or in two months from that time? What value would such information be to the man who raised wheat or cotton last year, and what value would it be to the man who will have cotton or wheat next October?

So, Mr. President, I can see nothing in the adoption of the resolution but expense to the Government of the United States, and then a further club in the hands of the speculator to manipulate the markets in these products when the committee's report shall be filed.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from Washington does not understand the situation. I do not believe he would oppose this resolution if he did. There are so many conflicting reports and rumors as to the real cotton supply of the United States that they are injuriously affecting the price.

The Senator wants to know how we go about getting these statistics. I want to say to him that there are nearly a thousand of these agents regularly employed in the cotton-growing States to report the amount of cotton ginned and on hand at the factories and warehouses. This committee can work through these men, but there is no fund that could pay them for this small amount of extra work, because this is out of the season for that; and it would not take much. It would not take much to employ the same agents in the wheat-growing States to give that information. I submit to the Senator that when this report was made it would set at rest all of these conflicting rumors, because here would be a specific investigation of the subject, and the truth would be ascertained.

I want to read a resolution passed at a bankers' convention in the greatest cotton-growing State in the Union, and I call the attention of the Senator from Washington to it:

> Whereas there are many conflicting reports of the amount, kind, and quality of cotton carried over each year, called "surplus," and it is very vital to the South to know the exact amount of such carry-over and the quality of it: Therefore be it
> Resolved by the Fifth District Bankers' Association of Texas, now in session, That we most heartily indorse the action of Senators E. D. SMITH of South Carolina and J. THOMAS HEFLIN of Alabama in their efforts to have the National Government find the amount, kind, and quality of cotton on hand of American production, and that we urge our Senators and Congressmen and those of the entire South to support the efforts of Senators SMITH and HEFLIN in this important move.

This resolution was unanimously adopted by this convention of bankers in the State of Texas. It means a great deal to us, Mr. President. I do not think it would cost at the outside over $20,000, perhaps not half that amount, and I submit that it would be of value in this regard:

We know how much cotton of the American crop is consumed each year, and if these statistics give us the truth we will know how much of that cotton is now on hand. A great many linters were bought by the Government for powder-manufacturing purposes during the war. They are on hand. We charge that they are being counted in the cotton supply, and they are not spinnable. We charge that a vast deal of unspinnable cotton is being counted in the cotton supply, and it ought not to be. These agents of the Government can speedily ascertain the truth, and it will be of value to some thirty-odd millions of people in the cotton-growing States, and it will be of value to the people in the wheat-growing States to know the absolute truth.

I hope, therefore, the Senator will not oppose this resolution. I voted very cheerfully this morning to appropriate $5,000,000 to go to the rescue of the drought-stricken farmers of the Northwest, and I do not think the Senator from the State of Washington ought to oppose the expenditure of a few thousand dollars to get this valuable information for the farmers of the South and the great West. I trust, therefore, that he will withdraw his opposition.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if there were no other means of getting the information provided for in this resolution, I should not oppose it; but the resolution calls for a duplication of work which is confided to another department of the Government—the Bureau of Markets of the Department of Agriculture.

It is only necessary for me to call attention to the present appropriation bill to show that, and I am sure that the language is exactly the language of the last Agricultural appropriation bill. I read from page 74, under the head of "General expenses, Bureau of Markets," and not alone the "Bureau of Markets" but the "Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates":

> For collecting, publishing, and distributing, by telegraph, mail, or otherwise, timely information on the market supply and demand, commercial movement, location, disposition, quality, condition, and market prices of live stock, meats, fish, and animal products, dairy and poultry products, fruits and vegetables, peanuts and their products, grain, hay, feeds, and seeds, and other agricultural products.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is for the next crop, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. STERLING. The appropriation for that one item is $300,160. Now, let me call attention to this, which is really more pertinent to the resolution than what I have read. I read from page 76:

> For collecting, compiling, abstracting, analyzing, summarizing, interpreting, and publishing data relating to agriculture, including crop and live-stock estimates, acreage, yield, grades, stocks, and value of farm crops, and numbers, grades, and value of live stock and live-stock products—

And so forth. An appropriation of $350,000 for this purpose is carried in the bill. Here is a total of three-quarters of a million dollars for the very purposes provided for in this resolution.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is to provide for the next crop, while this is for cotton that has been accumulated heretofore. We want to find out all that is on hand of the old crop.

Mr. STERLING. The Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates is still functioning, I suppose, and I think if that information is not now in the possession of the Bureau of Markets you should have a resolution here that provides that the Bureau of Markets shall at once procure and furnish this information.

Mr. HEFLIN. Let me suggest to the Senator one thing that I am sure he does not know. When this cotton comes into the market they take big samples out of it; they cut through the bagging and they take out big samples. They throw them into a box or a basket. They accumulate a vast deal of this cotton, and after a while they repack it, bale it, and they call that the city crop. There are two hundred and odd thousand bales of that character taken out of the crop each year. A lot of that stuff has been accumulated, and it never has been counted by anybody, and we want to get at that.

Mr. STERLING. Can it not be counted by the Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates?

Mr. HEFLIN. It can, if you provide for it.

Mr. STERLING. If their attention were directed to it, would they do it?

Mr. HEFLIN. They can do it, probably, in the future, for the next crop; but we want this done right now.

Mr. STERLING. I should think the Bureau of Markets could do it now and as quickly or more quickly than could the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HEFLIN. We will use the present agencies to get these facts.

That is all I have to say.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, just a word.

I take it from what the Senator from Alabama says that he expects this committee to employ the 1,000 agents who have been looking after cotton in the Southern States. That simply confirms the idea I have had as to the probable expense, as to what it is absolutely necessary to do in order to get accurate information. You have got to employ these men, and you have got to employ a thousand or more men in the wheat section and all over the country in order to get the information that this resolution calls for.

Mr. HEFLIN. Each one of these agents can report on the conditions in his county in a day.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator appeals to me and suggests that I ought not to oppose this resolution because he did not oppose some bill that was passed this morning. I take it that Senators pass upon the merits of these propositions. I have acted on the different measures that have come up on the basis of what I thought was the proper thing to do. I do not ask any Senator to support any measure in which I am interested because I have supported some measure in which he may have been interested. I expect Senators on this floor to pass upon every proposition that comes up upon its merits. I am satisfied that the Senator from Alabama acts in that way with reference to these matters.

I have made no captious opposition to this resolution. I could have prevented the passage of this resolution. It could not have been called up if objection had been made. I did not see fit to object to it. I simply wanted to call these matters to the attention of the Senate. Then, if the Senate thinks the vote on this resolution should not be reconsidered, I shall accept the judgment of the Senate.

That is all I have to say about it.

Mr. HEFLIN. It is a very meritorious resolution, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate agreed to the resolution. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I call for a division.

On a division, the motion to reconsider was rejected.

STEVENS INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I do not want to tax the patience of the chairman of the committee in charge of the Agricultural appropriation bill, but I should like to ask him if he will consent to my asking unanimous consent to take up a small bill in which my State is deeply interested?

Mr. GRONNA. If it does not lead to any discussion. If it does, I hope the Senator will withdraw it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If it leads to any extended debate I will not withdraw the bill, but I will ask that it go over.

Mr. GRONNA. I mean, I hope the Senator will not ask that it be considered now if it leads to any discussion.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If it leads to any discussion I shall ask that it go over.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let the bill be read, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the number of the bill?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It is Senate bill 3695, for the relief of the Stevens Institute of Technology, of Hoboken, N. J.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3695) for the relief of the Stevens Institute of Technology, of Hoboken, N. J., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the trustees of the Stevens Institute of Technology, of Hoboken, N. J., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $45,750, being the sum paid to the United States January 28, 1870, as a collateral inheritance tax upon the bequest which provided for the establishment and endowment of said institute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendments of the committee.

The first amendment was, on page 1, after line 9, to insert a new section as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the corporations, associations, societies, or individuals as trustees or executors, such sums of money as have been paid by them as taxes upon bequests or legacies for uses of a religious, charitable, or educational character under the provisions of section 111 of the act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government and to pay interest on the public debt," approved July 1, 1862, and its amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, section 2 is an amendment that the committee has proposed to this bill. I do not object at all to the provisions of the bill as introduced, but I do object to this broad provision, not knowing what it is going to involve or where it is going to lead; and unless it is withdrawn, I shall object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment being rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I have no objection to the consideration and passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee has also reported an amendment to the title, which, in view of the rejection of the other committee amendment, should be rejected. Without objection, that will be done.

STANDING ROCK INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have been requested to ask unanimous consent to take up the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 346) extending the time for payment of purchase money on homestead entries in the former Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in the States of North and South Dakota. I do not want to take up the time of the Senate to explain it other than to say that it is simply an emergency matter, recommended by the department, and the Senators from North and South Dakota are deeply interested in it. It ought to pass before the 4th of March.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have no objection to the joint resolution, but are we not going to have a calendar day some time?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; we are.

Mr. BORAH. Then what is the use of picking out certain bills and passing them? I think I shall object, because that will give us an assurance that the Senator from Utah will see that there is a calendar day before the session closes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

REFERENCE OF ARMY NOMINATIONS.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I have just consulted with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], and he has kindly consented, that I may make the unanimous-consent request which I am about to present.

Since my request the other day another batch of Army nominations has been sent to the Senate. The nominations affect officers from the grade of second lieutenant to colonel, inclusive, and involve a certain number of promotions, some transfers from one branch of the service to the other, and some appointments to the Regular Army. Nothing affecting general officers is involved in the request I am about to make. I ask unanimous consent that, as in open executive session, the nominations which I have described be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the nominations are so referred.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask now that the Agricultural appropriation bill be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15812) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, has it been agreed that the committee amendments shall be considered first?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, in the item for salaries, office of the Secretary of Agriculture, on page 2, line 6, before the word "solicitor," to strike out "director of regulatory work, $5,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 6, to reduce the appropriation for salaries, office of the Secretary of Agriculture, from "$367,560" to "$362,560."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 10, to decrease the total appropriation for the office of the Secretary of Agriculture from "$467,560" to "$462,560."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 11, to insert:

For investigations, observations, and reports, forecasts, warnings, and advices for the protection of horticultural interests from frost damage, $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the amendments in lines 20 and 21, changing the totals, may go over, because I have an amendment to offer on lines 3 and 4, page 7, which will change the totals if that amendment is agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments changing the totals in lines 20 and 21 will, without objection, be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 11, before the word "shall," to strike out "$978,000" and insert "$978,800," so as to read:

For investigating the disease of tuberculosis of animals, for its control and eradication, for the tuberculin testing of animals, and for researches concerning the cause of the disease, its modes of spread, and methods of treatment and prevention, including demonstrations, the formation of organizations, and such other means as may be necessary, either independently or in cooperation with farmers, associations, State, Territory, or county authorities, $1,978,800, of which $978,800 shall be set aside for administrative and operating expenses and $1,000,000 for the payment of indemnities.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, beginning in line 4, to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That of the sum thus appropriated $8,000 is hereby made immediately available for the erection of necessary buildings at the United States sheep experiment station in Clark County, Idaho, to furnish facilities for the investigation of problems pertaining to the sheep and wool industry on the farms and ranges of the Western States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for the Bureau of Plant Industry, on page 16, line 7, after the numerals "$3,000," to insert "one administrative assistant in seed and plant distribution, $3,000."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would like to know from the chairman what need there is for that official. I note that the committee has stricken out the item for congressional seed distribution, and I am very glad of it. I hope they will be able to keep it out and that the bill will be enacted into law without the item. It seems to me that if that is done there will be less need for an administrative assistant in seed and plant distribution.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that this item was estimated for to take care of one director, Mr. Jones. Even if the congressional seed distribution item is kept out of the bill, which we hope will be the case, there will still be plenty of work for this man, because the Department of Agriculture collects rare and valuable seeds which must be distributed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This man is there now, is he not?

Mr. GRONNA. The House struck out the provision entirely.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But Mr. Jones has been there for years. This is merely a proposition to increase his salary, is it not?

Mr. GRONNA. No; that is not the proposition. The House struck out the whole provision. So unless we incorporate this amendment in the bill, we shall have no one to do that particular work. It does increase his salary from $2,500 to $3,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought that was exactly the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. No; that is not altogether the purpose, because in the House the whole provision was stricken out. Whether we increase the salary from $2,500 to $3,000 or not we must have the language in the bill. If the Senator objects to the amount, $3,000, of course that is for the Senate to decide. It was estimated for by the department at $3,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is in order; I understand that. There is a provision in the bill for assistant to the chief, $3,000. This is for another assistant.

Mr. GRONNA. It is not a new provision.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It involves the question of an increase in salary. That is really the matter involved?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. His salary at the present time is $2,500?

Mr. GRONNA. It is.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will not oppose the amendment if the Senate will make it $2,500. It may be that he ought to have $3,000, but until we bring about a reclassification of salaries, when we raise the salary of one man here and another man there, we simply increase the inequalities about which there has been so much complaint.

Mr. GRONNA. Will not the Senator let it go to conference?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It will go to conference anyhow, if it is put in at $2,500.

Mr. GRONNA. Very well.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then I ask that the amount be changed from three thousand to twenty-five hundred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 16, line 8, it is proposed to amend the committee amendment by striking out "$3,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,500."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to say that I have met Mr. Jones. He is a very fine man, and a very good man in the position he fills; and the only reason why I make this objection is simply because we increase the inequalities by raising salaries here and there. I want to see Congress bring about a reclassification of salaries, and correct the inequalities which everyone admits exist.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Before the question is put, may I inquire of the chairman of the committee if this relates to the salary provided for J. E. Jones, the gentleman who has had charge of the distribution of seed?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; that is the item.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the House struck the item entirely out, because they expected there would be no distribution of seed for the coming year, and the Senate committee put the provision back in.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Even without putting the provision back for seed distribution, I think we would need this man.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator knows that we will have seeds to distribute, but we will not have what we call the congressional seed distribution.

Mr. SMOOT. We have had those rare seeds in the bill for years and years, and Mr. Jones has attended to that; but now, when the congressional distribution of seeds is to be taken out of the bill, he is to be given an increase in salary.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I think the reason why the Agricultural Committee of the Senate recommended this increase for Mr. Jones was because those of us who have come in contact with him have found him to be certainly one of the most efficient Government employees in every respect, prompt, accurate, obliging, and, just as far as is legitimate, he would meet the requirements of a Senator with a zeal and an industry that were refreshing by the side of some of the treatment we get when we desire to have things done through the officials we have appointed to do those things. I think the committee recommended that his salary be raised in recognition of those very traits; and even if some one else must suffer, I think Mr. Jones has demonstrated the fact that he is well worthy to receive a salary of $3,000 if we are going to have anyone to look after the work he has been engaged in so long and so efficiently in that department. At the proper time I shall move that the salary shall be raised from the $2,500 now agreed upon to $3,000. What is the status of it now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. SMOOT. If we are going to have a vote upon it, I do not want a vote taken with so few Senators in the Chamber.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. So far as that is concerned, I am not trying to take advantage of anyone. I have simply made my statement, and if the Senator thinks that the expression of the Senate could not be gained now we can just pass over this item and it can be brought up when there are more Senators present.

Mr. SMOOT. That will be all right. I understand we are to take a recess in a few moments, anyhow.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask that this particular item may be passed over for future action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as amended will be passed over, together with the total in line 7 on page 17.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 3, after the word "survey," to strike out "$62,020" and insert "$72,000: Provided, That $10,000 of this amount shall be used for research in brown-rot and kindred diseases of peach trees," so as to read:

For investigations of plant diseases and pathological collections, including the maintenance of a plant-disease survey, $72,000: Provided, That $10,000 of this amount shall be used for research in brown-rot and kindred diseases of peach trees.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 17, to increase the appropriation for eradication or control of the white-pine blister rust, etc., from "$100,000" to "$214,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 2, to increase the appropriation for investigation of diseases of cotton, potatoes, truck crops, forage crops, drug and related plants, from "$95,400" to "$100,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 5, to increase the appropriation for investigating the physiology of crop plants and for testing and breeding varieties thereof from "$51,860" to "$56,860."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 12, to reduce the appropriation for soil-bacteriology and plant-nutrition investigations, etc., from "$50,000" to "$40,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 23, after the word "production," to strike out "$359,705" and insert "$391,705," so as to read:

For the investigation and improvement of cereals and methods of cereal production, and the study of cereal diseases, and for the investigation of the cultivation and breeding of flax for seed purposes, including a study of flax diseases, and for the investigation and improvement of broom corn and methods of broom-corn production, $391,705.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 4, to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That not less than $32,000 shall be used for investigating the wheat scab or blight.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 13, before the word "plant," to insert "several States and the"; in line 14, before the word "investigation," to insert "including"; and in the same line, after the word "investigation" to strike out "and control authorities of the several States," so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the existence in the United States of flag smut of wheat, take-all, helminthosporium, and other destructive soil and seed-infecting diseases of wheat and of other cereals, there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $30,000, to be used in cooperation with the several States and the plant disease survey, including investigation to prevent the further spread of and to eradicate or control these diseases.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 18, to increase the appropriation for investigation and improvement of tobacco and the methods of tobacco production and handling from "$32,000" to "$41,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 24, after the word "seed," to strike out "$94,115" and insert: "$100,000: Pro- vided, That of this amount $7,000 shall be immediately available for the purpose of constructing a special greenhouse for sugar-cane investigations to be located on the Arlington Farm, Virginia," so as to read:

For sugar-plant investigations, including studies of diseases and the improvement of sugar beets and sugar-beet seed, $100,000: Provided, That of this amount $7,000 shall be immediately available for the purpose of constructing a special greenhouse for sugar-cane investigations to be located on the Arlington Farm, Virginia.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to ask what is hoped to be attained by that investigation in a greenhouse here at Arlington?

Mr. RANSDELL. I will state to the Senator that the mosaic disease is said to be very injurious to sugar cane in Porto Rico and all over the South, especially in the State of Georgia, where a great deal of cane is grown for sirup purposes. The Department of Agriculture is very anxious to conduct an investigation with reference to some insects that are exceedingly dangerous. It was at first suggested that the greenhouse be located in Louisiana. I will say in this connection that we have at Baton Rouge a very fine chemical laboratory. We think it is the finest in the world. Students come from all over the world to study sugar chemistry at our State university. But we did not want this establishment put there, because of the danger of the same thing that happened when the gypsy moth was brought over by some scientists to Massachusetts and escaped through the window and did millions of dollars' worth of damage to the trees. We want the insects very carefully guarded. We want these things to be experimented on in a climate where, if they do escape, they can not do any harm.

Mr. JONES of Washington. How does the Senator know that this is that kind of a climate?

Mr. RANSDELL. The Agricultural Department has said so.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Where do they get their information, if they have not had these insects around here?

Mr. RANSDELL. I can not tell where they get it. They do not give me all the information they have, but they assure us it will do no harm.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the main thing is that they want $7,000 for a building over there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee. Without objection it is agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is not agreed to without objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the chairman of the committee how long he expects to ask us to remain in session this evening?

Mr. GRONNA. I had hoped that we could go on for 10 or 15 minutes longer.

Mr. BORAH. I do not desire to interfere with the progress of legislation, especially when it is an appropriation bill, but I do not want to take up the forestry service or any part of it this evening, because I have some matters of information with reference to which I have been in communication with the department and about which I wish to ascertain certain facts before any steps are taken.

Mr. GRONNA. I suggest that we go on until we reach those items, and then take a recess.

Mr. BORAH. That will be agreeable to me.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 23, line 7, to increase the appropriation for investigation and improvement of methods of crop production under subhumid, semiarid, or dry land conditions from "$159,000" to "$169,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 2, to increase the appropriation for the investigation, improvement, encouragement, and determination of the adaptability to different soils and climatic conditions of pecans, almonds, etc., from "$20,000" to "$30,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 8, before the word "marketing," to insert the word "transportation," so as to read:

For the investigation and improvement of fruits, and the method of fruit growing, harvesting, and, in cooperation with the Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates, studies of the behavior of fruits during the processes of transportation, marketing, and while in commercial storage, $83,200.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that is an innovation and I am wondering whether we ought to allow it.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] can explain the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. The question of an investigation of fruit while in process of transportation is entirely an innovation in our legislation.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, it was thought that in the study of the behavior of fruit it was just as well to consider it while in transit as while in storage. It occurred to me from my small knowledge of the subject that a real investigation of the habits of fruit and its conduct during storage could well be considered in connection with the matter of transportation. For instance, in the West after the fruit leaves cold storage the change which occurs in climatic conditions frequently develops diseases in the fruit that cause the destruction of great quantities. I thought, as long as the department was considering the diseases that occur in the process of storage, it might as well include transportation. That is the reason why I asked to include the word "transportation," so as to take in the whole scheme of investigation of the behavior of fruit and vegetables and without increasing the amount of the appropriation whatsoever.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, now it will not increase the appropriation; but do I understand that the Senator wants a representative from the Agricultural Department to go along in the fruit car where the fruit is located and study the fruit en route?

Mr. MCNARY. That is not necessary at all, as anyone conversant with the shipment of fruit will know. The fruit is put in a precooling place and then put in the refrigerator cars. Passing the high altitudes along the Cascade and Rocky Mountains, it will develop certain diseases when it reaches Chicago. It is then compared with the condition of the fruit when it left at the other end. There is no intention of having an officer ride with the fruit at the expense of the Government. It simply makes the whole idea complete.

Mr. SMOOT. It seems to me the wording of the amendment is broad enough to do that without the word "transportation." It makes no difference how the disease attacks the fruit or where, they can investigate it. I do not see why the Senator wants to investigate the fruit during the process of transportation. It seems to me perfectly useless.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it not true that under the old language the department really might have the authority, except that it is not made plain, because the word "marketing" is used? The Senator from Oregon wants to make it plain. It was fairly well considered by the committee, and we thought it would do no harm to make it perfectly plain that the Bureau of Markets should investigate the behavior of fruit from the time it was put into the precooling place until it reached the market. Of course, that might be done only in one instance out of a hundred.

Mr. SMOOT. It says here that the investigation is to be of the behavior of fruit during the "processes of transportation."

Mr. MCNARY. It reads, "while in the processes of transportation." The effect is evident from its condittion when it reaches the point of destination. It does not require a Government agent to follow along and keep in daily touch with the fruit. A reasonable interpretation should be given, and I think would be given by anyone familiar with the subject.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not see how that could be possible while the investigation was required during the processes of transportation. The only way that could be investigated would be while the fruit was in transportation. That is the way I read it. I do not see how any other construction could be put upon the language.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator from Oregon made it clear to the committee that his object, as I understood, was that when the fruit arrives at the point of destination from the point of shipment, upon its arrival it could then be ascertained what was the effect of the transportation on the fruit, and in order to obtain that we put in the word "transportation," so that they might immediately upon its arrival investigate just how it was affected.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what the Senator said; but I am reading the language just as it is and in the way the department will have to construe it.

Mr. MCNARY. I might give another concrete illustration which I thought would occur to the Senator from Utah: We on the Pacific coast are trying to employ to advantage the use of the Panama Canal. The fruit when it leaves the coast, the congenial climate of Oregon and Washington and the other Northwestern States, goes through a humid atmosphere. The fruit takes on a certain fungus growth and certain fungi will attach to it, whether it be in cans, dried, desiccated, dehydrated, or in original hard and ripe color. When the fruit reaches its destination at Baltimore or New York an inspection is made to ascertain what has occurred to the fruit in whatever form it may have been shipped, and a report is made. Some scheme may be devised by which an improvement can be made in the handling of the fruit while in transportation. It requires no additional money. It is simply a study that will help the fruit men in getting their fruit to market in the most tasteful condition.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there is any question that the wording of the provision as it passed the House would accomplish that very object. What I am looking at is the wording as it will be if the bill becomes a law in this form. It seems quite inconsistent to me. If I were the Secretary of Agriculture and the bill should pass as it is, the only way I could construe it would be that investigations as to the behavior of fruit must be made, as this says, during the processes of transportation. That investigation can not be made unless it is made during transportation.

Mr. McNARY. "While in the processes of transportation."

Mr. SMOOT. No; it says "during the processes of transportation."

Mr. McNARY. In what line?

Mr. SMOOT. In line 7, page 24.

Mr. McNARY. I was looking at that part of the line where it says "while." I am not particular. My idea is to look at the whole matter from the standpoint of the desire to accomplish that which we intend, namely, the preservation of the fruit.

Mr. SMOOT. I am in sympathy with the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. If the distinguished Senator from Utah can word it better than the committee, and perhaps he can, I shall be very willing, so far as I am concerned, to accept that which he would have inserted in the clause.

Mr. SMOOT. What I say is that if the amendment is agreed to, I can not see how the Secretary of Agriculture is going to carry it out unless he has men following the fruit during its transportation, and the Senator does not want that.

Mr. McNARY. Certainly not, and that is what he would not do.

Mr. SMOOT. But that is exactly what the bill would require. It seems to me, from what the Senator desires to accomplish, that the wording of the provision as it passed the House will accomplish it.

Mr. McNARY. There was this thought at the time. I was afraid that a limited definition might be given to the term "marketing." I think the term "marketing" means from the time the fruit leaves the producer until it reaches the final consumer, but to make it certain to cover this one particular point to which the department has not given attention, I wanted to include the word "transportation."

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that the word "marketing" includes not only the transportation, but the handling of the fruit to put it on the railroad.

Mr. McNARY. That is true.

Mr. SMOOT. Therefore it seems to me the amendment is perfectly useless.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have in mind a way to change the wording that will perhaps please the Senators. I suggest that it be amended to read, "Studies of the behavior of fruits during the processes of marketing, and while in commercial storage, and the effect of transportation." Would that accomplish the purpose?

Mr. McNARY. That would do it.

Mr. WARREN. Take out the word "transportation" and add it after the words "commercial storage."

Mr. SMOOT. There is no objection to that.

Mr. McNARY. That is very satisfactory so far as I am concerned.

Mr. WARREN. Then I move to amend by inserting after the words "commercial storage" the words "and the effect of transportation," so that it will read:

Studies of the behavior of fruits during the processes of marketing, and while in commercial storage, and the effect of transportation.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no objection to that, Mr. President.

Mr. McNARY. That would be very satisfactory, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. WARREN. With my proposed amendment added, it would read in this way, commencing on line 7, page 24:

During the processes of marketing and while in commercial storage, also the effect of transportation.

The same transposition should also be made in lines 21 and 22, on the same page. Of course, the word "also" could be used there or not, as desired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. After the words "commercial storage," on line 8, page 24, it is proposed to insert the words, "also the effect of transportation."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 24, line 16, to decrease the appropriation for cultivation and care for the gardens and grounds of the Department of Agriculture, etc., from "$20,000" to "$15,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 21, before the word "marketing," to insert "transportation," so as to read:

For horticultural investigations, including the study of producing and harvesting truck and related crops, including potatoes, and, in cooperation with the Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates, studies of the behavior of vegetables while in the processes of transportation, marketing, and in commercial storage, and the study of landscape and vegetable gardening, floriculture, and related subjects, $71,940.

Mr. WARREN. I suggest the same amendment to that amendment that was made in line 7, page 24, in the item "for the investigation and improvement of fruits," and so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 24, line 22, after the words "commercial storage," it is proposed to insert "also the effect of transportation."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, at the top of page 26, to strike out—

Purchase and distribution of valuable seeds: For purchase, propagation, testing, and congressional distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants; all necessary office fixtures and supplies, fuel, transportation, paper, twine, gum, postal cards, gas, electric current, rent outside of the District of Columbia, official traveling expenses, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same; for repairs and the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $360,000. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to expend the said sum, as nearly as practicable, in the purchase, testing, and distribution of such valuable seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, the best he can obtain at public or private sale, and such as shall be suitable for the respective localities to which the same are to be apportioned, and in which same are to be distributed as hereinafter stated, and such seeds so purchased shall include a variety of vegetable and flower seeds suitable for planting and culture in the various sections of the United States: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture, after due advertisement and on competitive bids, is authorized to award the contract for the supplying of printed packets and envelopes and the packeting, assembling, and mailing of the seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, or any part thereof, for a period of not more than five years nor less than one year, if by such action he can best protect the interests of the United States. An equal proportion of five-sixths of all seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall, upon their request, after due notification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the allotment to their respective districts is ready for distribution, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents, or mailed by the department upon the receipt of their addressed franks, in packages of such weight as the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General may jointly determine: Provided, however, That upon each envelope or wrapper containing packages of seeds the contents thereof shall be plainly indicated, and the Secretary shall not distribute to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate seeds entirely unfit for the climate and locality he represents, but shall distribute the same so that each Member may have seeds of equal value, as near as may be, and the best adapted to the locality he represents: Provided also, That the seeds allotted to Senators and Representatives for distribution in the districts embraced within the twenty-fifth and thirty-fourth parallels of latitude shall be ready for delivery not later than the 10th of January: Provided also, That any portion of the allotments to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress remaining uncalled for on the 1st day of April shall be distributed by the Secretary of Agriculture, giving preference to those persons whose names and addresses have been furnished by Senators and Representatives in Congress and who have not before during the same session been supplied by the department: And provided also, That the Secretary shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased, and the date of purchase; but nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from sending seeds to those who apply for the same. And the amount herein appropriated shall not be diverted or used for any other purpose but for the purchase, testing, propagation, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, mulberry and other rare and valuable trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Before the amendment is acted upon I desire to offer an amendment to a part of the amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. SHEPPARD. Let me state my amendment, then I shall not have any objection to yielding.

Mr. GRONNA. I was going to ask that this amendment go over to-night.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I understood the Chair to put the question on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that the amendment go over, and I shall move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Then the committee amendment will come up for consideration the first thing to-morrow morning?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the understanding.

Mr. KENYON. Why can not the Senator from Texas state his amendment to-night, so that we may know what it is?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to move to amend the portion proposed to be stricken out by adding the words "the Resident Commissioner of Porto Rico," after the word "Congress," in line 8, on page 27, in order, if the seed distribution shall be provided for, that the Resident Commissioner of Porto Rico may share in it just as the Delegates from Hawaii and the Philippine Islands are now allowed to share in it.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from Texas that I do not think there will be any objection to his amendment. There will not be any, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. GRONNA. I will withhold the motion.

W. C. STEWART.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of two bills on the calendar. They are a couple of small claims for reimbursement of the men who are named in the two bills on account of salaries previously earned for which no appropriation was made. They are very meritorious. I first ask for the consideration of Order of Business 767, being House bill 11945.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11945) for the relief of W. C. Stewart. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $285 to W. C. Stewart, an assistant engineer, working under the direction and supervision of the Department of State on the International Boundary Commission between the United States and Mexico, the payment being for services rendered as such assistant engineer for the months of March and April, 1915.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY P. CORBIN.

Mr. THOMAS. I now ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Order of Business 768, being House bill 12005.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12005) for the relief of Henry P. Corbin. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $1,073.30 to Henry P. Corbin, a consulting engineer, working under the direction and supervision of the Department of State on the International Boundary Commission between the United States and Mexico, the payment being for services rendered as such consulting engineer for the years 1914, 1915, and 1916.

Mr. SMOOT. What is the object of the bill, I will ask the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. THOMAS. These are two bills, one for the relief of Henry P. Corbin and the other for the relief of W. C. Stewart, the consulting engineer and an assistant engineer of the International Boundary Commission with Mexico. The bills cover the salaries and work done by them, which has not been provided for in previous appropriation bills. The bills have been very carefully examined, and they have passed the Senate once or twice during the last two years. Finally they have come from the House of Representatives, and have been favorably reported by the Committee on Claims of the Senate. I assure the Senator from Utah that they are perfectly innocuous, to use the expression of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. SMOOT. Their passage will only take that much out of the Treasury.

Mr. THOMAS. They are bills for the payment of genuine and meritorious claims.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STANDING ROCK INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] objected to taking up Order of Business 684, House joint resolution 346, in which the Senators from North Dakota are interested. If we are not going to proceed further with the consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill, and the Senator from Idaho now has no objection to the measure I have named, I ask that it may be considered and acted upon before a recess is taken to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 346) extending the time for payment of purchase money on homestead entries in the former Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in the States of North and South Dakota, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, after line 6, to strike out the words "act of Congress approved May 29, 1908 (35 Stats., p. 460), entitled 'An act to authorize the sale and disposition of surplus or unallotted lands of the Standing Rock Indian Reservation in the States of North and South Dakota, and for other purposes,' and the," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to extend for a period of one year the time for the payment of any annual installment due, or hereafter to become due, of the purchase price for lands sold under the act of Congress approved February 14, 1913 (37 Stats., p. 675), entitled "An act to authorize the sale and disposition of surplus or unallotted lands of the Standing Rock Indian Reservation in the States of North and South Dakota, and for other purposes," and any payment so extended may annually thereafter be extended for a period of one year in the same manner.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, page 2, line 15, after the word "hereof," to insert:

And provided further, That any entryman who has resided upon and cultivated the land embraced in his entry for the period of time required by law in order to make commutation proof, may make proof, and if the same is approved further residence and cultivation will not be required.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 2, to insert:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is also hereby authorized, in his discretion, to extend for a period of one year the time for the payment of any annual installment hereafter to become due of the purchase price of lands in the Cheyenne River Indian Reservation in South Dakota and the Standing Rock Indian Reservation in the States of North Dakota and South Dakota, sold at public sale under the act of Congress approved May 29, 1908 (35 Stats., p. 460), under the same terms and on the same conditions as provided in section 1 of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution extending the time for payment of purchase money on homestead entries in the former Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in the States of North and South Dakota, and for other purposes."

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

RECESS.

Mr. GRONNA. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow, the hour of meeting to-morrow having been already fixed at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 22, 1921, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 21, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., pastor of Calvary Methodist Episcopal Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Heavenly Father, in Thy light we shall see light. Give unto us an open eye that we may follow its gleam, and may we not willingly allow it to die off of our pathway. This is the miracle of God and the ideal attainment of man. How we thank Thee. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journals of the proceedings of Saturday and Sunday were read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 14461) to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment, and had appointed Mr. COLT, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. GORE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 8038) to provide for the establishment of a branch land bank in the island of Porto Rico, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 178. An act authorizing an exchange of lands by A. A. Bruce, of La Veta, Colo.; and

H. R. 8692. An act authorizing the exchange of lands within the Montezuma National Forest in Colorado.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on February 19 they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 15130. An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8692. An act authorizing the exchange of lands within the Montezuma National Forest in Colorado; and

H. R. 178. An act authorizing an exchange of lands by A. A. Bruce, of La Veta, Colo.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 4205. An act to amend section 4, chapter 1, of title I, of an act entitled "An act making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1900, as heretofore amended by section 2 of an act entitled "An act to amend section 86 of an act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii, to provide for additional judges, and for other judicial purposes," approved March 3, 1909, and for other purposes.

IMMIGRATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill H. R. 14461, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate in reference to the bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 14461. An act to provide for the protection of citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman from Washington if he expects a meeting of the conferees to-day?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If possible, I shall try to arrange that after consultation with the gentleman.

Mr. SABATH. I will withdraw the reservation.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, or rather a parliamentary inquiry, do I understand that without making any special reservation we can have a separate vote on the Senate amendments, or if we have to give notice or make objection now?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the gentleman's inquiry.

Mr. MASON. We passed this bill and it went to the Senate and certain amendments were made in the Senate. What I wanted to know was if we would have a separate vote in the consideration of the Senate amendments. Of course, the conferees have not reported yet.

The SPEAKER. It has not gone to conference, but as the Chair understands, the Senate has reported an entirely new bill, and when the conferees' report will come back it will have to be approved by the House before it becomes a law.

Mr. MASON. I do not wish to delay the matter at all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, Mr. SIEGEL, Mr. VAILE, Mr. SABATH, and Mr. RAKER.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

The SPEAKER. To-day is suspension day——

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his personal privilege.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I think we ought to have a quorum here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point of order there is no quorum present. It is clear there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Andrews, Md.	Baer	Bland, Mo.	Brumbaugh
Ayres	Bankhead	Bowers	Burdick
Bacharach	Bell	Britten	Candler
Cantrill	Focht	McGlennon	Sanford
Carew	Gallagher	McKinley	Scully

Ellsworth	Lesher	Rowan	Yates
Emerson	Lonergan	Rubey
Flood	McCulloch	Sanders, La.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and three Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. MASON. I desire to reply to some false statements which were made in the Sun and New York Herald charging me with the violation of some of the laws of this country in regard to the transportation of public documents through the mails, and other statements which are absolutely false, to which I wish to reply.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state to the Chair what gives him his privilege?

Mr. MASON. Yes. The first is a statement by the paper that they hold no brief for Bernard M. Baruch, but I have attacked him, and that it is very dishonorable to attack a man and take advantage of my position as a Member of Congress.

I purpose to show in answer to that that I have done no dishonorable thing, but that I have pursued the course which I thought was proper to protect the revenues and the money of my country.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCLINTIC. What is the date of that alleged publication?

Mr. MASON. It was published on June 4, after I went home following the last session of Congress.

The next point is that it states:

Some 23 years ago he shipped his personal belongings by mail under the Senate postal frank.

That is the charge of the violation of the laws of this country, and I want to brand it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman. [Applause.]

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I shall be very brief if I am not interrupted, and I prefer not to be interrupted.

Mr. GARD. Do I understand that the Chair recognizes the gentleman on the second instance he has mentioned?

The SPEAKER. Not necessarily on the first.

Mr. MASON. I did not say "not necessarily on the first." I have a right to reply.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman wishes to claim privilege on the first, the Chair wishes he would be a little more specific and state the language.

Mr. MASON. The language is this:

Bernard M. Baruch's reputation as a man of integrity in the business world, an efficient war administrator of honor, and a private citizen of distinguished position is not liable to suffer from the grotesque attack of WILLIAM E. MASON, Illinois Member at large of the House of Representatives and unequaled notoriety seeker in Congress. He first says that Mr. Baruch, as chairman of the War Industries Board, "stole $50,000,000 in copper alone," and then when called upon by Mr. Baruch to submit his evidence immediately to Congress and to the Attorney General of the United States refuses to do so now, but declares that he will amend his statement to read that "you and your associates stole $200,000,000 in copper alone."

We hold no brief for Mr. Baruch, but we must say that it is a shocking thing for a Member of the House, hiding behind his Congress privileges, to make such an assault upon anybody and then decline to back it up.

I purpose to back it up by quoting from the evidence already introduced as to my being guilty of the charge of slandering anybody in my position as a Member of the House.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The only criticism in the article the gentleman read is that he took advantage of his position as a Member of Congress to make a charge and has refused to submit proof. The gentleman says he wants to rise to a question of personal privilege for the purpose of submitting proof. That is not a question of personal privilege, if the Speaker please. If that were possible, the time of this House would be taken up each day. I submit that a half dozen Members of the House are criticized each day along similar lines, and you can not treat as a question of personal privilege an expression of opinion of either newspaper or a citizen that a Member of Congress is not acting fairly in criticizing somebody from the floor who has no right to answer. And, after all, we recognize there is something in the charge that it is not fair for a Member of the House to attack a private citizen here, where he can not defend himself.

Mr. MASON. I recognize that as a rule of my life, here or anywhere else, but when a man lies about me, as this editor has done, I propose to answer the charge. If the gentleman wants to save time, he can do it, as I can finish my statement in a few minutes.

Mr. WINGO. I want to save the orderly procedure of the House regardless of time. The gentleman made a charge that Barney Baruch, by reason of his position with the Government, made $50,000,000. The newspaper says when the gentleman was called on for his proof he did not give any, but amended his charge by saying "you and your associates." The newspaper said——

Mr. MASON. I propose to show that that is a falsehood, and that I did offer the proof. I tendered to him the proof, and have it before the Graham committee, but when he asked me to take him before his own Attorney General I declined. And his statement is absolutely false, to the effect that I refused to produce the proof.

Mr. WINGO. That you refused to produce the proof?

Mr. MASON. Yes, sir. It is not true. The proof is here, and I propose to submit a brief statement by the chairman of this committee, showing that there was a corrupt conspiracy and that he was at the head of it.

Mr. WINGO. Has the gentleman sought to have him indicted?

Mr. MASON. Where? In New York?

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman said——

Mr. MASON. By the Attorney General in Washington. I have not sought to have him indicted, and I shall try to have him indicted after the 4th day of next month. He should be indicted.

Mr. WINGO. I mean a criminal indictment, not a political one.

Mr. MASON. I mean a criminal indictment, for he and his conspirators held this Government by the throat on the copper deal until they robbed and controlled the markets of this country as to copper.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman tell me before what grand jury he presented his proof?

Mr. MASON. Does not the gentleman know enough about the law that the Attorney General can procure indictments, and a private citizen has no place there?

Mr. WINGO. I have known of men indicted for Federal offenses of whom the Attorney General never heard.

Mr. MASON. The gentleman may have had a very large practice, but as a rule——

Mr. WINGO. It does not require a large practice to learn that. Any man who has studied anything about Federal procedure in the courts knows that.

Mr. MASON. I will say to the gentleman that when I want instruction in legal matters I will try to get him and pay him for his trouble.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman's age would command my respect, but I could not hope for him to accept my humble advice.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that both gentlemen are not discussing the question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes both the gentlemen were discussing the point of order.

The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] makes the point of order that what the gentleman states relative to Mr. Baruch does not come within the question of privilege. As the Chair understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], the newspaper said that he made charges and that he did not substantiate them?

Mr. MASON. Yes. That is what the paper says.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that of itself constitutes a question of personal privilege. That is newspaper criticism.

Mr. MASON. It is a newspaper lie, and I have the right to answer it and brand it as such when it reflects upon my character and standing as a Member of this House.

The SPEAKER. The decisions are quite uniform that a mere criticism by a newspaper which does not impugn the motives of a Member of Congress does not give rise to a question of privilege. Will the gentleman send the article up to the Chair once more, so that the Chair can determine?

Mr. MASON. The whole editorial, if the Chair please, should be taken together.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the gentleman is justified. Perhaps the Chair should read it in order to explain the rule, but in this same connection the gentleman from Illinois might object to the Chair reading it.

Mr. MASON. Not at all.

The SPEAKER. Here it says, "He is only living up to his own notorious reputation." [Laughter.]

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my point of order. I did not know that statement was in the article. [Laughter.]

Mr. MASON. There are a great many things you do not know. [Renewed laughter.]

It is very difficult, I say to my colleagues, to make a schedule and keep a strict bookkeeping account of the professional liar. But I purpose very briefly to answer the several and distinct lies made by the editor of this paper in his defense of Barney Baruch. He could have nothing personal against me and every one of the lies which he prints has been answered, some of them more than 20 years ago. They are dead and buried, and I have never yet found language to describe that sneaking, skulking animal that will rob the grave of a buried lie for purposes of defending his fellow scalawags who seek to rob this Government. [Laughter.]

First he says he "holds no brief for Barney Baruch." I know of no reason why he should have mentioned that. [Laughter.] Then he says:

> For in the Senate, in the House of Representatives, or anywhere, BILLY MASON, as he wants everybody to call him, was always that very sort of a joker. He was such a joker when at the close of his Senate career he shipped 20 tons of his personal belongings by mail under his Senate postal frank from Washington to his home in Waukegan, Ill.

They do not even give my home town right. They are such a bunch of liars that they can not get anything right. [Laughter.]

Now, as a matter of fact no man can or could ship his furniture by frank. No Congressman has done it in the last 50 years. I believe 75 or 80 years ago they did use to send their washing home by frank. [Laughter.]

But when this lie was originally told the man knew he was lying when he told it. It was shown to be an absolute lie from the beginning. It has been dead and buried for 20 years, and yet for purposes of defending Barney Baruch, the gentleman who contributes $83,000 to Brother Wilson's campaign fund and makes $470,000 on one little flurry in the market, in order to protect him, the man who said he had the greatest power during the war, they found it necessary to disinter these ancient and rotten lies about me that were buried when they were peddling our senatorships in the State of Illinois. The man who wrote it then knew he was lying, and the man who publishes it now knows he is lying, but they seek to get around it by saying this:

> The joke, as he saw it, was that he was credited by official Washington, by the Postal Service, and by the public with dead-beating his furniture, library, clothing, etc., home under his frank, when it turned out that he was only franking to Illinois 20 tons of his own speeches.

[Laughter.]

The statement is that official Washington thought I was sending it. Mr. Munsey seems to be prolific and progressive in the matter of originating lies, but unfortunately he is short of ammunition and seeks to disinter ancient lies that have been dead and buried for 20 years, for I never shipped an article of furniture, I never shipped a ton of my own speeches, but I am willing to confess in a moment of modesty that my speeches were sent broadcast over the United States, much to my satisfaction; but they were not sent by tons. There was not a word of truth in it, and it is republished now for the sole purpose of throwing a mean and nasty fling. And you will get it at any moment; any man on either side of this House will get it who stands where I hope to stand for two years, demanding that these thieves bring back some of the money that they have stolen from the Government, and not go unwhipped of justice.

Let me take his next lie.

He was such a joker when he permitted a Senate frank to be used by the champagne agent to send thousands of copies of champagne propaganda through the mails free, for, although the champagne man considered it to be an incomparable advertisement of his sparkling wares, it was also a "BILL" MASON speech on pure food.

The truth about it is that it has been admitted and uncontradicted for years that in my investigation of pure food I found the people who were adulterating almost everything, including wines, and those that made an honest wine bought copies or had copies of the evidence printed, showing just how they made it, and the cheap scoundrels that were advertising in the newspapers made the point that that was being sent out under congressional frank. Members of Congress and Senators sent it out not only for the purpose of showing adulterations in wine alone but for the purpose of showing adulteration of all the food that went on our tables.

I read further:

He was such a joker when he lent his picture and name to be used in a flaring patent-medicine advertisement, for he wasn't himself sick; he only wanted to promote the sale of the indorsed patent medicine to those who were sick.

I do not believe in lying. I quit it a long time ago, it was such a strain on my memory. [Laughter.] You may doubt my judgment in permitting the use of my name. My motive was all right, and I think my judgment was bad. But when he says I told what was not true, he is a liar, and he knew he was a liar when he wrote it.

He was such a joker when he incessantly, bitterly, and uproariously opposed our going to war against Germany, on the ground that he loved peace.

Well, you know whether I was joking about it. I did not agree with you gentlemen who declared war. That was my conviction then, and I stood for free speech then. After you had declared war I did all I could to help win it. I did not vote to go into it. I believed then it was a scramble to settle real estate titles between King William and King George. I have not changed my mind about it, and I have not apologized for it, and my people have returned me here twice since I took that position. After the war was declared I did as you did. I rendered all the service I could; but it is a part of the use these hired newspapers make to besmirch any man who calls attention to the robbery and the thievery that was going on during this war. He says:

He punched a hotel clerk's nose in Washington for refusing to give a room to the wife of one of his constituents.

That is a sneaking, contemptible lie, originated at that time when the legislature was Republican and the majority of them were instructed to return me to the Senate; an insult, a sly reflection, a reflection upon my family and my conduct. Every newspaper in Illinois that published any part of it retracted it, and this sneaking, snarling, groveling dog crawls in under the ground to disinter and unbury lies that have been dead and buried.

And for what purpose? For the purpose of discrediting me when I asserted that Barney Baruch, at the head of this Purchasing Board, was guilty of the greatest fraud. The evidence is here. They did get more than $200,000,000 profit in copper alone. They could have bought that copper under the law—they could have commandeered that copper as they did the soldiers of this country, as they did your boy and mine—but Barney Baruch, under the leadership of Mr. John D. Ryan, with 95 per cent of the copper producers, combined against and robbed your Government; and if I live under the incoming administration the incoming Attorney General will present the copper cases criminally or civilly or both. He will either do it or I shall endeavor to give you some good reason why. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I prefer not to be interrupted.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman has stated that he does not wish to do any injustice. The gentleman has referred to the Graham committee. I was a member of that committee and am able to state to the gentleman exactly what the proof showed of Mr. Baruch's connection with copper. Is the gentleman willing I should state it? It will be very brief.

Mr. MASON. I have heard your statement. I have the statement here. You can insert it in your own speech if you please, but not in mine. You have a perfect right to defend Mr. Baruch. I propose to state, as Mr. GRAHAM states here, what the effect of the proposition was.

Mr. GARRETT. Will not the gentleman be fairer if he states the proof and not what Mr. GRAHAM stated or what I state?

Mr. MASON. Yes; I will state the proof. I have it very clearly in my mind. The proof is that before the war was declared John D. Ryan and Barney Baruch were in Washington to arrange to sell copper to this Government. Is not that true?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes. Now, will the gentleman tell what further the proof shows——

Mr. MASON. Is that true?

Mr. GARRETT. Just a moment. The proof shows that Mr. Baruch——

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. MASON. Go ahead.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has control of the time.

Mr. GARRETT. The proof shows that Mr. Baruch did bring about an arrangement whereby there was purchased for the Navy and War Departments 45,000,000 pounds of copper, at 16¾ cents per pound, the average price for the last 10 years, when in the markets of the world and the United States copper was selling at from 26 to 33 cents a pound; and that was all he did. [Applause.]

Mr. MASON. And then they bought nearly 600,000,000 pounds, and Barney Baruch fixed the price.

Mr. BUTLER. Twenty-six cents.

Mr. MASON. At 26 cents. I will show any of Mr. Baruch's friends here on this floor—he says I should put up or shut up. If he and Mr. John D. Ryan will bring their books and waive immunity, I will enter my appearance in any suit he may bring, and I will give a bond to secure him for any judgment he can recover against me. Let them bring their books here. Let them waive immunity. You know why they have not been examined, some of you. I quote from Mr. GRAHAM's statement, which will be sufficient for this purpose, and then I will sit down.

These distinguished, patriotic producers of copper came here and made an arrangement before war was declared. Maybe you can see where some of the tips came from when Brother Baruch made four hundred thousand and odd dollars. He says he could have made $3,000,000, I think, if he had had a real tip. He came here before the war, and they brought into it not the men who should have been brought into it, but in violation of the statute they began to deal with the sales company, and that sales company represented the producers of 95 per cent of the copper of this country, and Mr. GRAHAM puts it very frankly, and I congratulate his committee on the work they have done. I congratulate every man who tried to bring to light not the incompetency in the conduct of the war. We knew what to expect when we knew what party was in control of the Government. The old men knew what was coming, but I congratulate these men who have exposed the thieving that has been going on. And let nobody come here from the city of Chicago and tell you they do not want an investigation, who seek to prove that they are soldiers because they can swear. [Laughter.] Now this is the statement, winding up Mr. GRAHAM's statement here on the floor, and he has made a fair and conservative investigation of this matter.

Mr. Chairman GRAHAM said:

So the effect of the proposition was to feed this infernal trust which had its fingers on the throat of the country and let them make such inordinate profits as were entirely unjustified by the needs of the Government. There was no necessity for it and the Government with its strong hand at the throttle could have commandeered all the copper it needed and made them furnish it at reasonable prices.

Who was the Government on copper? Barney Baruch spoke for the President. He had absolute authority and power to speak for him. He himself said he had more power than any man in the United States. To show that I was justified—I have no personal feeling, I want to get some of this money back to the taxpayers, and I think I know how it can be done—the Utah Copper Co. in 1917 made a profit of $32,000,000, which was 200 per cent of its capital stock. In 1918 they made a profit of $24,000,000, which was 150 per cent of their capital stock. In other words there was $350 they got in dividends for every $100 they had invested in stock.

The Calumet & Hecla Mining Co. in 1917 made a profit of $9,500,000, or 800 per cent of its capital stock. In 1918 they made a profit of $3,500,000, or 300 per cent of their capital stock. Here is Barney Baruch and his pals sitting at the head of the Government, fixing the price with men who controlled the copper, and to charge these prices when they could commandeer and did commandeer everything from a railroad to a ship—they let this one company make 1,100 per cent profit in two years.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Did Barney Baruch have any stock in that company?

Mr. MASON. He did not need to. He represented them; he did not represent the Government; he had the power, but he did not wield it; he turned it over to these men; he did not represent the Government of the United States. [Applause.]

The Inspiration Consolidated Copper Co. made $12,000,000, or 55 per cent, and so on. Ah, Mr. Speaker, I have only gone thus far into the examination of Mr. Baruch and the evidence to show that I was not seeking to take advantage of my position as a Member of Congress to slander any man. I hate a slanderer, and I hate a tale bearer. I have no use for them.

But I make this statement and I believe it to be true, and again I make the proposition that if Mr. Ryan and Mr. Baruch will bring their books here and waive immunity—they have not yet been fully examined, as stated by Mr. GRAHAM—and show you how they could make 1,100 per cent in two years in the way of dividends and yet claim to be in the patriotic discharge of their duties, I will give a bond to pay any judgment they get against me.

I do not know Mr. Baruch; I have no wish to know him. I do not know John D. Ryan, and I have no feeling about the matter; but when I think what we went through, what our wives went through, how they knit and sewed, and how every time you got a cablegram you said to yourself, "That is my boy that has gone," without the courage to open it; and when we were suffering and are suffering now from the effects of this war—when I think of these ghouls and cormorants that stood about waiting for Uncle Sam to go to war in order to rob him, it makes my blood boil. There is a double purpose; not only to relieve the taxpayers by compelling the men to bring back the money which they stole, but to give notice that hereafter the man who robs the United States shall not go unwhipped of justice. [Applause.]

Mr. NICHOLLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. He said that Baruch represented the copper people. I would like to know if he has any proof of that?

Mr. MASON. It was his conduct. Actions speak plainer than words. When you give my watch to your friend, you represent him and not me. Barney Baruch bore the commission from the President of the United States, but he betrayed the President and betrayed the people. His words represented the Government of the United States, but his conduct spoke loudly for the men who robbed your country. [Applause.]

Mr. NICHOLLS. I am afraid that the newspapers will accuse my colleague of making the same mistake which they accuse him of making before. I am asking in all seriousness——

Mr. MASON. The gentleman looks serious.

Mr. NICHOLLS. The gentleman from Illinois never looks serious. That is the reason they call him a joker.

Mr. MASON. What do they call you?

Mr. NICHOLLS. I do not know; but they do not call me the things that they call you.

Mr. MASON. Then the gentleman ought to be very happy. I am.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I want to ask the gentleman if, aside from what he thinks about Mr. Baruch's conduct, he has any proof that Mr. Baruch represented the copper people?

Mr. MASON. I give you proof in his conduct; that is the only way you can prove the facts in reference to any man—by his conduct. I say that he held a commission from the President of the United States, the strongest power of any one man, to fix the price of copper. Now, that is not the only one; there are other rods in pickle for your friend Baruch. I do not care what he said with his mouth; he said by his conduct that he represented the copper producers of this country. [Applause.]

THE UNANIMOUS CONSENT CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. To-day is suspension day. The Chair thinks it would be wise to notify Members of his purpose in regard to suspensions. The Chair will state that after a very brief time on the Unanimous Consent Calendar the Chair intends to recognize the gentleman in charge of the bill for incorporation of companies doing business in China, the bill to sell the Government's barges used on the Erie Canal, and also the bill of the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN] on patents. Possibly there are one or two others that will be brought up, but that is the program that the Chair has in mind. The Clerk will read the first bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. It has been suggested—and I am asking this in all seriousness, as some Members contemplate going elsewhere if a certain bill is not coming up—that possibly the packers bill may come up for consideration to-day under suspension of the rules. I am rising to ask if there is any prearrangement by which the packers bill will come up to-day?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know of any.

Mr. WINGO. Some of the friends of the bill have been told that there would be an effort made to suspend the rules. There is no such arrangement with the Speaker?

The SPEAKER. No. The Clerk will proceed with the call of the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

ARLINGTON MEMORIAL AMPHITHEATER.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8032) to provide for the erection of memorials and the entombment of bodies in the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater, in Arlington National Cemetery, Va.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, for the purpose of asking the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULD], who is in charge of the bill, and who reported it, whether this is intended to be a commission whose term will exist during the present year, or if it is to be in existence for a longer time? The bill provides that a commission shall be created and that possibly the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall submit recommendations "annually" to the President, who shall transmit the same to Congress, and so forth. I see that in my first reading of the bill I inadvertently missed the word "annually." And I was about to suggest that it might be well to place that word before the word "December," but that is covered. The next point that I wish to call to the attention of the gentleman is as to just what the commission is now to do. As the bill was originally, before lines 20 and 21 on page 2 were stricken out of section 3, provision was made that applications for authority should be submitted through the commission created by this act; that the commission should pass on these applications and then report to Congress, Congress giving the final authority. The words "applications for such authority shall be submitted in all cases through the commission created by this act" have been stricken out of the bill by the amendment proposed by the gentleman's committee, so that as it is now—and I ask the gentleman whether I am correct or not—it would seem that the commission would have little or nothing to do, because the matter is determined now finally by the Congress. In other words, that language being stricken out of section 3, which provides that no inscription, tablet, box, or other memorial shall be erected, and so forth, unless specially authorized in each case by act of Congress, in each instance there would be required affirmative action or permission by the Congress.

Mr. GOULD. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Assuming that we do create a commission, what is the commission to do?

Mr. GOULD. If the gentleman will read section 5, I think that point will be cleared up.

Mr. GARD. Section 5 provides only as to the character, design, and location of tablets, busts, or other memorials, and that they shall be subject to the approval of the commission "herein created," which shall in each case obtain the advice of the Commission of Fine Arts.

Mr. GOULD. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman will notice that section 1 directs the commission to make recommendations to Congress. While the provision that applications for such authority shall be submitted in all cases to the commission created by this act is stricken out of section 3, still the commission is required annually to submit recommendations to the President and through the President to Congress.

Mr. GARD. I understand that, but with the phrase that applications for such authority shall be submitted in all cases through the commission created by the act stricken out, how does the commission obtain any information as to what is to be placed in the amphitheater?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I apprehend that will not be difficult at all. The commission will exercise its original jurisdiction of making recommendations.

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly the commission will be better informed than anybody else in reference to deceased members of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps.

Mr. GARD. The point that I am endeavoring to get information on is, if we take out the language requiring applications to be submitted by the commission, then how does the commission obtain any evidence as to what is desired of any person or of anybody, as to placing proper inscriptions on tablets, or whatever it may be.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I assume that the reason for the amendment striking out the provision that applications for such authority shall be submitted through the commission is because that could not bind Congress in any event. There was no use of putting in a provision which will not be effective in any event. Applications may be made through the commission and probably will be made through the commission in any event.

Mr. GARD. Does not the gentleman think it would be better to retain the language stricken out in lines 20 and 21 on page 2, substituting the word "may" for the word "shall," so that these matters which are to be brought to the attention of Congress may first be brought to the attention of this commission, because I do not know how the commission is going to have information as to what it shall make recommendations for, unless the Secretary of War shall have information or the Secretary of the Navy shall have information and make those recommendations directly to Congress.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I apprehend that in most cases in reference to this matter it will be done on the recommendation of the commission without application being made to the commission.

It ought not to be required that somebody should make formal application of the commission, but the commission, knowing the situation, could naturally enough make recommendations where they thought it ought to be done without having formal applications made to them. I do not think it ought to be left where individuals should make application to the commission before they can act.

Mr. GARD. Well, section 5 provides that the commission still shall have the power of approval of the character, design, and location of these matters?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, certainly.

Mr. GARD. So it would seem to me that the question of what these inscriptions, tablets, and busts are to be in nearly all cases should be vested in the commission primarily. Of course, I do not desire to take from the Congress the power of determining it; I think it should vest in Congress always.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Practically, it would rest with the commission, but I do not think that the commission ought to be forbidden to act unless somebody has made an application to the commission. They ought to have original jurisdiction.

Mr. GARD. What is the gentleman's idea about changing the word "shall" to the word "may"?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, personally, I can see no great objection to that.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield for a question? I am addressing the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. BEE. Do I understand when this act passes no inscription shall be made or any body entombed unless Congress expressly authorizes the said entombment of the body or the special inscription that is to be made?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is the case.

Mr. BEE. That is the intention?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is the intention.

Mr. BEE. You first create a commission composed of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, to whom you intrust this work. Then in section 5 you say that before they shall do this they shall in each case obtain the advice of the Commission of Fine Arts. What is this Commission of Fine Arts?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Commission of Fine Arts is a commission appointed by the President which has jurisdiction over all matters relating to statuary inscriptions and things of that sort.

Mr. BEE. In fact, the Secretary of the Navy and Secretary of War are merely ex officio officers, and this is intrusted to the Commission of Fine Arts, because the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy can do nothing until they get the permission of the Commission of Fine Arts. Is not that right?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Here is the situation—it is perfectly plain: The original commission provided in the bill makes a recommendation to Congress for the erection of a memorial or the entombment of a deceased body. Congress provides that that shall be done. The design of the memorial or inscription is submitted, when prepared, to the Commission of Fine Arts for their approval before it is erected.

Mr. BEE. And then it must be submitted to Congress?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, Congress has already passed on it.

Mr. BEE. Then, what does section 3 mean? After the commission has written out the inscription, then it says that it shall not be erected until Congress authorizes it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman did not get what I stated. This will be the procedure: The commission recommends to Congress or to the President and that is transmitted to Congress—that the memorial shall be erected; a tablet or inscription or bust or that a body be entombed. The Congress provides that that shall be done, and if the bust is to be erected or the inscription or the memorial erected the design of that must first be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts.

Mr. BEE. Now, if the gentleman will yield—I see my distinguished friend from New York smile, and therefore I will propound this question again. Section 3—I will read it:

> That no inscription, tablet, bust, or other memorial shall be erected, nor shall any body be entombed, within the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater unless specially authorized in each case by act of the Congress.

In other words, the Commission of Fine Arts says that the body of John Smith shall be entombed. Then before the body of John Smith—I do not know where the body would be all that time—but before the body of John Smith can be entombed Congress must pass an act, the House and the Senate and the President must sign it, authorizing the entombment of the body of John Smith in this Arlington Amphitheater. Then it is not a question of procedure; it is a question of Congress acting in each individual instance, on every inscription, on every tablet, on every bust, on every memorial, on every body entombed; that the Congress of the United States must authorize by specific act, signed by the President, every one of these things to be done. Now, let me ask the gentleman: I understand the purpose of the bill, and I understand it is very meritorious, and it is to prevent caricature upon one hand or unworthy ones upon the other receiving a place in that great amphitheater. Is it possible that the Congress of the United States is not able to trust both the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, or, the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy not having time to look after it, intrust it to this Commission of Fine Arts, who are presumed to be very gifted gentlemen in this particular line—Congress having incorporated them, having created them—that Congress is afraid to intrust them with whether John Smith or Paul Jones shall be buried in Arlington Cemetery unless it specially authorized it?

Mr. GOULD. That was the view of the committee, Mr. Speaker. Based on the practice and precedents which have been followed in connection with the Committee on the Library in handling matters of this sort, it was deemed advisable to have the legislation come before the House, and then the commission, composed of the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War, with the approval and advice of the Fine Arts Commission, would then take care of the memorial as outlined in the act of Congress.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GOULD. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEE. I do not think the gentleman means to go that far. Suppose they want to buy the life of Countess du Barry or buy The Squaw Man, they must come to Congress for permission to buy such a book. How are you following the practice provided by the Library Commission?

Mr. GOULD. That is a very difficult question, Mr. Speaker. I do not know whether the gentleman is acquainted with the matter of jurisdiction of Government property.

Mr. BEE. In a way.

Mr. GOULD. For instance, there was a question up last week about the wisdom relative to statues or busts of some of the women leaders of the country, which the National Woman's Party hope to have a memorial for in the Rotunda of the Capitol. The statute puts the power of accepting such a piece of art or sculpture in the hands of the Joint Library Committee, and legally, unless a bust or piece of sculpture is accepted by the committee it may not even be brought on Government land. Following that similar procedure which has been followed here for a good many years, it was deemed advisable to have something along the line as proposed in this bill for the handling of memorials in the Arlington Amphitheater. That is the only explanation I can make.

Mr. BEE. If I understand you correctly, if this Congress chooses to pass on the question of whether John Smith shall be entombed at Arlington, of course it has the power to do so, but if necessity arises any kind of a caricature the joint committee provides could be put into the Capitol.

Mr. GOULD. I should think so.

Mr. PELL. That is absolutely so.

Mr. GOULD. I did not quite understand the gentleman.

Mr. PELL. I was saying that that is absolutely so. The Library Committee, if it does not choose to use intelligence and does choose to put in any sort of statue it wants to, can do it. That is the law as it is now. The practice is to consult the Fine Arts Commission. In this particular bill the question is not of putting groups of unknown men in the Arlington Memorial, but to select really important cases. No man should be placed there unless his case appeals to the Congress. Then it is recommended.

Mr. BEE. I am quite inclined to agree to the gentleman's viewpoint on that. Let me say that I find objectionable section 4, to the effect:

That no inscription, tablet, bust, or other memorial as herein provided for shall be erected to commemorate any person who shall not have rendered conspicuously distinguished service in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps.

In other words, the Fine Arts Commission, or the commission through the Fine Arts Commission, recommends that John Smith's body be entombed, and it then comes to the Congress of the United States to determine whether he rendered conspicuous service or not, and that raises a question of fact.

Mr. GOULD. May I suggest that any objection to the consideration of the bill might be withdrawn and that amendments might be offered which would be satisfactory?

Mr. BEE. Let me finish this further statement. Then you provide that no memorial shall be erected or any body be entombed therein until 10 years after the date of his death. What are you afraid of after a fellow is dead? I can understand not putting up a memorial to anybody alive, because he might turn into a horse thief before he dies. In other words, suppose Gen. Pershing should die to-morrow. You could not entomb him in the Arlington Amphitheater for 10 years.

Mr. GOULD. Not if this legislation passes.

Mr. BEE. And before you can entomb him, Congress must give specific authority, and those gentlemen who have repeatedly stated on the floor of the House that he was a very poor soldier would have the opportunity to fight his battles over again before the House before he is buried in Arlington.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman from New York does not mean to infer that Gen. Pershing could not be buried in the Arlington Cemetery?

Mr. GOULD. No; in this amphitheater.

Mr. BEE. I am rather disinclined to capitalize, because my capitalization days are over; but I am disinclined to agree that the private soldier who fought the battles of the Republic and carried the bullets of his enemy all of his life shall by a Fine Arts Commission and by a membership in Congress be denied the right to lie in the Nation's graveyard.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. He can be buried in Arlington Cemetery.

Mr. BEE. I do not distinguish between the cemetery and the amphitheater.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman must do so.

Mr. BEE. I do not admit that there is any more sacredness around the amphitheater than around the cemetery. No distinction should be used against a private soldier because he was not particularly distinguished.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Many a private soldier has rendered conspicuous service.

Mr. BEE. And he will never be heard of either.

Mr. FESS. I would like to have the ear of the gentleman from Texas. I think he is confused as to the purpose of the bill.

The Fine Arts Commission is going to be called upon if anything is to be done to adorn or to increase the art effects of that magnificent amphitheater, which has just been completed. That is all that the Fine Arts Commission is going to have to do with it. Congress would scarcely give its agreement or assent to some addition of art without first consulting the Fine Arts Commission. That is all I think it has to do with it.

Then, on the other hand, about the interment; that, of course, does not mean in the cemetery. That means in this amphitheater, and that becomes immediately historically significant, and it ought not to be up to the Fine Arts Commission, and never has been sought to be, but it ought to be left to the body of Congress, I think, rather than this commission, which will be made up by this act and who are temporary, you know, and more or less political. It would seem that that feature ought to be left to Congress as the proper body.

Mr. BEE. I understand the gentleman from Ohio, therefore, to contend, on the one hand, that we ought to leave in the Fine Arts Commission the question of what tablets shall be put there or else Congress becomes a committee of judges of fine arts?

Mr. FESS. The Congress would act, but it would act upon the judgment of the Fine Arts Commission.

Mr. BEE. That is, it might act upon it?

Mr. FESS. That is what we have been doing. We did it with reference to the recently authorized power plant in the city here, although we did not have to do it. I think my friend has been somewhat confused as to what has been the function of the Fine Arts Commission in this bill.

Mr. BEE. I find that the function of the Fine Arts Commission is to do nothing except to indicate to 435 Representatives and 96 Senators what they think ought to be done.

Mr. FESS. If the gentleman will yield a moment in regard to the tablets, it was generally conceded that nothing in the form of statuary should be placed in the Capitol here without consultation with the Fine Arts Commission.

Mr. BEE. Without the consent of Congress?

Mr. FESS. Congress is the final judge as to what is to go in the Rotunda. The Committee on the Library can accept it.

Mr. KING. Can the gentleman give us an idea of the activities of the Fine Arts Commission?

Mr. BEE. I am anxious to find out something about that, because we create them and then by this act cut their heads off.

Mr. KING. To show the patriotism they have, they were instrumental in taking down the magnificent monument to Abraham Lincoln which was located in front of the old City Hall and placing it in cold storage, where it has been for over a year, to the disgrace of every man in this House.

Mr. BEE. Does the gentleman say that the Fine Arts Commission is responsible for that?

Mr. KING. Yes. Col. Ridley is the agent of the commission, and he backs up his opinion with the opinion of the Fine Arts Commission.

Mr. BEE. Was not Congress consulted in regard to that?

Mr. KING. Congress was not consulted. An appropriation was put through here for $2,000, but it failed to state that it was for the removal of the statue of Abraham Lincoln. It simply said "for the removal of the statue." As a consequence the statue was taken down and put into cold storage, and it has remained there for two years.

Mr. BEE. We have heard a great deal about "jokers" this morning. That was the "joker" that was put in the bill?

Mr. KING. Certainly it was a "joker," because they knew that if Congress had known it, Congress never would have stood for it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

PROMOTION OF TRADE IN CHINA.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 16043.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16043) to authorize the incorporation of companies to promote trade in China.

Mr. KING. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KING. Is this being taken up by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. Under suspension of the rules. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "China trade act, 1921."

SEC. 2. When used in this act, unless the context otherwise indicates——

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KING. This is the first reading of the bill, as I understand it?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is no other reading of the bill than this.

Mr. KING. Will it be necessary, then, to make a motion to amend at this time?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There can be no motion to amend.

Mr. KING. It can not be amended? There can not be anything done with it?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, yes.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill, as follows:

The term "person" includes individual, partnership, corporation, and association;

The term "China" means (1) China including Manchuria, Thibet, Mongolia, and any territory leased by China to any foreign Government, (2) the Crown Colony of Hongkong, and (3) Province of Macao;

The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Commerce;

The term "corporation" means a corporation chartered under the provisions of this act;

The term "Federal district court" means any Federal district court, the United States Court for China, and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia;

The term "this act" includes all lawful regulations issued thereunder by the Secretary.

SEC. 3. The Secretary shall exercise all powers and perform all duties conferred on him by this act only through such officers or agents in China as he shall by regulation designate and authorize so to act, and for this purpose the Secretary may utilize such existing or create such new offices or agencies as he deems necessary. For the purposes of this act, the action of any officer or agent so designated and authorized shall be made in the name and held to be the act of the Secretary: Provided, That upon appeal to the Secretary any such action may be affirmed, modified, or set aside by the Secretary, as he deems advisable.

SEC. 4. (a) Three or more individuals (hereinafter in this act referred to as the "incorporators"), a majority of whom are citizens of the United States, may in accordance with the provisions of this act from a corporation.

(b) Such corporation may engage in any business or enterprise conducted wholly within China and carried on with persons in China; except that the corporation—

(1) Shall not engage in any business or enterprise unlawful in the territory in which it is carried on; and

(2) Shall not engage in the business of discounting bills, notes, or other evidences of debt, of receiving deposits, of buying and selling bills of exchange, or of issuing bills, notes, or other evidences of debt, for circulation as money; nor engage in any form of banking business.

(c) The corporation shall not engage in any business or enterprise other than that authorized by subdivision (b), except that it—

(1) May purchase in the United States for transportation to China, goods, wares, or merchandise necessary to the establishment and conduct of a business or enterprise in which it is authorized to engage;

(2) May do in the United States and elsewhere any act which is incidental to the organization of the corporation or to the issue, sale, transfer, or redemption of its stocks, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness; and

(3) May do in the United States and elsewhere any act which is approved by the Secretary as necessary to the establishment and conduct of any business or enterprise in which it is authorized to engage.

SEC. 5. The incorporators shall make application for a charter and file it with the Secretary in such manner and in such form as the Secretary shall by regulation prescribe. The application shall state—

(a) The name of the proposed corporation, which shall end with the legend, "Federal Inc. U. S. A.";

(b) The location of its principal office, which shall be in China;

(c) The purpose for which it is formed and the character of the business in which it is to engage;

(d) The amount of capital stock, the designation of each class of stock and the terms upon which it is to be issued, and the number and par value of the shares of each class of stock;

(e) The duration of the corporation, which may be permanent or for a limited time;

(f) The names, addresses, and designations of directors and officers, who shall be citizens of the United States, and who are hereby authorized to manage the affairs of the corporation until their successors are elected by the stockholders in accordance with the by-laws of the corporation;

(g) The fact that an amount equal to 25 per cent of the amount of capital stock has been in good faith subscribed and actually paid in cash, personal property, tangible or intangible, or real property, and is in the custody of the individuals specified in subdivision (f); and the name and address of each such subscriber. If any part of such payment is made in property other than cash, no charter shall be issued unless the Secretary finds that the property is described and its value stated in the same manner as provided in section 9, and that such value is the fair market value and is at least equal to the difference between 25 per cent of the capital stock and the amount of cash, if any, so paid in; and

(h) The time and place of the first stockholders' meeting, which shall be not later than one year after the issuance of the charter.

SEC. 6. No corporation shall have or use a corporate name which, in the opinion of the Secretary, is likely to mislead the public. No corporation shall maintain any office, including its principal, and home and branch offices, if any, at any place other than in China.

SEC. 7. The application for a charter shall be filed with the Secretary. If the Secretary finds that the application and statements therein conform to the requirements of, and that the incorporation is authorized by, this act, he shall, upon the payment of such fee as he shall by regulation prescribe, issue a charter authorizing the incorporators to act as a body corporate. The application shall thereupon constitute the articles of incorporation, and a copy of such articles shall be made a part of the charter and printed in full thereon. The Secretary shall, upon the payment of such fee as he shall by regulation prescribe, issue as many certified copies of the articles of incorporation or of the charter, as amended, as may be desired by any interested party. The corporation shall keep a copy of the charter, as amended, at the principal office specified in its articles of incorporation. Any failure, previous to the issuance of the charter, by the incorporators, or in respect to the application for the charter, to conform to any requirement of law which is a condition precedent to such issuance, may not subsequent thereto be held to invalidate the charter or alter the legal status of any act of the corporation thereunder, except in proceedings instituted by the Secretary to revoke the charter.

SEC. 8. (a) The corporation shall be a citizen of the United States invested with the powers and subject to the conditions and restrictions of this act. A majority of the voting shares issued by the corporation shall at all times be owned by citizens of the United States.

(b) The corporation—

(1) Shall have the right of succession;

(2) May use a corporate seal and alter it at pleasure;

(3) May sue and be sued;

(4) May make contracts and incur liabilities;

(5) May acquire and hold personal property, tangible and intangible, and real estate, necessary to effect the purposes for which it is formed, and dispose of the same when no longer needed for such purposes; and

(6) May borrow money and issue its notes, coupon or registered bonds, or other evidences of debt therefor, and secure their payment by a mortgage of its property.

SEC. 9. All shares of stock shall, when issued, be paid for in cash, personal property, tangible or intangible, or real property, at not less than their par value, and when so issued shall be held to be full-paid and nonassessable; but no stock shall be issued for personal property, tangible or intangible, or real property, unless (a) a description of the property for which the stock is to be issued and a statement of the value at which the property is to be received has been filed with the Secretary in such manner and upon the payment of such fee as he shall by regulation prescribe, and (b) the Secretary finds and has certified to the corporation that such value is not more than the fair market value of the property and is at least equal to the par value of the stock issued therefor.

SEC. 10. (a) The by-laws may provide—

(1) The time, place, manner of calling, giving notice, and conduct of, and determination of a quorum for, the meetings, annual or special, of the stockholders or directors;

(2) The number, qualifications, designations, and manner of choosing and fixing the tenure of office and compensation of all directors, officers, and employees: Provided, That the number of directors shall be not less than five, and the president, treasurer, and secretary, or corresponding officers, and a majority of the directors, shall be citizens of the United States resident in China;

(3) The designation of each class of stock and the terms upon which it is issued, the number and par value of the shares of each class of stock, the manner of calling for and collecting payments upon stock subscribed for, the penalties and forfeitures for nonpayment, the preparation of certificates of stock, and the manner of recording the sale or transfer of stock and its representation at stockholders' meeting.

(b) The by-laws of the corporatiton may be amended by the stockholders at a stockholders' meeting. No by-law or amendment thereto shall be in effect until (1) the corporation files a copy thereof in such manner and form and pays such fees in respect thereto as the Secretary shall by regulation prescribe, and (2) such by-law or amendment is found and certified by the Secretary to conform to the requirements of this act.

SEC. 11. The following questions shall be determined only by the stockholders at a stockholders' meeting: (a) amendments to the articles of incorporation or by-laws; (b) authorization of the sale of the entire business of the corporation or of an independent branch of such business; (c) authorization of the voluntary dissolution of the corporation. The adoption of any such amendment or authorization shall require a vote cast by at least a majority of the voting shares and the approval of at least three-fourths of such votes cast. No such amendment or authorization shall take effect until (1) the corporation files a statement of the action in such manner and form and pays such fees in respect thereto as the Secretary shall by regulation prescribe, and (2) such amendment or authorization is found and certified by the Secretary to conform to the requirements of this act.

SEC. 12. For the purposes of this act the fiscal year of the corporation shall correspond with the calendar year ending December 31. The corporation shall make and file with the Secretary, in such manner and form and at such time as the Secretary shall by regulation prescribe, a report of its business for each such fiscal year and of its financial condition at the close of the year. The corporation shall furnish a true copy of the report to each of its stockholders.

SEC. 13. Every dividend declared by the corporation shall be derived wholly from the surplus profits of its business, to be determined in such manner as the Secretary shall by regulation prescribe.

SEC. 14. It is hereby declared to be the purposes of this act (1) to promote trade and commerce with China and create and develop markets in China for articles of commerce exported from the United States; (2) to provide a means whereby citizens of the United States may form corporations therefor (3) so to regulate such corporations as to keep them at all times in control of individuals who are citizens of the United States, and (4) to provide for the proper conduct of such corporations. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to prescribe and promulgate such regulations and issue such orders, not in conflict with the provisions of this act, as he deems necessary to carry into effect the provisions and purposes of the act, including the manner and form in which the corporation shall keep its records and accounts, and the amounts of any fees authorized to be prescribed by the Secretary. All fees paid to the Secretary shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 15. The Secretary may examine the business and affairs of the corporation whenever he has reason to believe that such business and affairs are being conducted in a manner (1) contrary to the provisions of this act or any other law or treaty of the United States, or of the articles of incorporation or by-laws of the corporation, or (2) detrimental to the business interests and good will of the United States. The cost of the examination shall be paid by the corporation upon the demand of the Secretary. If the corporation fails to pay such costs upon such demand, the Secretary may collect the amount of the costs in a civil suit against the corporation brought in the name of the United States.

SEC. 16. The Secretary may suspend the charter of a corporation whenever, with or without examination as provided in section 15, he becomes satisfied that the business and affairs of the corporation are conducted or have been conducted within the year last preceding in a manner (1) contrary to the provisions of this act or any other law or treaty of the United States, or of the articles of incorporation or by-laws of the corporation, or (2) detrimental to the business interests and good will of the United States. Such suspension shall not take effect until 10 days after the Secretary files suit in the United States Court for China for revocation of the charter of the corporation. Upon the petition of the corporation to the court at any time within 10 days after such suit is filed the court may, in its discretion, stay the suspension for such time up to its final decision in the suit as it deems advisable. The court shall revoke the charter of the corporation if it finds that the affairs and business of the corporation have been conducted in such manner.

SEC. 17. In case of the voluntary dissolution of the corporation or the suspension or revocation of its charter the directors of the corporation shall be the trustees of the creditors and stockholders of the corporation; except that upon application to the United States Court for China by any interested party, or upon the court's own motion in any proceeding pending before it, the court may, in its discretion, appoint as the trustees such individuals other than the directors as it may determine. In case of the voluntary dissolution or revocation of the charter of the corporation the trustees are invested with the powers and shall do all acts necessary to wind up the affairs of the corporation and divide among the stockholders according to their respective interests the property of the corporation remaining after all obligations against it have been settled. In case of the suspension of the charter of the corporation the trustees shall conduct the corporate affairs and are invested with the powers and subject to the liabilities and duties provided in this act for the corporation, its drectors, officers, and stockholders. For the purposes of this section the trustees may sue and be sued in the name of the corporation and shall be jointly and severally liable to the stockholders and creditors of the corporation to the extent of the property coming into their hands as trustees.

SEC. 18. For the efficient administration of the functions vested in the Secretary by this act he may requre, (a) by subpœna issued by him or under his direction the attendance of any witness and the production of any book, paper, document, or other evidence from any place at any designated place of hearing in China, or if the witness is actually resident or temporarily sojourning outside of China at any designated place of hearing withn 50 miles of the actual residence or place of sojourn of such witness, and (b) by the taking of a deposition before any designated person having power to administer oaths. In the case of a deposition the testimony shall be reduced to writing by the person taking the deposition or under his direction, and shall then be subscribed to by the deponent. The Secretary may administer oaths and examine any witness. Any witnesses summoned before the Secretary and any witness whose deposition is taken shall be paid the same fees and mileage as are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

(b) In the case of failure to comply with any subpœna or in the case of the contumacy of any witness appearing before the Secretary he may invoke the aid of any Federal district court. Such court may thereupon order the witness to comply with the requirements of such subpœna and to give evidence touching the matter in question. Any failure to obey such order may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

(c) No person shall be excused from so attending and testifying or deposing, nor from so producing any book, paper, document, or other evidence on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subject to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing, as to which in obedience to a subpœna and under oath, he may so testify or produce in evidence, documentary or otherwise. But no person shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

(d) For the efficient administration of the functions vested in the Secretary by this act, he, or any officer, employee, or agent thereof, duly authorized in writing by the Secretary, shall at all reasonable times for the purpose of examination have access to and the right to copy any book, account, record, paper, or correspondence relating to the business or affairs of a corporation. Any person who upon demand refuses any duly authorized officer, employee, or agent such right of access or copying, or hinders, obstructs, or resists him in the exercise of such right, shall be liable to a penalty of $500 for each such offense. Each day during any part of which such offense continues shall constitute a separate offense. Such penalty shall be recoverable in a civil suit brought in the name of the United States, and shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 19. The Federal district courts shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of all suits (except as provided by the act entitled "An act creating a United States Court for China and prescribing the jurisdiction thereof," approved June 30, 1906, as amended) against a corporation, or a stockholder, director, or officer thereof in his capacity as such. Suit against the corporation may be brought in the United States Court for China, or in the district in which the cause of action arose or in which the corporation has an agent and is engaged in doing business. A Federal district court having jurisdiction of such suit is authorized to direct service of process by registered mail upon the corporation. Any judgment, order, or decree rendered by the court in any such suit shall, upon the presentation of a certified copy thereof to any other Federal district court, be enforced by such other court, as the judgment, order, or decree may require.

SEC. 20. No (a) individual, partnership, or association, (b) corporation not incorporated under this act or under a law of the United States, or (c) corporation of the District of Columbia, shall engage in commerce among the several States or with foreign nations under a name in connection with which the legend "Federal Inc. U. S. A." is used. Any person violating this section shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $100 for each violation. Each day or fraction thereof during which the violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense.

SEC. 21. No stockholder, director, officer, employee, or agent, of a corporation shall make, issue, or publish any statement, written or oral, or advertisement, in any form, as to the value or as to facts affecting the value of stocks, bonds, or other evidences of debt, or as to the financial condition or transactions, or facts affecting such condition or transactions, of any corporation which has issued or is to issue stocks, bonds, or other evidences of debt, if he knows or has reason to believe that any material representation in such statement or advertisement is false. No stockholder, director, officer, employee, or agent of a corporation shall, if all the authorized capital stock thereof has not been paid in, make, issue, or publish any written statement or advertisement, in any form, stating the amount of the authorized capital stock, without also stating as the amount actually paid in a sum not greater than such amount paid in. Any person violating any provision of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.

SEC. 22. The following acts, including administrative and penal provisions thereof, shall extend to the acts, failures, and omissions of a corporation or the stockholders, directors, officers, employees, and agents thereof, in their capacity as such, even though such acts, failures, or omissions occur without the territorial jurisdiction of the United States:

(a) The act entitled "An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914;

(b) The national prohibition act of October 28, 1919; and

(c) The act entitled "An act to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes," approved December 17, 1914, as amended.

SEC. 23. (a) Section 231 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof, inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon, and adding a new subdivision to read as follows:

"(15) A corporation organized under the China trade act, 1921, but only if and with respect to any taxable year for which (a) it files a return at the time and place provided in section 241, made in the manner provided in section 239, and containing such information as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may by regulation prescribe; (b) it declares dividends during the taxable year in an amount equal to one-third of its net income the payment of which not later than 60 days after the close of such taxable year is assured in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may require; (c) it derives less than 5 per cent of its gross income from sources within the United States; and (d) the Secretary of Commerce certifies to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that during the taxable year the corporation in all respects has complied with the provisions of the China trade act, 1921, and regulations made thereunder. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury shall make all regulations necessary for the determination of such exemption, and of the liability of shareholders or members to taxation in respect to dividends paid by such corporation."

(b) Section 1 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"A corporation organized under the China trade act, 1921, shall for the purposes of this act be considered a domestic corporation."

(c) Sections 232, 233, and 234 of the revenue act of 1918 are amended by inserting in each of such sections, after the words "corporation subject to the tax imposed by section 230," the words "or organized under the China trade act, 1921."

(d) Section 240 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subdivision to read as follows:

"(d) A corporation organized under the China trade act, 1921, shall not be deemed to be affiliated with any other corporation within the meaning of this section."

(e) Section 254 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 254. That every corporation subject to the tax imposed by this title, every personal service corporation, and every corporation organized under the China trade act, 1921, shall, when required by the commissioner, render a correct return, duly verified under oath, of its payments of dividends, stating the name and address of each stockholder, the number of shares owned by him, and the amount of dividends paid to him."

SEC. 24. The Congress of the United States reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal the provisions of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). Is a second demanded?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I demand a second.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] is entitled to 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC] to 20 minutes.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this legislation at this time is brought to the attention of the House at the special request of the Secretary of Commerce and those who are interested in seeing preserved the trade which we have in China.

Several years ago this matter was brought to the attention of Congress by the President of the United States, and he urged that legislation be enacted to give to our country and its nationals the same opportunity for trade in China that other nations were then and are now enjoying. Bills were presented both to the Senate and to the House at that time; in the Senate by Senator FLETCHER and in the House by Congressman Alexander, now Secretary of Commerce. Those bills in the House went to the Committee on the Judiciary, and we have been considering them for quite a while. We took the matter up in special subcommittee and investigated it with care and to the best of our ability. We called to our assistance the officials of the Department of State and the Department of Commerce, and experts in matters of this kind, and out of it finally drafted the bill which has been presented to the House to-day.

We believe that it covers the situation, and that everything is taken care of that is needed to be done. Not only the Committee on the Judiciary itself gave to it the attention which I have indicated, but we have had referred to the Committee on Ways and Means that portion of the bill which refers to revenue. The Committee on Ways and Means, through a subcommittee and then in full committee, also gave careful attention to it and reported to the Committee on the Judiciary the provisions of the bill which are incorporated in it referring to the revenue.

In China we have a situation which does not exist in any other place in the world. We have there what is known as extraterritorial jurisdiction. The Americans there and their interests and business are governed and managed in the American courts and consular offices. Chinese laws and Chinese courts have nothing to do with our business there. It is the same also with reference to every other country whose nationals are in China. For that reason it is necessary that we have not only courts there to take care of the local conditions but that we have laws for the guidance of Americans. We have no law in this country that will permit Americans who are in China, in the extraterritorial jurisdiction, to operate as do the nationals of other countries. Great Britain has laws specially enacted for its nationals with reference to carrying on trade. In former years Americans with no other avenue have incorporated and done business under British laws. Less than two years ago the British Government issued orders in council which make it impossible now for Americans to carry on business under British law in China, for the reason that the British Government refuses to allow Americans to occupy positions of management in those companies.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I notice your bill provides that the United States courts shall have exclusive jurisdiction over there.

Mr. DYER. They do now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I am asking for information, because I really do not know. If a controversy should arise between a British subject and our Government, who would settle that, or would they take that up between the two countries?

Mr. DYER. We have mixed courts over there also.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mixed courts?

Mr. DYER. Yes. Where there is a matter between the nationals of two countries, it goes to what is known as a mixed court. Where it is exclusively American it goes to the American court.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. The Chinese courts have no jurisdiction at all?

Mr. DYER. No. We have mixed courts, composed of Chinese and Americans, where matters arise which involve Americans and Chinese; but where they involve only Americans they are tried in the American courts there.

How much time have I used, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has consumed five minutes.

Mr. DYER. Unless some one desires to ask me a question, I desire to yield some of my time to some of my colleagues on the committee and others.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKENZIE. My attention was diverted during the latter part of the gentleman's statement, but if I understand one of the purposes of the bill is to put our nationals engaged in business in China on the same footing as the nationals of France and England and other countries so far as taxation is concerned, which enters into the transaction of the business as an element of expense. That is one purpose of the bill?

Mr. DYER. Yes; that is one purpose, and the other is to provide a uniform incorporation law, so that Americans may conduct their business under such a law, and have the good name of the United States ably and well protected by every possible safeguard, and at the same time give to Americans over there every proper assistance. That is one purpose, and the other is to give them the same rights that other nationals now have with reference to exemption from taxation on business done by those companies in China. It does not exempt any American from paying his incorporation tax.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. That is what I wanted to ask about. I wish the gentleman would explain subdivision (d) of section 23 on page 18. It will save a lot of time. It gives the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the right to say who shall pay taxes and who shall not. Would there be any danger of these people being exempted from taxes?

Mr. DYER. Individuals?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. DYER. No; they can not be.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Well, the stockholders in a corporation?

Mr. DYER. Only the corporation itself.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. It would be exempted from all taxation?

Mr. DYER. Under the provisions of this section, so far as its business is in China. I will say to the gentleman that this section was prepared in connection with the experts of the Treasury Department and is designed only for the purpose of exempting these proposed companies on the business which they do in China.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I am very much interested in this thing and know very little about it. I understand that the Treasury Department has recently rendered a very radical ruling, exempting breweries, and so forth, from losses they have sustained, and I feared that there might be something in this that should be explained to the House before they voted upon it.

Mr. DYER. I am quite sure that there is not, and I will say to the gentleman that we have not only given our attention to it, but the Committee on Ways and Means as well and the Treasury Department.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. On page 4, in section 5 (a), it is provided:

> The name of the proposed corporation, which shall end with the legend, "Federal Inc., U. S. A."

Mr. DYER. I will state that the purpose of that is to make plain that American companies, those who operate under this law, may be well known and that there may be no evasion. One of the reasons for a law of this kind is due to the fact that some people, other nationals, as well as some irresponsible people from this country, have organized companies under some State law, gone over there, advertised as American companies, and by that means, although the money was furnished and controlled by foreigners, they have used that to get trade under the guise of being Americans.

Mr. McFADDEN. Does not the gentleman think that this might be abused by incorporators in the same way?

Mr. DYER. No; we provide in the bill to punish, under direction of the Secretary of Commerce, very effectively any abuses.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I would like to ask the gentleman another question. On page 15, section 20, you provide a penalty for anyone who uses the word "Federal" or "I. C.," meaning, I suppose, incorporated company.

Mr. DYER. That is what the gentleman from Pennsylvania was asking about.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. And you state that you provide a penalty for a violation which is only $100.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the gentleman will read the words at the top of the next page he will find that it is a continuing penalty.

Mr. DYER. Yes; it will mount up to considerable. We discussed that with care and attention.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. I was looking at that a minute ago. Your language is so broad—suppose a citizen of Japan were to use those words in connection with his trade, how would you punish him? You could not make it an offense. You could not punish a citizen of some other country, because you have no power to do it. If you say a citizen of this country, you can punish him in China. You can not punish a citizen of Japan or a citizen of any other nation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. All we can do is to legislate for our own people.

Mr. DYER. This provides that this will be an American corporation controlled by Americans.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I am free to say that under ordinary circumstances I am not very much impressed with the wisdom of granting Federal incorporations, because I think the matter of incorporation of business concerns is properly vested in the power of the State. While I know the general power of incorporation has been given to a number of organizations, they are almost all of a semipublic character, and there has been extreme reluctance—a proper reluctance—on the part of Congress to confer its prestige as a Federal corporation upon a business enterprise.

When I first knew this bill its came from the Department of Commerce and was advocated by its solicitor and other witnesses, some of whom were Americans residing in China. The bill was submitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, and by that committee submitted first to the Attorney General and then to the Treasury Department and then to the Department of Commerce for further opinion. After the opinion was received the bill in its then form was determined not to be reported. After that a suggestion again came from the Department of Commerce that the question of American trade in China was of such pressing importance that it viewed it as a necessity that there should be Federal incorporation to aid commercial enterprises in China.

Now, it is a singular thing, but nevertheless true, that there is no law in China which has very much to do, as a matter of fact, with corporations. The question of incorporation in China, therefore, is under different Governments. In other words, the question of incorporation in China is largely a question of the nationality of those who seek incorporation.

So it was made apparent to the Committee on the Judiciary that the American trade in China was a trade which was developed and growing and which should have encouragement by the Government of the United States. We here all know that American corporations might possibly do business in China by being incorporated under the State laws of Connecticut, or Illinois, or Pennsylvania, or any other State in the American Union. The real facts concerning this incorporation are two. The first is for the benefit of American trade. It is necessary that instead of being known as a Connecticut corporation or a Pennsylvania corporation that it be known as a corporation of the United States of America.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I will.

Mr. KING. Does it make it a Federal corporation to give it this name and insignia "United States of America"? Does that make it a Federal corporation? Is it not, as a matter of fact, a corporation of the District of Columbia, after all?

Mr. GARD. Incorporation is made by the Congress of the United States, and, of course, designation is made as a Federal corporation. Under some bills I think that the gentleman's interpretation is correct, nevertheless the idea here is that it is a benefit to the corporation to have associated with it the name of the United States of America and have its power conferred by the American Congress.

That is one of the things, and that is the first thing the committee had to consider. We finally determined that it was wise to permit the Government of the United States to incorporate in this instance for the benefit of American companies in China because there had been a great extension of American trade, and there existed the possibility of a greater extension of American trade in that great country of China. So the bill came back for the purpose of being safeguarded in the grant of corporate powers.

The bill went to a subcommittee, and the subcommittee reported to the full committee, and the full committee had its meeting, and reference was again made to the Treasury Department and to the Committee on Ways and Means, so that I think that the present bill in the effort to determine that which was proper to be given to Federal incorporation has probably been better considered than any other similar bill. I for one thought to give this opportunity to American citizens in China to advance American trade in China and with China through the medium of this Federal incorporation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, the extension of our foreign trade is recognized universally as a matter of great importance to our economic welfare. The growth of that trade in the Pacific is increasing and its importance is acknowledged. There is no country in the Orient the trade of which is of larger value to the United States than that of China. The foreign trade of the United States with China largely depends upon the activities of Americans in that country, and those activities must, of course, be carried on almost exclusively by corporations. Heretofore those corporations have been such as were organized under the laws of the respective States, and they suffered under certain handicaps familiar to everyone. One purpose of this bill is to remove those handicaps and to provide for Federal incorporation. I am sure that the urgency is such as to remove any prejudice on the part of any Member against the authorization of Federal incorporations by Congress. To give them such an incorporation, surrounded by the simple but necessary limitations provided in this bill, will greatly enlarge the opportunity of such corporations to advance American trade in China. There is another handicap from which Americans suffer, and that is in the matter of taxation. Prior to the World War the United States enjoyed only about 6 per cent of the foreign trade of China. One of the results of the war was largely to increase American trade in China. Our greatest competitor, as in the past, is Great Britain, and in former times also France and Japan. The friendliness of China to Americans and their desire to trade with us is now recognized by everyone familiar with the attitude of the Chinese people. Great Britain and the other countries relieve their corporations engaged in trade in China from domestic income and excess-profits taxes. This bill simply puts American corporations upon a parity with British corporations and other foreign corporations. This bill is essential. Everyone who has studied the internal economic condition of China, or her friendliness toward the people of the United States, the large volume of products for export, the large amount of foreign production which her people consume, will realize in a moment the importance to the people of the United States of fostering in a manner such as this bill provides an enlarged opportunity of American corporations to increase American trade with China. While this bill comes up under a motion to suspend the rules, and therefore will require a two-thirds vote, its importance is so great that I hope no Member on either side of the House will vote against it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED].

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, it is not possible to say very much in three minutes on a bill of this kind, but we all know that during this war, for the first time in our history, our country became organized upon an export basis. We have always needed foreign trade, and we need it now more than ever before. It is going to be impossible for us to sell our normal exports to Europe for years to come. We will certainly lose a large part of the business which we obtained in South America during the war. China, with a population equal to all of Europe, with its resources scarcely scratched, its industries undeveloped, offers us the greatest field for the development of our foreign trade, especially as the Chinese people are probably more friendly to us than they are to the people of any other nation of the world. There are just two things that stand in the way of the development of our trade in China. One is the fact that we have no Federal incorporation act. The Chinese people do not know what a Connecticut corporation is or a Delaware corporation or what a New York or Pennsylvania corporation is, but they do know and have confidence in the United States of America, and they are willing to do business with her under the most favorable terms at any time. There is another difficulty, and that is that our merchants in China—and they are men of the highest character and of the highest standing—are not able to do business with the Chinese on the same terms that citizens of other nations of the world do, and that is because of the matter of taxation. We have got to adjust that difference or our merchants are bound to lose the trade, because the cost of production is bound to determine in the long run. At the present time Great Britain has by far the largest share of the trade there; we have only about 10 per cent; but the Chinese are so friendly and our merchants are so aggressive and so able and so determined to capture that trade, that if we give them a fair opportunity they will certainly do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this is a most important piece of legislation now before the House, and there is but a short time in which to debate it. We are by this act undertaking to extend our foreign trade, and by this act we are establishing a great corporation, a corporation that will probably have tremendous power. I trust that the committee which has in charge this bill has seen to it that there are such limitations and restrictions thrown around it that it will not get out of hand. That has been the trouble with corporations heretofore. Our domestic corporations have begun to grow powerful, and the more power they have the harder it is to control them, and that power reaches from one end of the Nation to the other. We see that manifested now in the five great corporations of this country that control the meat supply and the food supply of the country. When they come to exercise that power in a way inimical to the producers and the consumers of the Nation, and Congress is appealed to to pass legislation to restrict those powers, you can not get the bill on the floor of Congress to restrict it, and what are some of the means they use? It is propaganda that they use. When the bill gets here and is passed by the Senate and when it comes out on this floor from a committee of the House, these packing corporations no longer stand under their own name, but they disseminate their propaganda through concerns like the chamber of commerce.

I have here a letter of February 7, written from the chamber of commerce, located in the Mills Building, by a man by the name of Defrees. Every Member of Congress gets it. He sends them to the other chambers of commerce, in which he denounces this legislation that has passed the Senate and will pass the House if but the majority leader [Mr. MONDELL] will let us have an opportunity to vote upon it.

Mr. SIMS. What chamber of commerce?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Here in this city, located in the Mills Building. Now, furthermore, I want to say to you that this man Defrees who writes this letter on June 28, 1915, had this correspondence, as shown in the Senate investigation of the packers:

> Mr. L. A. CARTON. I attended a luncheon at the Midday Club on last Wednesday, June 23, at the request of Mr. Defrees.
> Mr. John Fahey, president of the National Chamber of Commerce, was there, together with some other parties, including Mr. Forgan, Mr. Thomas Wilson (president of one of the Big Five), and quite a few others.

A new organization here in this city, the Institute of Meat Packers, are getting up and spreading propaganda and lobbying before Congress. This same man Wilson is the president of this new concern. The writer of this letter goes on to say:

> Was considerably impressed with the program which they have laid out, and if they make any requests for financial assistance, we would like to know about it.
> They maintain a bureau in Washington and evidently get a good hearing on all legislation.

This is signed "Louis F. Swift, president," and Mr. L. A. Carton was treasurer for the Swifts. This was when the Borland resolution was under consideration. Again, on July 7, 1916, there is another piece of propaganda I am talking about showing why we can not control these corporations. That is why I am appealing to this House now in reference to the new corporation you are fixing to establish. This is July 7, 1916:

Mr. F. A. White.

He is vice president of Armour Co.

We all agree that it is very important to flood the Judiciary Committee with telegrams from all over the country, and especially the districts where the Members come from, protesting against the passage of the Borland resolution—

That was the packer resolution, you will remember—on the grounds live stock selling at very satisfactory prices and any investigation will only disturb present satisfactory conditions. Please arrange a meeting this morning with Veeder and Nelson Morris.

You know who they are—packers, of course.

Get a committee to work on this promptly. Presume banks and commission men—

Have you been getting letters from banks and commission men recently? I have—feeders of cattle—

Mighty few have come.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas (reading)—

And live-stock men generally, and anyone else you can think of that will be helpful. Messages should also be sent to Congressmen as well as members of the Judiciary Committee. The Congressional Directory can give you the list of their names and where they come from. I refer to the Judiciary Committee, not the subjudiciary committee. Please get as much action as you can on this, and promptly, and have the messages sent varied in language.

They did not want all of them written in the same language. [Laughter.] This is signed "Arthur Meeker," who is vice president of Armour Co. This is in the evidence before the Senate committee in the hearings on the Borland resolution. It is this kind of rot, it is this kind of propaganda, it is this kind of power that when a corporation gets as powerful as these corporations have gotten that they control the meat supply of the people of this Nation and wield such power it seems we can not get a bill off of this calendar that is put there in due course, and we can not get a rule, and yet a rule is brought in to give $400,000,000 to the railroads; you bring in rules for insignificant matters, and yet the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is as dumb as an oyster when you make an appeal to have a rule brought in by which we can pass this law regulating packers within the next 12 or 24 hours.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I will.

Mr. McCLINTIC. What reason does the gentleman have to believe that this legislation will not be considered at this session?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Well, I have appealed to everybody I know on the Republican side of the House to whom I could appeal on that side, and they are all as dumb as oysters. I noticed that a bunch of farmers and stockmen called on the majority leader the other day—Saturday—and they were rather emphatic in their conversation in an effort to have this bill considered, and these people said they had no hope, and I presume Mr. MONDELL gave the final decree.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman use his time?
